SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art Spirit. Those who worship Thee must worship Thee in spirit and in truth. With reverence and godly fear we come before Thee and make our morning prayer. We know that we are not heard for our much speaking, for Thou dost know our needs. And yet Thou dost give to us the high privilege of prayer, and every thought born out of our communion with God is a thought that elevates our spirit and fits us for the great service of life. So we would carry with us from this sacred moment out into the duties of this day the influences of Thy grace in answer to our prayer. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FOREST RESERVES MONEYS.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 4634) apportioning the moneys received from forest reserves in each State and providing the manner in which such moneys shall be expended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire that the title of the bill shall again be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The Secretary again read the bill by title.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has no objection, I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The subject matter involved has always been dealt with by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I think that the bill ought to go to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not care to what committee the bill goes, but would like to refer it to the most appropriate committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that legislation upon this subject has been in the Agricultural appropriation bill a number of times, and I think that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is the committee to which the bill should be referred.

Mr. BRADY. I shall be satisfied with whatever assignment of the bill the presiding officer makes, but I much prefer that it should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LANE. I beg to differ with the Senator from Idaho. I understood the presiding officer to assign the bill to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game. That is a very good committee; I am chairman of it. [Laughter.] I do not see why it can not be well handled by that committee. I notice there has been a great deal of prejudice in these matters heretofore. Do I understand the bill is indorsed to be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. SMOOT. It is so indorsed.

Mr. LANE. Well, I shall not object to having it go to that committee this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment authorizing the Court of Claims to assume jurisdiction in law and in equity and moral right of the claim of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School and Junior Republic for Dependent Children, against the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LIPPITT submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

COLON FIRE CLAIMS.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 281), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to give notice of a proposed amendment to the standing rules of the Senate, which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XIX of the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following:

"SEC. 6. That the Senate may at any time, upon motion of a Senator, fix a day and hour for the final vote upon any matter pending in the Senate: Provided, That upon the motion of a Senator, sustained by one-fourth of the Members of the Senate, debate of not to exceed 48 hours shall be allowed within the time fixed for such final vote, one-half of the time for debate to be controlled by the proponents and one-half by the opponents of the pending question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice of the Senator from Oklahoma will lie over under the rule and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment reported by the committee inserting the proviso, beginning in line 22 and ending in line 25, on page 15, in order?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned last evening I was discussing some of the irregularities and inconsistencies of this new rate system which has been adopted by the Post Office Department, and I now desire to call the attention of the Senate to a few more of them. I am referring to the system of transportation which these alleged experts think is a just and equitable one.

Suppose the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], living here in Washington, should desire to send a package by parcel post to Boston. The natural thing would be, of course, for him to mail it here directed to Boston. That would cost him 83 cents, if the package weighed 20 pounds; but if he is as shrewd a financier as most New Englanders are, under this new system he would send that package to some friend in New Haven, Conn., which would cost him but 44 cents, and the friend would readdress it to Boston, which would cost 24 cents additional; 44 and 24 being 68, or 15 cents less than if he sent it direct from Washington to Boston; and the department in the meantime would have unloaded it at New Haven, sent it out to the house of the Senator's friend, and the friend would have readdressed it, and the department would have called for it and taken it to the train and on to Boston. That is the system of transportation which these experts have given us; and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] yesterday thought that it was a much wiser system than the Senate could provide.

Suppose the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is a member of the committee, should want to send a package from Washington to Detroit. This system of transportation which these experts have furnished us would enable him to send that package first to a friend in Cleveland, Ohio, which would cost him 44 cents, and then his friend in Cleveland could remail it to Detroit, and that would cost 24 cents, making a total of 68 cents for transporting it from Washington to Detroit; while if he had sent it direct and not paid Cleveland the honor of having it stop there, it would have cost him 15 cents more, or 83 cents. You can take every rate in every zone beyond the third and repeat that operation; yet we are told that we must let this alone and allow these experts who know so much about transportation to handle the question.

Take Chicago. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is an expert on rate making. He lives at Des Moines. If a mail-order house in Chicago wanted to send by parcel post a large amount of merchandise in 20-pound packages to Iowa within a radius of 150 miles of Des Moines, the natural thing would be for them to send it direct to the different towns in Iowa where their customers were; but, being business men, if they had a thousand packages they wanted to send into that region, they would send the packages first to Des Moines. That being within the third zone from Chicago, the parcel-post charge from Chicago would be 44 cents per package. Some of these packages might be bound for Omaha, so they would be remailed at Des Moines to Omaha. The charge for that would be 24 cents more, or 68 cents from Chicago, by way of Des Moines, to Omaha; while if this mail-order house had sent the packages direct from Chicago to Omaha the postage would have been 15 cents more per package, or $150 more on a thousand packages. That process could be repeated as to every one of the Iowa towns in the vicinity of Des Moines.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this comes about from the evil of the eradication of the first zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; and the charging of too low a rate in the 150-mile radius.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Postmaster General had not abolished the first zone——

Mr. BRISTOW. If he had not abolished the first zone and had established a higher rate in the second zone than in the first, it would be impossible. Senators who have given any study to rate making—and they do not have to be experts; we have here but few experts on rate making, and it does not require an expert to see the fallacy and ridiculousness of such a proposition as this. If any intelligent attention had been given by anybody to the working out of this system, that could not have happened. As I said last night, just before closing, there is one fundamental law that relates to transportation, and that is the sum of the locals must not be less than the through rate. If it is less, it invites the rehandling of freight all along the line, because money is saved by the shipper by forcing the rehandling of it. Of course there is no sense in such a proposition.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is probably as well informed as any man in the Senate on transportation matters, can see that every fundamental principle of transportation is violated by this order.

I do not see the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] present now, I regret to say; but suppose he wanted to send a package from Washington to Florence, his home in South Carolina. If he sent it direct, it would cost him 83 cents; but, being a frugal man, he would therefore first send it to Fayetteville, N. C., and there have a friend remail it on to Florence and save 15 cents by so doing, although compelling the postmaster at Fayetteville to handle it twice.

If the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who was here yesterday and evinced some interest in this discussion, wanted to send a package to Cincinnati from Washington, he could send it direct from Washington to Cincinnati for 83 cents, but he could save money by mailing it to Huntington, W. Va., and having a friend there readdress it on to Cincinnati, and in that way get it there for 68 instead of 83 cents.

As I have said before, you can repeat this operation in every zone beyond the third in the United States. If the Senate wants to approve that as the wisest system that can be devised for handling freight by mail, of course it has the opportunity of so doing by voting to sustain the department and against this amendment.

I started out—and I am going to close pretty soon now—to discuss the difference in the express rates and the parcel-post rates as established by the Postmaster General. As I said yesterday, some of us have been attacked by the press because we did not concede that Mr. Burleson had more wisdom than anybody else in the framing of the rate schedules. We have been denounced as laboring in the interests of the express companies and against the public welfare. Of course, a man in public life has to take those things; they come to all of us sooner or later, in greater or less degree. That leads me to make some comparisons between express rates and parcel-post rates.

The Interstate Commerce Commission in their recent order as to express rates divided the United States into five zones and fixed a different rate for each zone. Here [indicating] is their map. In fixing the rates, the distances, and so forth, they have followed the same rule the Post Office Department adopted in determining the distances for parcel posts; they have taken the block system.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Am I correct in understanding that the express rates as thus designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission are now in operation? I think they went into operation——

Mr. BRISTOW. I think they are in operation; I know they are in my country.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think they went into operation on the 1st of February.

Mr. BRISTOW. There is a good deal of complaint in the West, in the section that I come from and in other sections—I think probably the Senator from Wyoming will find some complaint from his State in time—of the increase in the rates.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not the long rates, but the short rates.

Mr. BRISTOW. The short rates; yes. In zone No. 1, which is composed of New York, New England, part of Pennsylvania, and Ohio and Illinois, the rate is the lowest; it is 10 cents, I think, for 50 pounds or 100 pounds per block—I have not worked it out accurately. In the South, which is zone No. 2, the rate is higher; it is 15 cents; in the Middle West it is 19 cents, almost double what it is in New England, Ohio, and Illinois; and in the Rocky Mountain region it is 23 cents per block. So it is impossible to get an exact comparison of the express rates and the parcel-post rates by zones. You can get a comparison of the rates between points, but you can not make an exact comparison, because one postal zone will run into two or three different zones or sections of the express-rate schedules or plan. So I have taken the rates to certain towns, which is the only way you can get any accurate comparison.

The express rate on 20-pound packages from New York to Newark, N. J., which is within the first postal zone, is 31 cents. The postal rate under Mr. Burleson's order is 24 cents. The cost to the Government, according to his estimate, is 8 cents. So there is, according to his estimate, a fine profit in handling that class of matter within the 50 miles. The first zone is the 50-mile zone.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. How does the Postmaster General ascertain the cost of transportation? I understand the separate stamp has been abolished, and the ordinary letter stamp may be used.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. How, without a separate stamp, can he reach accurately the cost of the parcel post?

Mr. BRISTOW. He can not. It is an estimate.

Mr. LODGE. Then we have no means of knowing accurately what the parcel post costs?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; there is not any way of telling.

Mr. LODGE. And we can not tell while we have no separate stamp?

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. LODGE. It is all jumping in the dark?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think so.

In the second zone—this is, in what was formerly the second zone, between 50 miles and 150 miles, and what ought to be the second zone now—the charges are the same for the parcel post as they are in the first zone. In that zone, from New York to Philadelphia, where the towns are located between which these rates are given, the postal rate is 24 cents and the express rate is 38 cents—a higher express rate than postal rate. I think the express companies are wise in fixing their rate higher, because I think the Government loses money in this region between the 50 and 150 miles on most of its packages; and the express companies, not being in business to lose money, fix a higher rate than the Government rate.

The region from New York to Boston is in the third zone. That is beyond 150 miles and short of 300 miles. The parcel-post rate in that region on a 20-pound package is 44 cents, while the express rate is 36 cents. That is within the first section of the express scheme.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if it will not disturb the Senator, I should like to say that I do not think I put my question quite properly. Of course the stamp determines the receipts of the Government.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean by my question to imply that it determined the cost to the Government of carriage; but, of course, if the Government does not know the receipts, it can not possibly tell what the service as a whole is costing.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true; and I did not answer the Senator's question as I should, because the department estimates the cost by taking 5 cents as the cost of picking up the package, and then multiplies the distance by 2.58 mills per pound for 50 miles, and in that way gets an estimate.

Mr. LODGE. But at the present time, as to the original cost to the Government, is it not true that they are carrying these parcel-post packages up to 50 pounds under the old contracts, both with star-route contractors and with others?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, yes.

Mr. LODGE. They are carrying them under the old contracts?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. So that we have no means of knowing what it will ultimately cost the Government?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no. There is not any possible way of finding out at present.

Mr. LODGE. Except we do know, do we not, that the star-route contractors can not possibly go on under the existing contracts and carry tons of ordinary freight?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true; and a good many of them have thrown up their jobs, and the bondsmen are filling out the contracts. I think you will find that all over the western part of the country.

Mr. LODGE. While I do not want to deflect the Senator from his argument, in that same connection the committee proposes to raise the pay of the rural carriers and make it a very handsome pay; but how are the rural carriers to carry the freight which this 50-pound limit makes on $1,200 a year?

Mr. BRISTOW. In some places they can not. It is a very grave problem. This is not a matter to be treated lightly. Take a rural carrier in the South, in Virginia, in North Carolina, and in through that section, where the roads are clay roads and bad roads at this season of the year when there is thawing, and they get very muddy. He handles his mail on horseback at this time of the year, and he can not carry many 50-pound packages on horseback. What he is to do I do not know. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has very grave fears that it will seriously interfere with the rural service in that region of the country; and I think myself that his fears are well grounded.

Mr. LODGE. I know that in my own State, which is a small State and a State of good roads, if the rural carrier there is obliged to haul freight—which is what the 50-pound limit makes now—he simply can not do it on the salary that is proposed. Instead of having a small wagon with one horse with which he could carry his mail, one bag or more, he would have to be prepared with a big team, two horses at least, and a corresponding wagon in which to carry it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we can not hear on this side of the Chamber what the Senator from Massachusetts is saying.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In a large part of the country, especially in the western country, the people are served by star routes or rural free delivery routes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mostly star routes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mostly star routes. I have no question, from a knowledge of the country, but that the adjustment that has been made or may be made by the Postmaster General in changing the weight limit, and the other changes mentioned, will absolutely destroy the star mail routes and the rural free delivery routes, or will render the payment for the service on those routes so extremely high that the deficit in the Post Office Department will be something alarming.

It is a fact that in many places freight is now being carried over these star routes at one-fifth the cost of ordinary transportation in the various localities. In my own State instances have occurred where carloads of flour have been shipped into mining camps at substantially 1 cent a pound, where the regular freight rate by team—bull team we call it, or mule team, or stage—is from 3 to 5 cents a pound. Now, there is a loss there. It must result either in breaking down the delivery outside of railroad points, or in such a deficit that we will be alarmed at it when it comes before us.

The shipment of 2 tons of beans into a mining camp resulted in clogging for a month the post offices on that route and clogging the work of the mail carrier, who had hard work to get through even with his horse, let alone his buckboard or wagon.

I have just taken on the same route another illustration. At the end of that route is what we call a tie camp, 80 or 90 miles from the railroad. A tie camp, as we all know, is a lumber camp where they get out railroad ties, and either float them down the river or haul them to the railroad for consumption. I have cut from one of the papers this item, which relates to the shipment of beans that I spoke of first:

LANDER, WYO., February 21.

Frank Welty's beans are no longer the only beans in the Dubois parcel-post pot. A more tragic thing than that famous shipment has happened to the mail carriers between Lander and the tie-camp town on the Upper Big Wind.

The first of the week a lot of tie cutters quit the McLaughlin company and hiked for the railroad towns. All owned beds and bedding—

All of us from that country know that every man working in that way has his roll of blankets that he calls his bed and bedding. There are no hotels. His home is where night overtakes him. If he is in a lumber camp he has in the bunk he is furnished with his own bed and bedding, a roll or two of blankets—

The stage company asked 5 cents a pound freight between Dubois and Lander—

I will say, knowing that country, that that is not an unreasonable rate of freight—

The "tie hacks" were hard up. They had read about the Welty bean shipment, and they began to make inquiries. They found they could send their beds by parcel post in 50-pound packages for 1 cent per pound—4 cents less than the stage freight rate—so they sewed their belongings into gunnysacks and filled the Dubois post office full to overflowing with mail matter. There may have been a few bugs in the bundles, but Uncle Sam carries small livestock at the 1-cent rate. The Dubois postmaster sprained his arm selling postage stamps.

Once again the joke is on the Fort Washakie-Dubois and the Lander-Fort Washakie star-route mail contractors—

That is the gist of this article—

They have a blanket contract to carry the mails between the points named, and they will not receive a cent extra for lugging all those beds from Dubois to Leander for those close-fisted "tie hacks."

When the Postmaster General assures us that there is at the present time a great surplus, and more revenue coming in to the mail service or the Post Office Department by reason of the parcel post, he fails to take into account the mail carriers and the mail contractors that he is forcing into bankruptcy because they are carrying all this increased mail at no increased cost to the Government; and when he comes to let his new contracts he will either have to throw up these mail routes or else he will have to let them at such figures as will permit the carrying of freight.

The apparent revenue vanishes into thin air when those things are considered. We are compelling these contractors to carry this mail for nothing, and taking the revenue and calling it a net profit on the service. Mr. President, it would be the worst thing that could happen to this country if any scheme should be evolved that would break down the star-route service in the country remote from railroads.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Assuming that the statements made by the Senator from Wyoming are correct——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My statements are correct. I am not sure as to this newspaper item, but I assume it is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. I say, assuming that—I am not informed in regard to it except as the Senator has made the statement here—what remedy has the Senator to suggest? I take it we are all interested in finding a remedy.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know that the Senator is called on to suggest a remedy. The Senator is now pointing out what he believes to be an evil that has been caused by the unlimited exercise of authority by the Postmaster General. If it should go on, and if the limit should be increased to 100 pounds, as we have had notice served on us it will be, and that before very long, I should be glad to see something put into this bill, such as is proposed in the pending amendment, to prevent that.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, right there I should like to ask the Senator if he would not be equally willing to allow a proper remedy to be applied to it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, without any question.

Mr. LANE. I should think so.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want some remedy.

Mr. LANE. It will not be hard to find.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I was making the comparison between the express rates and Mr. Burleson's parcel-post rates. I had just spoken of the third zone, and had given the rates from New York to Boston. Now I will take up the fourth zone.

Pittsburgh, Pa., is in the fourth zone from New York. The parcel-post rate from New York to Pittsburgh is 83 cents for a 20-pound package. The express rate is 46 cents. From New York to Grand Rapids, Mich., the fifth zone, Mr. Burleson's parcel-post rate is $1.22 for a 20-pound package. The express rate is 62 cents. From New York to Des Moines, Iowa, the sixth zone, the parcel-post rate is $1.61. The express rate is 82 cents, about half the amount.

I referred a short time ago to the case of a mail-order house in Chicago sending by parcel post a thousand packages to Des Moines and redistributing them from Des Moines at 24 cents a package, and saving by this process, on a thousand packages, $150. The fact is that from New York the mail-order men send parcels by express to Des Moines and redistribute them there by parcel post under the 24-cent rate, which is cheaper than the express rate.

One of the arguments the defenders of the Postmaster General make here is that we must give him the opportunity to meet express competition or the parcel post is ruined. He has the opportunity now, and this is the way he has met it. He takes the packages and delivers them within the 150-mile radius at a loss, as I demonstrated yesterday beyond any doubt, cheaper than the express companies are willing to do it, because they do not work for a loss, if they can help it, and they are letting him handle the business within the 150-mile radius; but when he gets beyond that, where there is a profit, then they undercut his rates, take the profits, and the mail-order houses use the express to the local point and distribute by parcel post. If Mr. Burleson is so anxious to meet express competition, why does he not do it now? He has the opportunity.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator; yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator succeeds in defeating this amendment, he will not have any opportunity.

Mr. BRISTOW. But he has now. Why does he not do it now? Why has he created this condition? He did it. It was not in the law before he changed it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the Senator is referring to the rates on the long hauls?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; partly, and partly on the short hauls; the combined long and short haul rates.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is the long-haul rates which the Senator says give the express companies an opportunity of undercutting him. The Postmaster General has made some changes.

The Senator differs with me as to whether or not they are advantageous. I think myself that, on the whole, the changes he has made in rates, weight limits, and so forth, fixed by the statute are advantageous. The Senator apparently proposes to take away all discretion, all opportunity for any future change, because the Postmaster General has not done everything that it is possible to do in the short time the law has been in operation.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am sorry the Senator from Washington can not understand this discussion that I am undertaking to make. As the law was before the Postmaster General interfered with it, this was not possible. The mail-order house could not send by express to a community and redistribute its packages there by parcel post advantageously, because the sum of the two locals was always more than the through rate. Now, the Postmaster General reverses that universal law of transportation and makes the sum of the locals less than the through rate. Of course, the mail-order houses take advantage of it, and it burdens the department with an enormous expense in delivering within the 150-mile zone which he created.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I may do so without being charged by the Senator with inability to understand his argument, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will be very glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Postmaster General made any change increasing rates on the long haul?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; he has not increased the rates on the long haul.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Consequently the high rate of which the Senator is complaining, which enables the express companies to undercut, was not made by the Postmaster General at all.

Mr. BRISTOW. Some of them were originally fixed in the law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Further, my contention is that if you leave the discretion in the Postmaster General and give him reasonable time he may reduce those rates. He did not raise them. They were fixed by law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas, who is an expert on this question, and has given great attention to it——

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not an expert, and I do not pretend to be. I am debating with experts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is as good an expert as we have. I wish to ask this question: Is it not the fundamental trouble now that this is an attempt to change the very character of the parcel post from a parcel post and mailing agency into a freight agency?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. LODGE. If the Government is going to enter into the business of carrying freight, it should carry it at freight rates and not at mail rates.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is exactly the point.

Mr. LODGE. I think I am right in stating that in England the parcel-post limit is 11 pounds, and in every country in Europe it does not vary materially from that. In a country like Germany where they own the railroads and in France where they own the railroads in part they undertake to carry heavy freight through the mails. Now, is not that the fundamental difficulty?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he means that the rate is too high on heavy packages?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas will set me aright if I am mistaken about it, but the whole point is that the Government, by these high limitations of 50 pounds or 100 pounds, is undertaking to carry freight, and that is not the business of the parcel post. The parcel post was never intended to carry 2,000 pounds of flour, as in the case the Senator from New Mexico described.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I am speaking of the rate.

Mr. LODGE. I am not discussing the rate. I am trying to get at the fundamental wrong of the whole system.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the Senator did say that if the Government carried packages of that weight it ought not to carry them at first-class rates, and I inferred that he thinks the rate ought to be reduced.

Mr. LODGE. They ought to do it as freight business is done; they ought to carry it at freight rates and as heavy freight, and not with the delivery and at the rate which the mail service costs. It seems to me that we are now going along on the apparent idea that this is a profitable system. Just as long as you are robbing the star routes and robbing the railroads and robbing the rural carriers you can say that it is profitable, but it will not last; it will end the moment the Government is brought face to face with the actual cost it will have to pay to carry the freight, and if it owned every railroad in the country it is going to cost as much as it costs the railroad. It is distorting the Parcel Post System to a system not within the range of the mail transportation. That is what seems to me to be the fundamental trouble.

I hope the Senator from Kansas will excuse me.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I will yield in just a moment. The Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken as to the limitation in foreign countries. In some foreign countries the limitation is as high as 100 pounds, but their condition is entirely different from ours, and we must discuss the condition that confronts us here.

Mr. LODGE. Those are countries that own the railroads.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think they are.

Mr. LODGE. They carry it as freight.

Mr. BRISTOW. The regulations are different from ours, of course.

Now, just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator from New York. The Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely right. We have undertaken to adapt the freight business to a postal system. As long as you can confine the parcel post to small packages it is all right. Under the zone system which we developed, if the Postmaster General had let it alone, we would have gone along nicely, and then if we had concluded that it was desirable to increase the weight of the package so as to make it freight business we would first have organized a system for carriers of freight different from that for carriers of mail. That is the fundamental difficulty which is confronting the Congress now.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield first to the Senator from New York, and then I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I rose not to enter into a discussion, but to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the intention we all had in adopting the parcel-post system was not being ignored, pushed aside, and prevented by the administration, which is pointed at in the provision under discussion?

We can all remember that when that bill was before the Senate there were active opposition and objections on the part of small dealers, country dealers, who said that the effect would be to put them at the mercy of the big mail-order houses. We thought, I know, that the zone system would be a reasonable protection against having the entire retail business of the country absorbed by the mail-order houses; that it would be a reasonable protection to the small dealers in country towns. We said so to them. I know I did.

I understand the zone system is being broken down so that the protection we meant to give is being destroyed. I know we meant to give protection to them, whether we did technically accomplish that purpose or not. I remember using the argument that the letter carriers of the rural free delivery routes could just as well carry the small packages of the postal system as they were making their rounds as to go about with empty buggies. To utilize the facilities of the rural free deliveries was one of the objects we had in view. Now, I know the letter carriers of the rural free delivery system in the part of the country in which I live can not carry these great hundred-pound packages or 50-pound packages. The system will break down under it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, they are not obliged to adhere to that sort of vehicle. They can buy stronger vehicles.

Mr. ROOT. Then you have to build up a new system. What I say is that we did not contemplate, when we passed the law, what is being done by an executive officer and which was not the intention of the act of Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize the force of the argument made by the Senator from Massachusetts that it would cost something. The public know that. The public do not want it without cost. They are willing to pay the cost. We have to pay somebody. We are either paying the parcel post or paying the express company, and I believe it is the universal sentiment of the people of this country that they would rather pay the Government of the United States a little additional cost for better contrivances to deliver these packages than pay Tom Platt's express company.

Mr. LODGE. The precise point is that they do not know that it will cost more, because it is hidden now under the appearance of costing less. They are working with the star routes and the railroads and the other carriers under old contracts. The moment those contracts expire the expenses will jump to an extent which no one realizes, because nobody yet understands that you can not carry freight as you carry letters.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course, it would impose an additional burden of cost on the Government; it would require something to provide better vehicles, probably additional horses; but, after all, the great end we desire to accomplish is to offer the greatest facilities of communication not only for the transportation of mail, but for the transportation of the necessities of life. How many times I have thought in my mind how delightful if, when I break a mowing-machine wheel weighing 100 pounds, when I have to send to Schenectady and it comes through the slow process of freight, and everybody knows how slow freight generally is, if, by sending a post card, it could be sent to me through the parcel post, doing me an advantage and doing nobody any evil.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would rather not send a mowing machine or a sewing machine by mail. If we are to handle those articles, we should rather organize an express system independent of the mail.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I would a good deal rather allow a sewing machine to be sent by mail than several volumes of Blackstone.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Kansas knows more about this matter than anybody else——

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not. I deny the allegation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I really think the Senator has given more attention to it than anyone else.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I do not think so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator if it is permissible under the law to send babies by parcel post?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I notice that they are doing it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In this morning's papers there is an account of a 5-year-old child having been sent by parcel post.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the Postmaster General has changed that somewhat.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the American people are very desirous of information upon this great question. As I said yesterday, this system is in the inchoate, incomplete state, not thoroughly developed. The Senator from Kansas has given a great deal of thought to it. Really he is as full of information on this question as an egg is of meat. I want to ask him as he proceeds in the discussion to state the difference between the system in vogue in American and in foreign countries. If the foreign countries can carry 100 pounds as parcel post with convenience to the people and profit to the Government, why can it not be done here? I should like to have the Senator explain to the Senate and to the American people the difference between the systems there and the system here.

Mr. BRISTOW. I must ask the Senator from Mississippi to excuse me from going into any elaborate discussion on that point. In the first place I am not competent to do it. There are fundamental differences between those countries and ours in their method of transportation and cost of transportation. In a parcel-post law we can not change our system of transportation or make the conditions we have here conform to the conditions that exist, we will say, in Great Britain or Belgium or Germany, for instance.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was not present this morning when the Senator arose to discuss this question. I was detained from the Chamber on other business, and I am really anxious to find out the proper solution of this problem.

I do not think Senators should content themselves with simply criticizing and pointing out the defects of the present system unless they have some better plan to propose. As I said to the Senator yesterday, I want to follow him and assist him in the perfection of this system. So far as I am personally concerned, I have always thought the express companies of America were a sort of economic fifth wheel—that they did not do any good. If the parcel post could, to the profit of the people and not to the expense of the Government, take the place of the express companies absolutely, I should like to see it done; and I think it can be done and make the Post Office Department a source of revenue rather than a deficit, as it has been for so many years in the past.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like not to be interrupted from now on except for a question, because I do not want to stand here all day. Senators can discuss these questions in their own time. I am not complaining; I am guilty myself of continuously interrupting Senators; but I want to get through.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want the Senator to understand, Mr. President, that I did not interrupt him in order to inject any remarks of mine into his speech.

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I simply want light from the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. I appreciate that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has given a great deal of patient, intelligent, and patriotic thought and consideration to this question, and I want to profit by his lucubrations and study.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not want the Senator to think that I am complaining at all, except that I do not want to be continuously on the floor. I do not want to take the whole afternoon, and would rather somebody else should have charge of the time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will not interrupt the Senator any more.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator wants to ask a question at any time, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I will yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask a question for information. Has the Senator compared the weight limit of parcel-post packages in this country and in foreign countries? It has been stated that while the limit here is only 50 pounds, in many foreign countries it is 100 and 200—probably as high as 300 pounds.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, those railroads are owned by the Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not the question I wanted to ask the Senator from Kansas. I wanted to ask the Senator from Kansas if in the foreign countries where the weight limit is high they carry those high-weight parcel-post packages over dirt roads, or do they simply carry them over the railroads?

Mr. BRISTOW. They are carried for short distances over the railroads.

Mr. SIMMONS. And not over the dirt roads at all?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think they have any system of star routes at all in foreign countries that will compare with ours. I would not say that they never have a parcel post running over a dirt road, but it would be very unusual indeed to have a dirt road that was a mail route in a country like Belgium or Germany, as the Senator will know.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think probably the Senator is right. I think probably those heavy packages are simply carried over the railroads.

Mr. BRISTOW. To near-by markets.

Mr. SIMMONS. If they are carried in countries of Europe over dirt roads there is a very marked difference between the condition of the roads there and the condition of the roads here. It would probably be much less expensive to carry a 250-pound package over the roads of France, Germany, and Great Britain than it would be to carry a 50-pound package over the average road in certain sections of this country.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, yes; I have no doubt about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator that I rather agree with him in his contention that to fix a higher limit than 50 pounds might seriously handicap the rural service in this country on account of the condition of the roads in certain sections. I know as to my section of the country, I do not believe it would be feasible in parts of my State, in the mountain sections, to carry packages of over 50 pounds over the dirt roads we have. The point I distinctly differ with the Senator about is as to his method of getting at the limitation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator from Kansas will yield to me for a moment, I think I can answer the question of the Senator from North Carolina from official figures with reference to the weight limit in foreign countries. I have them here. For instance, in the United Kingdom the weight limit is 11 pounds. In France the weight limit is 22 pounds; in Australia it is 11 pounds; in Japan it is 13 pounds; and so on. There are, however, one or two, or perhaps three, small countries where the weight limit has been extended to 110 pounds, but none above 110 pounds.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Alabama will recall that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] yesterday read a list of several countries where the limit was very much above 100 pounds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, but it must be borne in mind that those are countries very limited in area, and there is the further fact that instead of being a postal system it is a kind of freight system which they have there.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator from Kansas is now saying that he is under the impression that those heavy packages are not carried over the dirt roads of those countries, but are confined to railroad transit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are not conducted in connection with the Postal Service.

Mr. BRISTOW. If Senators will allow me to proceed, I would like to get through. I was comparing the express rates between cities in the various zones from New York in order to get a comparison in the seventh zone of the parcel-post rates from New York to Denver on a 20-pound package—the rate is $2.01, while the express rate is $1.30. Beyond the seventh zone, in the eighth zone, take Salt Lake City; the parcel-post rate is $2.40 on a 20-pound package, while the express rate is but $1.71. In these long hauls, where the big profit is to the express companies, the express rate is always lower than the parcel-post rate which Mr. Burleson has established; but when you get into the first zone of his charges—the first and second zones on the map—then the express rate is more than the postal rate, because it costs more proportionately to the handling carrier to handle the package in the short haul than in the long haul.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, will the Senator permit me another question, for I am really anxious to get more information about the matter? I am troubled about this question.

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Kansas says that in these long-distance zones the rate fixed by the Government is higher than that fixed by the express companies. I want to ask him is that true of a small package as well as of a large package or does he mean to confine his remarks to the large package?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am comparing the rates on the 20-pound package. Take the small package, and the discrepancy does not appear until you get into the farther zones. Take a 2-pound package——

Mr. SIMMONS. Suppose you take an 11-pound package, if the Senator will pardon me, as that is the weight limit fixed by the original law?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am sorry to say I have not the express comparison here as to the 11-pound package. I thought I had it, but I took the 20-pound package. I am confident, however, that on the smaller packages there would not be that discrepancy, because the express companies charge proportionately more for the handling of the package than they do for the transportation of the package. You take any 50-mile zone, and the express company will charge from New York to Newark, for instance, 31 cents, while the Post Office Department will charge but 24 cents. That is, within the 50-mile limit you will always find the parcel-post rate lower than the express rate; that is a part of the business which even Mr. LEWIS, of the House, admits is carried at a loss on the business which the Government is doing now. Where the profit is, in the long haul, the express companies are still handling the business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the situation with reference to the short haul, but what I am trying to get at is as to the long haul. If it be true that with respect to the long haul the present postal rate is higher on a small package——

Mr. BRISTOW. No; it is not higher on a small package.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, a package weighing around 11 pounds.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is on an 11-pound package.

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon an 11-pound package. Then the argument which the Senator from Kansas is making is an argument which goes to the fundamentals of our original enactment as much as it does to the reorganized service by the direction and authority of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I can not myself see that. I think that is a mistake, because the Post Office Department handles the small packages cheaper than does the express company; it was intended that it should do so; and we did so under the old rates and we do under the present rate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to say that a package around 11 pounds——

Mr. BRISTOW. An 11-pound package is a good-sized package. Take a package weighing 2 or 3 pounds.

Mr. SIMMONS. Eleven pounds is the limit fixed in the law as originally passed. If it costs the Post Office Department more to deliver such a package in these outer zones over these long hauls than it costs the express companies, then the argument which the Senator from Kansas is making would go to the fundamental provisions of the original enactment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I have always felt that our rates for the long zones were lower than they should have been. I think we lose money on all of the business we handle in the eighth zone, but I will say to the Senator that in committee, when the bill was originally framed, I proposed to have 12 zones, running up to a 3,000-mile radius and have the rate 16 cents a pound beyond that, but the parcel-post rate between European countries and the United States was 12 cents a pound for an 11-pound package, and the argument was made that we could not charge our own people more for handling our domestic business between points in the United States than we charge for handling business between the United States and Europe. So the committee, with a very decided majority, fixed 12 cents a pound as the maximum charge for any distance. Now I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is mistaken in supposing that the rates established by Congress in the first two zones were greater than the express rates, for they were much less.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that; I said in the first two zones, the near-by zones, they were less to all points. I think that has been admitted.

Mr. BRYAN. They were less?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Under the law they were less, I think, in the third zone; but it is admitted that when the Government undertakes to go beyond the third zone, because of the freight rate it has to pay, it loses money. So before the parcel post was established raising the weight limit provided under the act of 1912, the express company would take the short haul and give the Government the long and expensive one.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, I understand the Senator from Florida to say that when we pass beyond the third zone, even at the rate fixed in the original law, the Government would lose?

Mr. BRYAN. It certainly would not make anything.

Mr. SIMMONS. It certainly would not make anything; but the charge made by the Government is a little higher than the express rate.

Mr. BRYAN. That comes about because of the statutory rate that the Government has to pay for the carriage of the matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator also inquired as to the relative cost now, since the express rates have been reduced by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Stating it generally, subject, perhaps, to a few minor exceptions, under the rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the express companies and under the rates which the Postmaster General has established, the postal rates are less than the express rates up to 4 pounds; they are about the same for 5 and 6 pounds, and then the parcel-post rates are greater than the express rates.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator, is not that because we are now carrying parcel-post packages upon the weight basis, as other mail matter is carried?

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think that is the right and correct basis for carrying parcel-post packages?

Mr. BRYAN. There are only two ways; either by weight or by space. That is a subject that is being investigated very thoroughly by the joint commission of the House and the Senate, and I would not presume to express an opinion upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator not think that, if we could get away from the present weight basis, by which all these parcel packages are carried, we might be able, without running counter to the constitutional provision, which does not permit us to fix a rate which would be confiscatory of the property of the railroads, to secure for the carriage of parcel packages the same rates that the railroads now charge the express companies?

Mr. BRYAN. Well, I hope we could.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the express company can carry a 50-pound package, bearing all the expense of its handling and its distribution, and give the railroad one-half of that amount, and if that one-half received by the railroads is a reasonable rate and is not confiscatory, why can not the Government insist that the railroads shall carry mail in parcel packages at the same rate without running any danger of violating the constitutional rights of the railroads?

Mr. BRYAN. The only reason——

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, if the Senator will permit me, have not the railroads by their contracts with the express companies precluded themselves, estopped themselves, so to speak, against raising the question that that rate is confiscatory?

Mr. BRYAN. Perhaps they have, but the trouble is that we are trying to carry freight at mail rates. I apprehend, perhaps——

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is the trouble; that is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. BRYAN. I apprehend that perhaps the rate paid for the carriage of newspapers, magazines, and letters is not too large; but certainly we ought not to carry bricks, as it has been claimed they are being carried in the parcel post, at the same rate that we carry letters and newspapers.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if I can have the floor for a few moments I will conclude. I have made three efforts to indicate the difference in the various zones upon Mr. Burleson's parcel-post rates and the express rates.

In every one of the last five zones, including the fourth zone, the express rate is less than the estimated cost of carrying the package by the department, according to Mr. Burleson's figures; so that if Mr. Burleson met the express rate in these other zones he would lose the same amount of money which I think he is losing in the second zone, or in what was formerly the second zone, which he has included now in the first zone.

To show how impossible it is under present railway mail pay to make a competing proposition between the parcel post and the express, I want to give to the Senate briefly a few illustrations of the differences in express rates as fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission throughout the country. From Portland, Me., to Chicago, Ill., is the same distance as from Cheyenne, Wyo., to Sacramento, Cal. The express rate as fixed by the commission between Portland, Me., and Chicago on a 20-pound package is 69 cents. The parcel-post rate—Mr. Burleson's rate—between those two points is $1.22 for a 20-pound package, almost double the express rate. That is between Portland, Me., and Chicago, Ill. From Cheyenne, Wyo., to Sacramento, Cal., which is the same distance, but in a different part of the country, the express rate as fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission on a 20-pound package is $1.39, as against 69 cents for the same distance in the eastern part of the country. The parcel-post rate there, of course, is the same; that is, $1.22. Between Cheyenne and Sacramento our rate is 17 cents per package less than the express rate fixed by the commission, while between Portland, Me., and Chicago our rate is 53 cents more than the express rate. Between Chicago and Cheyenne the distance is similar to the distance between Chicago and Portland, Me. The express rate on a 20-pound package between those two points is 99 cents, while the parcel-post rate is $1.22; that is, Mr. Burleson's rate.

Another interesting illustration is from Chicago to Sacramento, which is the same distance as from Portland, Me., to Cheyenne, Wyo. From Chicago to Sacramento the express rate is $2 for 20 pounds, and from Portland, Me., to Cheyenne the express rate is $1.37—the same distance, but in a different section of the country. The parcel-post rate in both instances is $2.01. From Chicago to Sacramento it is 1 cent more and it is 64 cents more from Portland to Cheyenne than the express rate.

Of course it is impossible to make an accurate comparison between these rates or to undertake to have a postal rate meet an express rate when the country is divided into five sections and has different rates in every section, so far as the express matter goes. So when the superficial argument is made—and it seems to me it is the most superficial argument I have ever heard intelligent men advance—that we have to fix these rates or leave them with the Postmaster General in order that he may meet the express competition, he can not do it, unless he divides the country into five sections and fixes a parcel-post rate for each section. If you go into the freight business you have to establish a freight system and not try to carry tonnage with letters.

Mr. President, I wish to close by saying that I am in favor of this amendment because I believe it is absolutely necessary to protect the department and the Postal Service from chaos. I am going to offer an amendment to the bill after this amendment is voted upon. It may be objected to; I do not know whether it will be accepted or not; but it undertakes to correct the abuses now existing. I would rather have a month or so to work out some of the questions involved; but before that month passes, or certainly before two months pass, we probably will be carrying 100-pound packages; and, in addition to having a ton of flour unloaded at a railroad station for a mail contractor or star-route contractor to take up and carry, we are likely to have almost anything. The fact is that some wholesale grocery houses out in the West are now using the parcel post to ship their canned goods and freight of all kinds to their customers.

I desire to read at this point a statement incorporated in the RECORD on February 5 by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. This, as the Senator states, is a letter from a star-route contractor who wrote him for some help or relief. He says:

> For example, let us take the rate from Mackay to Bonanza, a distance of 118 miles, at the rate by parcel post of $1.08 per hundred: By slow freight during summer months the rate is $1.25 per hundred, making a difference of 17 cents per hundred. During the winter months the rate by slow freight is $2 per hundred, so you will readily see that if business improves, which it no doubt will, the mail contractor will be unable to handle the same, except by so doing at an enormous loss. The man who handles slow freight is at a very trifling expense compared to a mail contractor, as the mail must go through regardless of expense and the slow freighter can take his time; the slow freighter employs no help.
> I do not think the department is aware of the conditions as they exist in a mountainous country, as we have waterspouts to contend with in the summer months and snowslides and blizzards in the wintertime, to say nothing of excessive cold.

Now I come to another interesting statement:

> Allow me to call your attention to the contractors on the routes between Boise and Idaho City, and Mountain Home and Rocky Bar. When the contractor of the Boise-Idaho City took the contract his bid was for $7.68 per trip; parcel post so increased the mail and diminished the express that he was forced to give up his contract, and his bondsmen, who are now operating the line, are doing so at the cost of $46 per day. The same facts are true in the case of the Mountain Home contractor.

Here is another statement which will be of interest.

Mr. BRADY rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to have the Senator first finish reading the statement.

Mr. BRISTOW. Another interesting statement which I want to call to the attention of the Senate is this:

> After throwing up his hands in despair and calling for aid, when three carloads of ore, in 50-pound packages, shipped by parcel post, were handed him to deliver recently—

Now, think of that. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to this proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Three carloads?

Mr. BRISTOW. Three carloads of ore—

> the contractor who handles the mail between Stites and Elk City, Idaho, is expected to succumb when he begins to receive from Spokane a 50,000-pound parcel-post shipment of groceries over the same route. Stites is on the railroad and Elk City is not, and the parcel-post shipments are carried 60 miles by a Government mail carrier between the two points. He has been using light wagons, but may have to engage a battery of automobile freighters if business picks up. The grocery shipment comprises one thousand 50-pound packages, and goes at the rate of 54 cents for 50 pounds. To top it off, it is understood the Elk City retailer expects to have dry goods and hardware supplies shipped in by parcel post from Spokane.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will permit me to ask just one question on that exact matter, whatever may be said as to the desirability of doing that kind of business, it tends, does it not, to show that the apprehension that the country merchants would not receive any benefit from the parcel post was not well founded?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, I do not think so. I think that illustration shows the utter folly of attempting to carry freight by mail.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator think that service is some benefit to that country merchant?

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think the United States Government ought to haul that sort of freight in there at a great loss?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that is an entirely different question. The Senator is not answering my question at all.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not think his question has any relevancy to this discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator take that view of it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not take any other view of it, and I will tell the Senator why. When it is proposed to defend the proposition of hauling this material, in a mountainous country like this, for 54 cents for 50 pounds, and delivering it at a far-interior point to a merchant for a rate which probably will be not more than one-third of the actual expense the Government incurs in delivering it, if the Senator from Washington thinks that is a proper function of a mail service then it is useless for him and me to discuss this question any further.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will not discuss the matter any further with the Senator, except so far as I feel called upon to do so; but since the Senator has referred directly to me, and has refused to answer the question I asked him, and has assumed to define my position as to the shipment of freight of that kind by parcel post, I will say that it is altogether an assumption on the part of the Senator. The question I asked him did not bear on that phase of the subject under discussion, but it was relevant to the general question. The Senator knows perfectly well that one contention in regard to the establishment of the Parcel Post System, and a very serious one, was that it would destroy the country merchant; and yet the illustration the Senator has made obviously shows that so far as that phase of the question is concerned the country merchants may be benefited by the parcel post.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator that the particular country merchant who gets the Government to haul his freight from Spokane for a third of what it costs the Government to do it is being benefited; but to apply that to country merchants in general, it seems to me, would be very far-fetched.

I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the people of our State are very much interested in a fair and equitable postal rate, but they are more interested at the present moment in saving the star-route contractors from bankruptcy under their present contracts with the Government. The present arrangement is bankrupting every star-route carrier in Idaho.

The letter that has just been read by the senior Senator from Kansas is from a Mr. Hansen, a perfectly reliable gentleman, and every statement he makes in that letter is absolutely true. Not only is his route in that condition, but every other star route in the State is in the same condition, and in many instances they have turned the contracts over to the bonding companies, and in many instances have not only lost all they have invested in equipment but all the other property that they possessed.

Just this morning I received a telegram from Mr. N. B. Pettibone, who is interested in the Stites to Elk City (Idaho) contract. He is trying to get an adjustment with the Fourth Assistant Postmaster that will simply save him from bankruptcy. That is all he asks—an arrangement that will simply give him money enough to pay his expenses, and he will lose any possible profit. His telegram is as follows:

STITES, IDAHO, February 21, 1914.

Hon. JAMES H. BRADY,
Washington, D. C.:

Blakslee, Fourth Assistant, wired postmaster Stites regarding hauling parcel post. Can you see him? Wire my expense.

N. B. PETTIBONE.

As I said before, all that Mr. Pettibone asks the Postmaster General to do is simply to save him from bankruptcy.

Since these letters that I have read into the RECORD came in, in the case of one contract that was turned over to the bonding company, the bonding company took it over and put a man in charge, and the man who had lost all his equipment in trying to carry out the contract went to work for the man who took the contract to protect the bonding company, and since that time that man, in turn, has failed, and the bonding company has had to take the contract over again.

It seems to me the time has arrived when the Senate should insist on at least a fair and equitable adjustment of these rates for the star-route men, until such time as the Postmaster General or the Senate, in cooperation with him, may establish rates that would be at least fair and equitable.

There is only one way the carrying of these mails on rural and star routes can be equitably adjusted, and that is by the Government paying so much per pound per mile. This will eventually be done, but it should be done without further delay. I happen to know most of the star-route contractors in my State, and I know them to be honest men endeavoring to make an honest living, and they will be satisfied with any rate that will permit them to do that, but it is unfair to them to try to compel them to carry this increased weight without extra pay, and I am sincerely in hopes that the department will find a way to save these contractors from financial ruin before it is too late.

I am in favor of the parcel post, and I want to do everything I can toward making it a success in every way. This can only be done by paying a fair and just rate for service rendered.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, in closing, I desire to say——

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator closes, I should like to say a few words, with his permission.

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not interrupted the Senator before, but have listened very attentively to this discussion, because I wanted to get all the light possible on the question. I wish simply to add a contribution of a few words to the discussion.

I have recently received a letter from a star-route contractor and also a letter from a rural delivery carrier telling me that they must necessarily throw up their contracts. One of them said in his letter that when he took the contract he supposed it was to carry the mail—letters and newspapers—but he did not suppose he was expected to provide a freight train; and inasmuch as it has developed into that condition he feels that he must surrender and lose whatever the Government may exact from him.

Mr. President, one other phase of this matter has troubled me considerably. The sending of these large packages is increasing. The people have just begun to learn that they can do this—that they can send mowing machines and bedding and iron ore and all sorts of things through the mails. It is going to increase very rapidly, because the information has just penetrated the minds of the people. I am troubled about the free city delivery.

A man starts out to deliver the mail in my little city. He travels, I think, nearly 20 miles a day. He is loaded down with newspapers, letters, books, pamphlets, and so forth, especially during the Christmas season, to the point of exhaustion. How many 50-pound packages can he carry in addition to the ordinary mail? How many 100-pound packages could he carry? If this service is to be extended, as has been suggested, it is simply going to embarrass, if not break down, the carrier system in every city of the country, and compel the employment of many more carriers than we have at the present time.

I am troubled over the situation very much indeed. Unless this matter can be stopped in some way, unless it can be kept within reasonable bounds in some way, not only will the star-route contractors have to go out of business but many of the rural delivery carriers will have to surrender, and the city delivery carriers will have imposed upon them a burden that will be intolerable.

I am very glad indeed that the Senator from Kansas has so luminously and at such length explained the situation, believing as I do that the Senate, in its wisdom, will see some way out of this difficulty, because it is pressing upon us in a shape that demands immediate attention.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the city-delivery situation can be handled with much more ease than the rural-delivery or the star-route situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Because the department will simply have to establish another delivery system within the cities.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why, certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. We will have to establish a package-delivery system——

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably.

Mr. BRISTOW. And handle the packages in wagons.

Mr. GALLINGER. We will have to furnish them wagons or automobiles.

Mr. BRISTOW. And let the regular carriers simply deliver the mail and the papers, as they have done heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in that way possibly double the present expenditure for the carrier system.

Mr. BRISTOW. It will very materially increase the expenditure; but when you double the expenditure for the rural delivery system by the same process, as you will have to do, because in time the demand for rural delivery will be far greater than the demand for city delivery, because the service in going out in the country 4, 5, 6, 8, or 10 miles and delivering a package at a very nominal fee will be very convenient, and there will be thousands and millions of tons of freight handled by this service, it will necessitate the establishment of a parcel-delivery service for the rural regions of the United States in addition to the mail service for the rural regions of the United States.

I have gone into this matter at great length, far greater length than I had intended to, but there have been a great many interruptions. I wish to say, however, that the weight limit should not have been increased beyond 20 pounds at the most until experience had demonstrated its effect, and the first zone never should have been abolished, and the rate for the 150-mile zone, or the second zone, never should have been reduced to the point where it is now until there was organized some means by which this increased, additional business could be successfully handled. That certainly appeals to the common sense of any man. But what has happened? With but a few months' investigation, practically with little investigation, we have gone from step to step until now we are loading tons of iron ore and groceries into the mails and breaking down the rural contractors, who contracted to carry letters and papers and simply incidental small packages.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It will not disturb the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator deplores the change that has been made in the system for the reason that the mail matter carried through the mail is more than can be carried with convenience and dispatch. Is that the only objection?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the machinery were such that the matter carried through the mails could be carried promptly, would the Senator then approve the system?

Mr. BRISTOW. If the business is confined to parcels that can be conveniently carried through the mails, I think it is a fine thing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then the Senator——

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me answer the Senator's question. But I think we should consider first with some deliberation the question as to whether we are going to organize a freight-delivery service in the United States. I do not know that I have any objection to that. I would greatly prefer to require the railroads to handle the small packages of freight and permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix a schedule of rates for them. I think the express companies are parasites; that they are useless. There is no use for them, and we never ought to have had them. The railroad companies——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will ask——

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, the railroad companies should have arranged for transporting and handling packages of 20 pounds and up, and then I think the post office can handle the smaller packages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRISTOW. As no one else has risen for the purpose, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wanted to get the Senator's opinion on another matter. The Senator said, as I understood him, that if the machinery and arrangement were such that larger packages could be carried through the mails with dispatch and promptness he would rather favor the system in vogue.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would not say that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that to-day the rate is satisfactory?

Mr. BRISTOW. What rate?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The rate now in force or in vogue.

Mr. BRISTOW. No, no; I do not think it is.

Mr. VARDAMAN. You do not think that?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then before you would be willing to carry on the system and extend it to the larger packages you would insist that there should be a change in the rate?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. You are not satisfied with that?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is my judgment that the first necessary thing to do in extending the Parcel Post Delivery Service to a freight service, which is contemplated, is to classify the pay which the railroads receive for handling the mail according to the character of the mail, and let the freight go at one rate, let the letters go at another rate, and provide a slower train for the freight and cheapen the cost of transporting the freight. The abnormal situation that confronts us is that we are undertaking to carry freight in a Postal System according to the standards of expense fixed for carrying fast mail.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has no doubt but that the Post Office Department is bringing to bear the best thought, the most patriotic and intelligent service, to the consummation of this plan. The Senator also knows that nothing could happen which would render this administration more unpopular with the American people than the impairment of the Postal Service and especially the Rural Delivery Service. Now, does not the Senator think that if the department were given a free hand, with all the expert assistance which it is capable of bringing to bear upon the question, it could more nearly approach the perfect in the formation of the system than could be done by Congress?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no; I would not concede that for a minute. No, no. I do not know whether the Senator was here when I explained the question this morning when I first began.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was not here, and I regret it very much.

Mr. BRISTOW. I presented some figures then and gave some illustrations to show the absolutely ridiculous effect of the orders that have been made, so far as a transportation system is concerned, that I think would appeal to anybody's judgment. I do not want to repeat them, but I will just in a word state that the Senator from Mississippi knows there is one fundamental underlying principle in all transportation business, and that is that the through rate must never be more than the sum of the local rates. Yet outside of the third zone there is not a single zone where the through rate is not more than the sum of the local rates. I showed instance after instance here. If the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who sits by the Senator's side, were to send a package from here to his home at Florence to-day by parcel post it would cost him, if it were a 20-pound package, 83 cents. If he will send it to Fayetteville, in North Carolina, to a friend there, and let it be delivered to that friend and let that friend readdress it to Florence, he can send it to Fayetteville for 44 cents, and from there to Florence for 24 cents, or 68 cents for the whole service, while, if he sends it direct to Florence from Washington, without stopping it at Fayetteville, it will cost him 83 cents.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have not in this discussion insisted that the present system is perfect, but I maintain that uninfluenced by political considerations, unmoved by self-interest, or by any other desires than to reach the truth and promote the public service, the department is more capable of perfecting this plan than this deliberative assembly. They are men whose lives have been devoted to this service, who have expert knowledge of this particular question, who are not moved by the passions and prejudices that warp and sway men here. Those men sitting down coolly and deliberately with their maps, their figures and the facts all before them, it does seem to me could more nearly approach the perfect than could be done in a body of this character.

It is for that reason that I am opposed to hampering, to limiting, or handicapping the administration in its efforts, without political bias, to settle this question wisely, because, as I said a moment ago, if the department makes a mistake I can not conceive of anything that will contribute more to the unpopularity of this administration and redound more to the interests of the Republican Party than a mistake in this matter. There is every reason why we should indulge the presumption that the department will do its best to perfect the system. I believe, therefore, the department ought to be given a free hand in the working out and discovering the solution of the problem in which the American people are so vitally interested.

Mr. BRISTOW. In reply to the Senator I desire to say——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRISTOW. In a moment I will yield. I have been on the floor for 2 hours and I have yielded 1 hour and 40 minutes of that time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I simply want to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. In reply to the Senator from Mississippi I desire to say I am judging of the expert capacity of the Post Office Department by what it has done. I have presented here illustrations of the system that it has incorporated into the postal law. I have given facts that are not disputed and will not be disputed. If the Senator from Mississippi thinks that that demonstrates capacity, then he and I differ as to what capacity is.

I yield now to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I only fear that the efforts of the Senator in that direction will tend to hamper and interfere with the exercise of the Parcel Post Service as we have it to-day. I want to remind the Senator that only yesterday, in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, there were some 8 or 10 gentlemen, the proprietors and heads and one a paid attorney, so his card represented, of the various independent express organizations. They were there condemning the general policy of the parcel post. It meant no good, they alleged, to them.

We found one man who had made a very liberal stipend since the Parcel Post Service was established. He claimed that the parcel post was an invasion and all that sort of thing and spoke of the delay that had occurred. I asked him, even admitting all the delay that you have presented and all the shortcomings of the parcel-post system, in your judgment is it a boon or otherwise to the people. He said, "I consider it a great boon and a blessing."

There are doubtless a few imperfections. I am willing to admit that there are many instances where the rates are not absolutely fair and equitable. It is not fair and equitable in the strict sense of the word when I send a letter to New York City to be charged 2 cents and yet to charge a man who lives across the Hudson River 8 miles the same postage. That is true with almost everything in life. The Senator knows, as a newspaper man and a printer, that advertising rates are so much per line. He does not make any different charge if the man's advertisement should run over a single word on a line; he charges him so much a line whether he occupies the line in whole or in part. That is not absolutely equitable, but it is as near as human judgment can come. There is universal commendation of the parcel-post system. This service is an experiment, and it would be very ill advised to disrupt the system, which I fear we will be liable to do if we carry out what is proposed here.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from New Jersey astounds me. He infers that those of us who are trying to protect the Parcel Post Service from being wrecked by unwise executive orders are opposed to the system. The Senator from New Jersey knows that the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and other Senators and myself worked for it for months.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know that.

Mr. BRISTOW. We prepared the bill, as Senators know. Originally we incorporated into the Post Office appropriation bill the provision which became a law instead of a very inefficient and ineffective one that came from the House. We have no motive on earth except the proper development of this service, and when we see that it is being ruined, in my opinion, when we want to protect it from any further orders such as have been issued incorporating in it these unwise provisions, then we are assailed as being opposed to the system of parcel post.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was far from my thought to impute to the Senator a desire to wreck the system. I know of no gentleman who is more patriotic, more painstaking, or earnest than the Senator from Kansas has been on this great question. I know of the deliberation in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads more than a year ago, where we sat until midnight, midnight, and even after, working out a system that finally evolved the zone system. I say that no committee was ever more patriotic, more unselfish, or more generous and just. But my only fear was that by additional effort in the way of legislation we would hamper this system and prevent it from being broadened out as a blessing free as God's sunshine.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know the Senator from New Jersey is just as honest as I am. I know he would not intentionally impute to other Senators on the committee or to myself any unworthy motive, because that is not his disposition; and he knows that no Senator has such a motive; but I spoke with the earnestness I did because the Senator might have conveyed a wrong impression to others. The allegation that some of us were trying to break down the system has been made by certain newspapers throughout the country inspired, as I think, by a publicity bureau and by certain representatives of the great mail-order houses who are about Washington under the guise of lobbyists for benevolent associations of some kind. I think, indeed, that it might be well for the lobby committee to get to work and find out about those men who have been infesting the Capitol trying to get hundred-pound package rates and a decrease of rates, so that the great mail-order houses could get not a fair chance, but an advantage, over every competitor they have from one end of this land to the other.

I am not here to decry the mail-order business. I think that the economic conditions in our country have made it a desirable line of business, and that it is serving a good purpose; but the United States Government has no business to pay out of the Public Treasury funds to give them the advantage over the local merchants in individual communities. It is not fair or just to carry packages from a great city like Kansas City or Chicago 150 miles out, many times at a loss, and land them under the nose of a merchant who has grown up and lived all his life in that community, and charge him just as much for transporting his goods 10 miles away from his own home as it charges the mail-order house for delivering it 200 miles or more. The local merchant helps keep up his community. He is a part of our country's population. He is a creditable and an honorable citizen. He is in a legitimate and necessary business. He has a right to a square deal in the transportation business of the country, especially when the Government goes into that transportation business. We have no right to unduly favor the great institutions located in the large commercial centers by giving them Government aid against these competitors, and at times to take money out of the Government Treasury to help them to crush their country competitors.

I say it is an outrage, and I will protest against it as long as I am a Member of this body. That is just what these orders of the Postmaster General are doing. I do not want it to be inferred from what I say that I believe that he intends to accomplish that purpose. I am not here to impugn the motive of the Postmaster General. I have known him for 17 years. I have a very high personal regard for him. I believe he wants to serve his country best. But what is he doing? First, he is handling 60,000 post-office appointments. He has a thousand political quarrels that center in his department which he has to deal with day by day. They are ever with him. He has a department that is the biggest business institution in the country. He has more men employed than in any other institution of the country. Do you tell me that he, unacquainted with the business of that department, except incidentally, until he by a political upheaval became its head, who never has had any experience in the Postal Service until within the last year, except as any other citizen might have—can he go into the department and perfect a system of transportation so as make it sacrilege to question its wisdom? There are Members of the Senate who have given days and weeks to the study of the questions relating to the transportation of mails where Mr. Burleson has given hours. That is not to his discredit. He has not had the opportunity, and I am here to appeal to the Senate to exercise its judgment to perform its own functions, in serving the people of the United States.

Senators say we are not capable to do it. I know the Senate is. It worked out a better parcel-post law than the law is today—more equitable and more just, though not perfect. Nobody claims that. We see now after a year's experience where improvements can be made, and if we had known as much then as we know now we would have made them at that time.

I am asking that the Senate devote its attention to this legislative matter which is a part of its business and not shirk it by putting it on somebody whose business is to administer the laws we make, not make laws for us.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into any discussion of the questions in controversy with those who advocate and those who oppose the proviso in the appropriation bill we have under discussion.

I have had occasion, however, several times during the discussion to-day and on yesterday to interrupt and make inquiries and express some views, and in order that my position may not be misunderstood by reason of those inquiries and detached statements I want to express very briefly the state of my mind with reference to the pending proposition.

Mr. President, I do not believe that it is the purpose of those who are advocating this proviso to attack the patriotism or the good faith of the Postmaster General. It is a mere difference with him as to a matter of policy and administration. I think no one in this Chamber will question the ability of the Postmaster General to deal with this question wisely and his disposition to deal with it patriotically.

The suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] that the Postmaster General has, with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, entered upon a very radical revision of the act as it originally passed Congress to inaugurate this service, and has done it without due deliberation, I think is unfair to the Postmaster General.

But I know the Postmaster General too well to believe for a minute that he would have given his sanction to the important changes that have been made by him in respect to weights, rates, and zones without due consideration and without the full advice of others in his department whose duty it is to study and to advise him with reference to this and other allied questions.

But, Mr. President, while I, like other Senators, entertain the highest confidence in every way in the Postmaster General, I have doubts whether in the present condition of the service, with the restrictions and the limitations under which this service must be worked out, it is altogether expedient at this time to inaugurate 50-pound parcel post, and I feel confident it would not be wise in present conditions, which are beyond the control of the Postmaster General, to increase that limitation—certainly not to the extent said to be in contemplation. I would like very much myself, if it were possible and if it were expedient from an economic standpoint, to see 100-pound parcel post; but I do think, in the conditions in which we have to work, 100-pound parcel post might seriously interfere with, if it would not swamp, the Rural Delivery System.

The first difficulty that I see grows out of the rail rates fixed in existing law. Under the present law, as I understand it, these rates are fixed upon the basis of weight; that is, packages are carried upon the same basis of compensation that letters are carried. A package weighing a certain number of pounds must pay the same rail rate as a package of letters weighing the same number of pounds. That is, to my mind, an absurd condition and one from which we ought to get away as soon as possible. I do not believe while that condition exists we will ever be able to economically carry large parcel-post packages in excess of 50 pounds.

This is a condition which I think can be remedied and ought to be remedied. I believe it would be perfectly just and fair to require the railroads to carry parcel-post packages at the same rate they carry like parcels for the express companies.

There can be no constitutional objection growing out of the confiscation of the property of the railroad if the rate for a parcel-post package is reduced to the rate charged by the express companies. In accepting this rate from the express companies the railroads conclusively admit they can be carried at that rate at a profit, or at least without confiscating their property, for their rate contracts with the express company are voluntary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from North Carolina would not object to the weight being increased to 100 pounds if it could be demonstrated that the packages could be carried without entailing loss on the department and that such a service would be of benefit to the public at large.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly I would not. In addition to the rail-rate situation under the present law there is another trouble about increasing the weight limit to a hundred pounds. It is the burden that would be thrown upon the rural carriers, especially in certain sections of the country where rural road conditions are bad. If there should be any considerable business in the carriage of packages weighing a hundred pounds in these sections of the country, the Rural Delivery Service might be seriously overburdened, if not swamped. I want to see the Parcel Post Service extended and broadened as fast as is feasible, but I do not want the Rural Delivery Service crippled or impaired. I am willing to stand by the Postmaster General in fixing the weight at 50 pounds, and I shall vote to sustain his action in fixing that limit.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. With the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, I should like to call his attention to the fact that certain questions were put to expressmen in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads at the meeting of that committee yesterday, and those men claimed that the number of 50-pound packages in their relation to the smaller packages of less weight was as 4 to 1 and that the number of 100-pound packages in their relation to 50-pound packages was as 4 to 1.

The point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina is that the same condition which he supposes might arise in reference to rural carriers being overburdened with the 100-pound packages would come with 50-pound packages, because a sufficient number of 50-pound packages in the aggregate would weigh as much and more than a 100-pound package.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is absolutely true of things that are divisible into 50-pound packages, but there are many things that go through the parcel post above 50 pounds and under 100 pounds that are not divisible, as the Senator from South Carolina knows, and what he says would not apply to that character of packages.

Mr. President, I know at the present time there is not a large percentage of these 50-pound packages carried; but if you could get the rate down to a reasonable amount—if you could get it down to the express rate—then the number of 50-pound packages would be greatly multiplied and the burden that would be thrown upon the rural carrier would be greatly increased.

If the proposition embraced in the proviso were simply that the Postmaster General should not increase the rate beyond 50 pounds for the present, I would be disposed to vote for it, but it goes beyond that proposition. It not only proposes that the Postmaster General shall not increase the present weight limit, but it proposes that he shall not be permitted to change by decrease or increase the rate of parcel postage.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Or to change the zones.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or to change the zones.

Mr. President, the fact is that at this very time the parcel-post rate in all of these zones except four is higher than the express rate. I can not vote to prohibit the Postmaster General from reducing rates in these other six zones in the face of the fact that at present those rates are far in excess of the rates charged by the express companies. I think that would be an indefensible handicap of the Postmaster General in the administration of this great public service. I do not believe there is any Senator here who doubts that the Postmaster General is doing all in his power to reduce these parcel-post rates as fast as conditions will allow. Already he has reduced the rates far below the rates fixed by Congress in the original enactment. He has been alert and untiring in his efforts in this direction, and nothing should be done to interfere with or embarrass him in these efforts, especially in those six zones where the rate now is so far in excess of those charged by the express companies. And for that reason I shall vote against the proviso.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I said, in response to a query made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] or a remark addressed by him to me, that at the proper time I would give my views on this question, so that there might be no misunderstanding in regard to them.

I am a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I have given considerable study to this question. I think the American people, and particularly the American Senate, are thoroughly advised that one of the great conflicts that have raged over this country in a political and economic sense has been the fixing of equitable and just rates amongst our common carriers. So great has this conflict become that we have at last obtained the consent of the American people and of the American Senate that the Government shall enter into the field of competition by the only door open to it—the recognized right of the Government to fix postal rates and to provide for the delivery of mail.

Mr. President, that being true, we have entered into that domain, because the American people are convinced that they have been treated unfairly by the common carriers of this country and have been made to pay unjust and exorbitant rates in proportion to the service rendered. It would be interesting if Members of this Senate, those who have not—and I presume there are very few who have not—would read the history of the inception of the postal business in this country and in Europe. In the beginning it was experimental. All sorts of prices were charged for first-class mail matter; in fact, there was hardly any classifications. Those charged with the duty of trying out the business, empirical and imperfect in the beginning, were given large leeway in order to ascertain by experiment and use precisely what would be just, equitable, and right, until the classification crystallized into our first-class postage, our second-class postage, and our third-class postage. When, after a term of years, sufficient knowledge and experience had been acquired, Congress stepped in, and from that vantage ground established certain fixed rates.

We are in the beginnings of the parcel post. Some one, whether in the Senate committee or in the House committee or in conference, wisely proposed that the Postmaster General of this Government, charged with the specific and only duty of attending to and perfecting, for the benefit of the masses of the American people, the postal business in all of its ramifications, should be given the plenary power of trying out this new system and to increase or decrease the rates, to increase or decrease the number of zones, to abolish a zone or to change the limits; in other words, to do all that, in his judgment, with such experts as he might bring to his counsel, would be to the best interests of all the people in America who authorized Congress to pass this law and him to administer it.

There is not a man before me to-day, there is not a Member of this Senate, who would for one moment believe that a Senator, charged with the duty of looking after general legislation from his State, multiplied and confused as it is, has the time or the opportunity to investigate the minute and the particular points of this bill. No Senator or Senators have the time to bring in a report that would give us the light that the Postmaster General, with his efficient corps, could bring to us and suggest as legislation. The Postmaster General, operating under that provision which says that he should have the power to change the rates, to change the zones, and to change the weight, should be governed by two things—the public service and the avoidance of a deficit.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] spoke yesterday for an hour to prove that by abolishing the first zone and extending that first zone from 50 miles to 150 miles there would be a loss. I asked him the question if he meant there was an aggregate loss within the now existing zone, namely, 150 miles. He claimed that within the first zone as originally established there was a profit, but that when it was obliterated there was a loss; that is, when carried to the extreme of the 150 miles. That was hardly fair to the Postmaster General or fair to the business, for the reason if, when the first zone was abolished or when the radial distance was extended to 150 miles and the rate of the original 50 miles was extended to 150 miles, if the aggregate business done by the Post Office Department in the parcel post showed no loss. Those who live on the very perimeter of the 150-mile zone received, as he said, a service that was at a loss to the Government, while those coming nearer the center received a service that paid a profit. There is not a man in Washington who rides upon a street car for a square, who pays his nickel and steps off, but contributes to the possibility of another citizen riding to the limit, where the nickel ceases to be profitable; and, naturally, we would not be so foolish as to come here now and say that the street car companies shall charge square by square, and that the man who goes 10 squares shall pay ten times as much as the man who goes one square.

Mr. President, it is not any use for us to strain at gnats and swallow camels. The law of equation enters into this as into every business proposition, and I am glad that this is one proposition that comes before the United States Senate that is purely and distinctly a business proposition. If the President was unwise in selecting as the head of this great business department a man who is incapable of discharging its duties, he can rectify the mistake if it is demonstrated a mistake has been made. The Postmaster General very frankly says in his report that he has, with all due regard to the law, attempted to ascertain whether there would be a loss in lowering the rates and giving greater facilities to the American people or whether there would not, and that, in his judgment, the change of the zone was for the benefit of the people within the zone and all the people within that zone.

So far as the question raised a moment ago by the Senator from Kansas is concerned, that the country merchant would be practically ruined if a 100-pound weight limit should be authorized in the parcel post, I think the Senators present, if they were in favor of protecting the country merchant as against the farmers and masses of the people who want to buy where they can buy the cheapest and sell where they can sell the highest—if we were here for the purpose of legislating for the country merchant rather than for the masses of the people, merchants included, we would be more interested in seeing that a high rate was charged upon the smaller package, for the reason that if you allow a 100-pound limit and the 100-pound package to be hauled at a loss from distant quarters, the country merchant could send his order to the wholesaler and get a package weighing a hundred pounds consisting of various articles, and availing himself of the cheap rates, compete with his city competitor. So that the very argument the Senator from Kansas attempts to use against increasing the weight limit is not really an argument against it at all. It is the small individual package that would come in competition with the sales of the country merchant.

Mr. President, I think the mind of the Senate is pretty well made up as to this matter. I have but one interest in it. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], who has been the champion of the retention of this proviso, called attention to the fact that he did not believe the Postmaster General or anyone else was justified in changing the zones and weight limits established by Congress until the equipment was sufficient to take care of the business brought about because of the change. Any man with business experience knows that the only way to find out what equipment is necessary is to create the necessity for the equipment. If the operation of the parcel-post system under a weight limit of 50 pounds or 100 pounds demonstrates that the people will use it and that it will not result in a loss, then we as legislators and the department as administrators of the law should see to it that sufficient equipment is provided for the use of the rural carriers.

Now I want, just for a moment, to address myself to the argument made on this floor that we must choose between the rural mail service and the parcel post. It is said that the rural mail service now is operated at a loss of $30,000,000 annually. Why? Because it is said the amount of revenue is not sufficient to pay the deficit. Of course, the parcel post being inaugurated, if the Postmaster General exercises due business judgment and increases the business, he will increase the revenue. If a rural carrier carries 10 letters and the profit on those 10 letters is 10 cents, and with the same equipment he can carry 100 letters, then the profit will be ten times as great. Therefore, as we increase the work that he does and the revenue from that work, the time being the same, we have increased the profits of the service rather than decreased them. Even if that were not true; even if it would not increase the profits, if the parcel post demonstrates that it can be operated without a loss, we, as legislators, the American people standing back of us, can make appropriations to furnish the equipment or see that the parcel post, if necessary, shall be segregated from the rural carrier, and the people accommodated as they have commanded you and me to accommodate them. I, for one, Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to suggest to my friend——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to suggest to my friend, if it will not delay or interrupt him in his very excellent argument, that in order to bring about just what he desires and just what the American people need, we must give a free hand to the Post Office Department. To illustrate: As has been suggested to me, if there are two competing lines of railroad between Chicago and New York, and one of them has its maximum rates fixed, definitely, inexorable, unchangeable, while the other is left free to meet conditions as they may arise, it will only be a little while until the untrammeled, untied railroad will have all the business. So it is with the Government.

All of the difficulties, all of the troubles that Senators have complained of, the mare's nests which they have found, can be discovered and corrected. If the zones are too large or if they are not large enough, give the department the free hand which the law intended it should have; these irregularities, these imperfections, will be eliminated and the system perfected, and it will then be used for the benefit of all the people.

I want to say, with the indulgence of my friend, for a moment, that it is a singular thing to me that the agents of the express companies and the public carriers are the ones who are most active and solicitious now——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And hired attorneys, too.

Mr. VARDAMAN. About the efficiency of the Parcel Post Service. Before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads yesterday, as has been suggested by my friend from New Jersey, there were a dozen men who seemed to me very anxious lest the people of New England should be denied the facilities which they have heretofore enjoyed when the express companies exercised this governmental function. I, for one, am willing to leave the matter in the hands of the Post Office Department until they demonstrate to me that they are not working in the interest of the public rather than in the interest of the public-service corporations.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senator from Mississippi for so ably buttressing my efforts.

It is needless for me to go further in this argument, but there is one thing that I would like to call attention to in passing. I can not exactly understand the mental operations of the Senator from Kansas in spending hours and hours here attempting to prove that the act of the Postmaster General was disastrous and ruinous, and at the same time, by incorporating and keeping in this bill this amendment, making that disastrous act statutory law, that can only be changed by Congress, petrifying forever the very thing which he says is disastrous and ruinous. I am afraid that the parcel post is proving even more than some of its erstwhile advocates thought it would prove, and I, for one, am going to vote for the Postmaster General and his corps of assistants to be given a free hand in the beginning, the experimental time of this new venture, to serve the American people as they think they have a right to be served, with the least possible cost and with the greatest possible benefit to them. From the inception of our modern system of organized transportation the people have been held up from time to time—in fact, all the time—so that in numbers of instances the freight on articles shipped has been more costly than the article itself. We are entitled to relief. This door has been opened, and I am amazed at any set of Senators standing here and inveighing against giving the Post Office Department a free hand.

It has been said that giving the Postmaster General the power to change rates and so forth was a joker. Then the man who perpetrated the joke in giving the Postmaster General a free hand was wiser than the men who wrote the bill, for the most commendable clause in our parcel-post legislation, aside from the establishment of the system, lies in that provision which gives to the Postmaster General the power to put into operation that which the American people are demanding. I shall vote not to restrict the Postmaster General to a weight limit of 50 pounds or to a weight limit of 5,000 pounds, but to let him determine what can be shipped without loss to the American people and for their benefit, whether it be a paper of pins or a steam engine. If it is necessary for us to furnish the equipment, let us do so. This is a government of the people, by the people, and for the people; and I do not propose to say it shall be a government of the people, by the people, for some of the people; and if we can through the parcel post solve the vexed question of transportation rates, I, for one, shall never cast my vote to tie any man or set of men who are honestly and patriotically attempting to solve that problem.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Oklahoma. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Page	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Jones	Perkins	Smoot
Bradley	Kern	Pittman	Stephenson
Brady	La Follette	Poindexter	Sterling
Brandegee	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Sutherland
Bristow	Lippitt	Ransdell	Swanson
Bryan	Lodge	Robinson	Tillman
Catron	McLean	Saulsbury	Townsend
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Warren
Cummins	Norris	Sherman	Weeks
du Pont	Overman	Shively
Fall	Owen	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. LIPPITT. I beg to state that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] are necessarily absent from the Senate, attending a session of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ASHURST. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is absent on important business and the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is absent by reason of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained at home by reason of illness.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THORNTON], on account of sickness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the question pending before the Senate is a proposed amendment with regard to the appropriation of $56,000,000 for inland transportation by railroad routes, reading as follows:

And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law

I have very great respect for the committee which makes the report, and the most cordial good will for it; but I can not support this amendment, first, because it is in violation of the parliamentary law of the Senate, and second, because it violates the proprieties of legislation upon which the parliamentary rule of the Senate was based. That rule is paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, which provides:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received.

I call the attention of the Senate to the parliamentary position of this matter. It is now objected to, as I understand, under the second part of that paragraph, by which the question of relevancy may be submitted to the Senate; but I give notice that I shall also make a point of order against it under the first part of that paragraph, which provides that no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oklahoma that that is the very point of order that has been submitted to the Senate and is now before the Senate for its determination.

Mr. OWEN. I understand the Chair to have left the matter to the Senate for determination as to the relevancy of the amendment under the second part of that paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is under the first part, that it is general legislation proposed to a general appropriation bill. That point of order the Chair has left to the Senate to determine under the last paragraph of the rule, which permits the Chair to do that.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the legislative vice of general legislation on an appropriation bill is so well known in every parliamentary body in the world that it is almost a universal rule that general legislation shall not be proposed upon an appropriation bill. Senators who are not present have a right to believe that the appropriation bills which are brought into the Senate do not propose general legislation. They have a right to believe that these bills come before the Senate free from legislative proposals.

The pending amendment is intended to amend and to nullify the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, in this paragraph:

The classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, be is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

In other words, by this original act the Postmaster General was authorized, in the interest of economy and efficiency, to make these changes. Now it is proposed to deprive him of that right and to say that he shall no longer exercise it.

In justification of this amendment it is urged that the Postmaster General and the Post Office Department, acting through the Postmaster General, have made various errors in their rulings. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has spent a great deal of energy to establish the fact that the Postmaster General's abolition of the first zone was highly improper, unwise, and inexpedient.

When a Member of this body asks for information in regard to this question, and looks for the report of the committee to be advised as to what justified the committee in proposing this general legislation repealing a previous act, he finds that the report is merely a formal, short report of five lines, submitting the bill with amendments and recommending its passage. When I ask for information as to what justifies this change of policy I am told that the report of the Postmaster General will indicate it. I send for that report; I look over it; I examine it in the light of what I am advised by the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee tells us that if we do not adopt this amendment it means the abolition of the rural delivery or the free city delivery; it means a cataclysm in the departmental service. He goes so far as to say:

We are conducting the Rural Delivery Service to-day at a clear loss of $30,000,000 or $35,000,000, or perhaps $40,000,000, to the Treasury. Does anybody dispute that? That is the best estimate the Post Office Department can make. Of course we can go on and spend $50,000,000 more than the receipts; we can go on and spend any amount of money for the parcel post that we desire—

And so forth.

When I look at the report of the Postmaster General I find that he says, on page 15, in the second paragraph:

The function of the Post Office Department is to serve the public, and it should not attempt profit making. It is expected that after the allowance of proper compensation to railroads for all service rendered there will come annually hereafter as the result of the development of the Parcel Post Service an increasing surplus.

That is very confusing to a Member looking to this authority for a large deficit. There was a surplus in 1912. There was a surplus in 1913. The Postmaster General says there will be a surplus in 1914. We are now advised to strike down this authority in the Post Office Department, where it ought to be properly exercised, because otherwise we will have an enormous deficit. We have no proof of that furnished to the Members of the Senate. It shows the unwisdom of legislating upon an appropriation bill.

This appropriation bill has been before the Senate for three days now upon this one item. All day yesterday Senators were discussing this general legislation on an appropriation bill. On the day before the same matter was fully discussed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma is arguing that this amendment is subject to a point of order because it is new legislation and changes existing law. Am I correct as to that?

Mr. OWEN. In part.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a question. There is another amendment proposed by the committee which changes existing law, that amendment being one increasing the pay of rural carriers to $1,200. Will the Senator make the same argument against the amendment increasing the pay of rural carriers?

Mr. OWEN. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator will make a point of order to strike out that amendment?

Mr. OWEN. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator very ingeniously attempts to put me in an attitude which he thinks will be unpopular with the rural carriers of Oklahoma.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President; I do not do anything ingeniously. I simply ask the Senator a plain question.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. OWEN. I will.

Mr. SWANSON. The rule is that no general legislation shall be proposed, not that existing law can not be changed in any particular. The rule says there shall be no general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. I think the appropriation for the pay of the carriers and other employees is a matter that is properly within the bill; but, answering the spirit of the Senator's question as to general legislation, I say I will object to any general legislation upon this bill in any particular, and if I had been present I should have objected to other general legislation that has come up on this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I was making this distinction: The rule says there shall be no general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. It does not say there shall be no change of existing law, no change in salaries, and so forth. The only thing that would make that increase obnoxious to the rule would be, possibly, that no estimate has been made for it by the department. This rule is limited to a prohibition against general legislation. That is the language of the rule. It does not forbid changes in existing law.

Mr. OWEN. I have favored in the past increasing the compensation of rural carriers. In this case I should favor that, too, so far as the merits of the matter are concerned; but I will not favor putting general legislation on these appropriation bills. I do not think it is a good thing to do. There is one bill in which that has been permitted with such uniformity——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, would it disturb the Senator to yield to me again?

Mr. OWEN. No; I yield to the Senator again.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes a provision in this appropriation bill which simply puts a limit on the expenditure of an appropriation is subject to a point of order? That is all the amendment now being considered means. There is no suggestion made here that existing conditions should be changed by the amendment. The rates, zones, weights, and everything else remain just as they are now and as they are being operated.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator would simply paralyze the Postmaster General by that amendment; that is all he would do. It reminds me of the famous story of the catfish.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the question generally. Now, here is the proposition: In the same bill there is a change in existing law which is just as much general legislation as this amendment, and that is a proposal to increase the salary of rural carriers by $100 a year. There can be no distinction drawn between the two.

Mr. OWEN. The diversion which the Senator proposes does not divert. I come back to the real question—that this is general legislation.

The vice of it is shown by the fact that day before yesterday we were debating this question; all day yesterday it was a matter of debate, and all day to-day it has been a matter of debate. Because it is general legislation, because in the minds of many it vitally affects the efficiency of the Post Office Department, I say very frankly and freely that I believe the Post Office Department, with its large number of skilled employees, with men who are trained experts studying the question of these zones, these weights, and these rates, is better equipped than I am to pass upon it, and better equipped than our Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to pass on it.

I know the conscientious care which members of the committee give to these problems. I do not question that in the least, nor do I question in any degree their perfect sincerity of purpose in proposing this amendment. I do say, however, that it is against the rule of parliamentary propriety to put upon an appropriation bill general legislation changing the policy of administering the parcel post; and when we do change that policy we ought to have both sides before us. We ought to have before us what the department would have to say in regard to the matter.

I ask the chairman of the committee, Did the department recommend this?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not quite catch the Senator's question.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, Did the Postmaster General recommend this legislation on the appropriation bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. He did not.

Mr. OWEN. Did he oppose it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not heard from him on the subject.

Mr. OWEN. I have in my pocket a letter from him which I should like to read.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator may give the Senate some information by doing so. He did not confide it to me.

I desire to say in this connection that the Postmaster General has never said that he wanted to increase the limit to 100 pounds, so far as I know. We have no official information of that sort. We have every reason to believe, however, that that is the purpose. The only object in the world this amendment has is to say to the Postmaster General not that we distrust his honesty or his capacity or his ability to work out this problem as he has worked it out, but that we fear he has reached the danger line; and we simply ask him to halt and not go any further until the matter can be thoroughly looked into. We do not propose to disturb anything he has done.

Mr. OWEN. It is obvious that the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has not received a letter which was sent to him on February 13, 1914, by the Postmaster General, and which reads as follows:

Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to Senate committee print of bill H. R. 11338, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, I submit the following for consideration in connection with the proposed amendment to the bill, beginning at line 22, page 15, reading as follows:

"And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law."

The weight limits, rates of postage, classification of matter mailable, zones, and other features of the Parcel Post System, as established under the provisions of the act of August 24, 1912, were from the very nature of things more or less tentative and experimental. Congress, apparently recognizing this, and realizing the necessity for readjustment from time to time, conferred on the Postmaster General, subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, authority to modify the conditions fixed by the parcel-post law, in order to promote the service to the public. Under this provision the rates of postage have been decreased in certain zones, and the limit of weight has been increased in all zones, as experience demonstrated the necessity and advisability of such changes, thus enlarging and promoting the usefulness of the service to the public and according to the public the lowest rates possible consistent with the maintenance of the service on a self-supporting basis.

The Parcel Post Service is still in an experimental stage, and the need for additional modifications manifests itself from time to time in the conduct of the business. In order that such adjustments may be promptly made, and the usefulness of the service to the public increased as rapidly as is consistent with good administration, it is believed that the proposed amendment should not be enacted into law.

Yours, very truly,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

I think the attention of the chairman of the committee ought to have been called to that letter, because it deals directly with this amendment, and is opposed to it. I think the attention of the Senate ought also to have been called to it, because it is the expression of the administrative branch of the Government opposing this proposal. I got the letter by a mere accident. I did not think this was a good provision, and I asked the Post Office Department whether they agreed to it or not. They indicated to me, through one of the clerks there, that they had not agreed to it. I asked what expression they had made on it, and asked that they send it to me, and that is how I happened to get this letter.

These considerations show, however, that it is not a wise thing to legislate on an appropriation bill, because both sides can not be conveniently or well heard. I think obviously the administrative branch of the Government ought to be heard in regard to this matter, and at such length as may be necessary to give to every Senator a proper comprehension of the view of the department, and its reasons for its view, and the answer it might make to such arguments as those made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. President, when asking in regard to this matter I was informed that the losses which we are told might occur—I do not know upon what that statement is based, except upon the surmises that are doubtless due to conclusions based on some state of facts found in some of the hearings somewhere, of which I have no knowlege and of which I do not pretend to speak with knowledge at all—were due to the fact that the express companies could carry this matter much more economically than the Government could, because they had special contracts by which they could carry the packages at much lower rates.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator be kind enough to state who told him that—who had that conversation with him?

Mr. OWEN. I think it appears in the RECORD of day before yesterday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But who was it that said that?

Mr. OWEN. It appears in the RECORD of day before yesterday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wanted to know who the gentleman was that suggested to the Senator that the express companies had contracts, and they ought to be permitted to take care of this business. Did I understand the Senator to say that?

Mr. OWEN. No; I said nothing of the kind. I made no such suggestion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What reference did the Senator make to the express companies just now?

Mr. OWEN. My reference to the express companies was that it had been stated that they had lower rates over the railways for transporting packages, and therefore that they could do this work better.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly the point. Now, who states that? That is what I want to learn.

Mr. OWEN. It was stated, as I understand, by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] day before yesterday, when I asked the question.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, at the time the Senator interrupted me I was commenting upon some remarks read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], supposed to have been delivered in the House of Representatives by Mr. LEWIS, in which the statement was made that the expense to the express companies was 4 cents per ton per mile and that the expense to the Post Office Department was 8 cents per ton per mile. There was an illustration cited by Mr. LEWIS of the shipment of a package from New York to Lincoln, Nebr., in which it was stated that the total charge by the express company was 57 cents, and in which it was also stated that the expense to the Government, the transportation expense to be paid to the railroad company for the carriage of that package of 20 pounds, was 60 cents. I think it is a fact that under the arrangement between the railroad companies and the express companies the express companies pay less than the Post Office Department pays.

Mr. OWEN. I have no doubt that is true.

Mr. BRYAN. And that is one of the very reasons why some of us contend that we can not compete with the express companies without a loss.

Mr. OWEN. Yes. Now, I will ask the chairman of the committee why he challenges that statement. Does he think it is untrue?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no. I had not any such information; that is all.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator has it now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I have it now.

Mr. OWEN. That appeared in the RECORD day before yesterday, because that is where I got the information. I have not much information about it; I do not pretend to have; but I did think, under all the circumstances, that I would offer this amendment:

And provided further, That no part of the $56,188,000 or any future appropriation shall be paid to any railroad for the transportation of the mails of the United States at rates greater than the rates paid to such railroad by the express companies for like class of service in the same zone or territory until authorized by law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I understand the Senator proposes to offer that amendment.

Mr. OWEN. As an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senator if he does not think that that is general legislation and out of order?

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; I agree to that; but if the Senate holds that the other is not general legislation, then I ask the Senate to adopt this provision. I send the amendment to the desk.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma holds that the amendment proposed by the committee is general legislation.

Mr. OWEN. I do; and my amendment is also general legislation; and I shall vote on the theory that it is general legislation and obnoxious to paragraph 3 of Rule XVI. I think there is no doubt about it; but if the Senate wants to take the other view and vote that it is germane, then I will ask the Senate to allow this amendment to become a part of the law if they vote in favor of the law.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate long in expressing my views upon the proposed amendment contained in the bill reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I fully concur with what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has stated, that this is general legislation upon an appropriation, and as such should be held not to be in order. I concur with him as to the inadvisability of enacting legislation of this kind upon a general appropriation bill.

I am not prepared to say what I think is the wisest and best course now in connection with the establishment of zones and the fixing of rates for the parcel post. At the time when the act was passed a commission was created to investigate the matter thoroughly and report to Congress as to what its findings of fact were and what its recommendation should be. I have confidence in that commission. I have confidence that they will make a thorough investigation. I believe they can make such an investigation far better if the Post Office Department, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is permitted to change rates pending that investigation. I believe we shall get better results and be better prepared at the next session of Congress to dispose of the matter in a sensible way and a way most potential for the betterment of the service.

It seems to me it can not be disputed that this is general legislation. The Senator from Oklahoma has stated what the present law is. Under the present law the Postmaster General has authority to change zones, rates, and weights, provided the Interstate Commerce Commission will consent to the change. That is the existing law. This proposes to make statutory the existing orders issued to the Post Office Department, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission—that is, to give him no power to increase or decrease rates, no power to change what was done by him in the order recently issued.

There can be no dispute but that it is general legislation. It is not confined to the appropriation. It does not limit the appropriation. None of this money will be diverted if that provision is made law. If the provision is passed it will be a general statute, not limited for one year but good for all time to come.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has alluded to the fact that there is a provision here increasing the salary of rural carriers, and he wanted to know of the Senator from Oklahoma if that was not also general legislation. I take the contrary view. It is not general legislation; it is simply an increase of salary. It changes no existing law; it appertains to no general legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is not the salary of the carriers fixed by law?

Mr. SWANSON. But that is not general legislation. I can prove by the rules that that is true. Rule XVI, section 1, provides that no motion shall be made to increase salaries or increase expenses on an appropriation bill coming from certain committees unless the amendment is offered by a standing committee of the Senate or included in the estimate of the department.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. The amendment increasing the salary of rural carriers has been offered by a standing committee of the Senate, and as such, under the rule, it is in order. An increase of appropriation is not general legislation if it has been included in the estimates of the department, and even if it had not been recommended by the committee, if it had been included in the estimates of the department under that rule, it would have been in order. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator think the amendment put on by the committee as to the pay of rural carriers is subject to a point of order?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not; and the reason is plain, under the rule. The committee report to strike out $1,100 and insert $1,200. That is an increase of salary, without general legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I will yield in a minute, but let me answer the question. Rule XVI, section 1, goes on to state that no motion shall be in order to increase a salary or appropriation unless on certain conditions, one of which is unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate. This has been moved by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, a standing committee of the Senate. Another condition is unless it is included in the estimates of the department. This was not included in the estimates of the department, but it has been moved by a standing committee of the Senate and comes clearly under the rule.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I merely wish to make the suggestion that the question which the Senator is now arguing, originally suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, has no bearing whatever on the pending question which is before the Senate. Whichever way I for one might conclude to vote upon the pending parliamentary question I would not consider it as in any way determining the further question which the Senator from Virginia is discussing. I do not think that we ought to be burdened in deciding this question with a consideration of the increase of salaries in the Postal Service.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is entirely correct. I simply alluded to it from the fact that the Senator from Alabama saw proper to unite the two and show that they were similar in language and obnoxious to the rule of the Senate.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who criticize those who may differ with me upon this proposition. I think many of the Senators who have argued against the proposition are as good friends of the Parcel Post Service as can be found in the Senate. I served on the commission in which the parcel post was first considered and then upon the Post Office Committee of the Senate, on which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] served. I know his earnest desire to develop the parcel post; but there has always been a difference of opinion as to the best methods of accomplishing this end. There has always been an opinion as to whether it could be done entirely by the legislation of Congress or whether somebody should be delegated for that purpose.

It is the same old debate that has been here for the last 15 or 20 years in connection with the regulation of freight rates or the regulation of passenger rates and various express rates of that kind and character. For years it was contended that Congress was the best body to determine these matters. Finally it was determined to be utterly impossible for Congress to fix passenger rates, freight rates, or express rates, and a body was delegated and constituted to do that work for Congress. That was the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have given the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make and unmake State and community business from one section of the country to another. We realized that unless the Interstate Commerce Commission was given this power it would be impossible to relieve the country from exorbitant freight rates and passenger rates. That commission has the confidence of the country to-day as much as any institution in the country. I believe there is not a more popular body of men than those who compose the commission, that none have acted more patriotically, and none have the support and approval of the great masses of the people equal to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

When the parcel post was devised, from the beginning there was a difference of opinion as to whether Congress should fix these rates or whether it should leave it to other bodies to administer the parcel-post rates. In the bill that passed, what was the law? First, the Postmaster General must desire to have a zone or rate changed. Second, when he desires to make a change, it can not be done until the Interstate Commerce Commission reaches a conclusion that it is for the best interest of the public and the country for that to be done.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can the Senator inform us just what steps were taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission in reaching its conclusion as to the present rates?

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand the methods of procedure, the Postmaster General, like any common carrier or express company, filed a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for permission to put the rates in force. The Interstate Commerce Commission can make any investigation it sees proper, but its conscience and its judgment must be convinced of the justice of a rate before it can be put in force.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I asked the Senator a question which he has not answered. Perhaps he is not able to answer it.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not able to answer as to what——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I asked the Senator if he knew what steps had been taken or what had been done by the Interstate Commerce Commission in passing upon this question?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not able to state what inquiry they made as to the rates or whether they simply accepted without examination the recommendation of the Postmaster General.

I am not able to state whether they made an individual examination, whether they examined witnesses or not. All I can say is that the same law that is proposed to be changed now appertains to all other rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which he and the rest of us repose such implicit confidence, made no actual examination into the rates, but accepted the recommendation of the Post Office Department?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not prepared to say to what extent they investigated the subject. All I know is that the law provides that the Postmaster General must have their concurrence.

Mr. BANKHEAD. After investigation. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this question has been before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads prior to this time. When the Post Office Department changed the zones and increased the weight a resolution was introduced and passed directing the committee to inquire into it. The Postmaster General and the president of the Interstate Commerce Commission were before the committee. When asked what information the Post Office Department had given the Interstate Commerce Commission and what investigation they had made under the law which requires that the order might be put into effect with the consent of the commission after investigation, the chairman of the commission, Mr. Clark, stated before the committee that they had made no investigation of their own; that they had accepted the investigation and report of the Post Office Department.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is as I understood the fact to be.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But they generally approved it, as I recall the statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; they did approve it, as I recall the statement, but without any investigation at all, as they admitted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. It seems also that the majority of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads approved what was done, because by this legislation they want to tie the Postmaster General's hands so that these rates will continue for at least another year.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that if there is anybody in the world organized by government that can determine what should be a fair rate for the parcel post that body is the Interstate Commerce Commission. The competitors of the Government in the Parcel Post Service are the express companies. The express companies must go to the Interstate Commerce Commission to change their rates as competitors with the Government, and it seems to me that the Government has put double safeguards around the subject in requiring, first, that the Postmaster General shall reach a conclusion that the rate proposed is either self-sustaining or will be promotive of the public interest and then getting the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission before any change can be made.

The Interstate Commerce Commission for several years have been investigating express rates. They know the cost of the service. They know it better than any of us can know. They have made a thorough investigation. Last fall they required the express companies to put into effect certain express rates. It seems to me if we are to compete with the express companies, if there is to be fair competition between the parcel post and express companies, so that the public will not be required to pay exorbitant rates, we should give the Government the same opportunity, the same tribunal, the same rates that its competitors have in the same line of business. It seems to me that that is just and proper and right, and that is what the present law does.

I am not prepared to say to what extent these rates should have been changed, to what extent they are right, to what extent they are remunerative to the Government. I have made no thorough investigation of that question. I have had no opportunity to do it. I do not think any member of the committee, possibly with the exception of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], has had any such opportunity. They are industrially investigating the matter. This bill proposes to extend the privilege of the commission to investigate during the summer and then to report by the 4th of next March as to what legislation they think it is advisable for Congress to enact in connection with the Parcel Post Service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Would the Senator from Virginia have any objection to putting into this law a provision that in fixing rates the Postmaster General shall make them remunerative, and shall prescribe such rules as shall not discriminate either between individuals or between communities? Those are the rules which apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing rates for common carriers.

I rather agree with the Senator from Virginia that we will have to find some tribunal to fix these rates that can act in a speedier and more intelligent way than we can act as Members of Congress. My whole objection to it is that we have imposed no rule upon the Postmaster General in fixing these rates. If we will consent that there shall be the same rule imposed upon the Postmaster General with regard to fixing rates that we have already imposed for moving other freight, it would remove a great deal of the objection that I have to the present system.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the provision which gives authority to change the rates, zones, and weights has a limitation, addressed alike to the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission:

In order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

Now, they could only change the rates to accomplish those two purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. One or the other of them.

Mr. SWANSON. One or the other of those two purposes.

Unless it was promotive of service to the public or was done for the purpose of making it self-sustaining, as I understand the provision, there would be no reason for changing the existing zones and rates.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not see in the provision just read by the Senator from Virginia any rule whatever. Service to the public might be rendered if all postal matter was sent just as letters are sent, eliminating entirely the question of cost or the question of distance. The public might be served if the Government would undertake to transport freight for nothing. There would be a great many people in this country who would be very glad to be able to receive everything that they do receive without any cost of transportation, and we may come to that eventually; the entire cost may be defrayed by a general tax. But we have not said to the Postmaster General that these rates must be compensatory to the United States. We have not said to him, "You shall not favor one community at the expense of another or one individual at the expense of another." I assume that the latter has not been done.

Whenever we enter the freight business we ought to do it upon logical lines. We may favor a few people by getting freight to them cheaply, but in doing that we may ruin thousands of other people.

I might as well say to the Senator from Virginia I am not one of those who shrink, as many of you do, from the Government ownership and operation of railroads. I look forward to the time when, in all probability, the Government will do the entire transportation business of this country; but you can not put the Government in competition with other freight-carrying companies. The Government must do either all or none of the freight business of the United States. I have looked with a good deal of favor on the Government doing all of it and doing justice by properly adjusted charges to every community and to every person; but I should like, anyhow, to say to the Postmaster General that in fixing freight rates you must have regard to the fundamental laws and rules which ought to govern that business.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in this connection, as to the specific rules governing the fixing of parcel-post rates, the commission had the question before it whether we should have a flat rate or zone rate. There were a great many people who wanted a flat rate to ship in all portions of the country at the same rate and let the question of 1-cent postage go. It was readily realized that in some sections it would be done at great loss, and that in other sections it would be very profitable. It was recognized that it would be very unjust to charge as much for shipping 10 miles as for 3,000 miles. The commission, of which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and the then Senator from Oregon, Mr. Bourne, were the two most active members—I being a member, but they doing most of the work—reached the conclusion, after looking into the matter, that the zone system was the best system for the parcel post. Any zone system necessarily carries with it some discrimination.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I will yield later. The larger the zone the more the discrimination will be. If you had a zone of 50 miles, as we first fixed, you would charge as much for carrying 50 miles as you would for 5 miles or 1 mile or 2 miles, and the man who paid for carrying a parcel 2 miles as much as another man paid for carrying it 50 miles felt that he was paying more than the service required. Yet, we had to adopt either a zone system or a flat system, and the commission was unanimous, after looking into the matter, that the zone system was preferable to the flat system, and certainly that it should be continued until we had made further experiments than had been made at that time.

I felt that the rates in the first and second zones at the time were too high. I think the then Senator from Oregon concurred with me in that view, but we knew the difficulty of getting a parcel-post system established, and we agreed unanimously in that commission upon a report fixing zones and rates which we thought were good to begin with. I felt at the time that the first and second zones would be most used and that the rates were too high and would have to be reduced. Yet we all felt that we were venturing in an untried field, and after looking into the matter in the House and Senate we decided that the best course to pursue was to do for the Rural Delivery Service as we did for other governmental functions—that is, let the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission handle the matter until the commission appointed at that time had gotten accurate information or had made an investigation and had come back to Congress to see to what extent fixed rules can be made to govern this matter. I am not prepared now to say to what extent we should go. While the language suggested by the Senator might not impede and destroy absolutely the zone system, it might be so construed. If the Senator will look at the difficulty, he will fully realize that there must be some discretion vested somewhere while the service is in this experimental stage.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree that much discretion must be vested somewhere, but I believe it is for Congress to establish the rule or the policy. We have established a policy of zones. I will not enter upon a discussion of the merit of the zone system. If the zones are narrow, it may be very just. If they are broad, it may be very unjust. The difficulty is that we have given to the Postmaster General the right to reverse the policy that we have established with regard to zones. The Postmaster General can eliminate all the zones. He can put a common rate upon postal matter of the fourth class from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. SWANSON. No; he could only do it with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. The Interstate Commerce Commission has no rule at all to guide it. According to what has been said here, it simply accepts the conclusion of the Postmaster General. Now, suppose the Postmaster General should come to the conclusion that there should be a single rate upon all fourth-class matter, without regard to the distance it is shipped, and change the zones accordingly; does the Senator from Virginia believe that it is a fair exercise of the legislative duty to permit an administrative officer to set aside the obvious policy adopted in the law?

That is what I am complaining about. We have simply turned over the whole subject to the Postmaster General and said, "Do whatever you please with it; you can abolish this zone; you can increase the weight; you can fix the rates." That would enable the Postmaster General, if he wanted to do so in the future, to increase the weight of packages to a thousand pounds or five thousand pounds or one hundred thousand pounds and to abolish the zones so that the real freight business of the country would be carried on without regard to the principle upon which the business of the country is established. I do not think that Congress ought to give any man or any set of men that unlimited and unrestricted authority.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, at the very time this provision was put in the appropriation bill of last year, another provision carried in the same bill created a commission to investigate this matter thoroughly, to ascertain to what extent Congress should fix the limitation, to examine and reach a conclusion as to what recommendation it will make to Congress, showing that Congress intended ultimately to control this matter as far as it should be best for the public service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. The position I take is that pending the work of this commission, whose life we extend under the bill, it is better to let the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Postmaster General regulate it than to fix in the law a regulation before the commission reports. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. He states that in the same bill creating the parcel post a commission was created directed to investigate the whole question of the Parcel Post System, and report to Congress as to rates, zones, and everything pertaining to it. That is true; and a very industrious, painstaking commission was appointed. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] are two of the members. They went immediately to work. They accumulated a large amount of information, upon what idea? That the weight limit was 11 pounds and the zones had been fixed along the lines they were investigating. They woke up one morning and found that the weight limit had been changed to 20 pounds and the zones had been changed. They, of course, had then to begin a new investigation. After they had proceeded with the investigation under that condition of things they were apprised that the weight had been increased to 50 pounds. How can this committee make an investigation and report unless there is some place somewhere where conditions will be stable long enough for them to gather information?

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that the changes will enable them to do it more satisfactorily than it could be done without changes. As I understand, the Senator said they made an investigation as to 11 pounds and obtained data in reference to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I did not. I said they were making an investigation and were gathering information, but that they had not reached a conclusion.

Mr. SWANSON. They have obtained data upon which they can reach a conclusion of some kind in reference to the 11-pound packages.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Let me answer that. They can do the same thing in reference to the 20-pound packages; they can see to what extent it increases or decreases in results, to what extent it increases in accommodation between 11 pounds and 20 pounds; and if they get data under the 50 pounds weight they will see to what extent it has injured or hurt, advanced or retarded the system by extending it to 50 pounds. It seems to me that if I were on that commission—though I might be mistaken, for I have a great deal of confidence in the judgment of those men—I would not object to an experiment as to whether the carriage of 100-pound packages was possible under the parcel post. There must be some place where you must stop, so that your mail may not be converted into freight. That can only be done by experiment. Nearly all the alleged profits in connection with freight rates, passenger rates, and other matters have been disproven. It seems to me if the commission will cooperate with the Post Office Department and arrange to get data as to packages of different weights, as to the cost and their number, the very fact that you have different weights, different zones and rates, will enable them to gather the information for Congress when it assembles next December better than it could be done if you had the weight simply fixed at 11 pounds all the time.

While this 50-pound weight is going through the mail, the 20-pound weight is going through the mail, and the 11-pound weight is going through the mail, statistics can be gotten by them on the cost or the amount of use, and it seems to me that the method pursued is the best to enable Congress to get the broadest facts and to finally reach the best conclusion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. After this commission have thoroughly investigated this subject and have concluded as a result of that investigation that the weight limit ought to be 11 pounds or that the weight limit ought to be 20 pounds, and they so recommend, does the Senator think that Congress could be induced to agree to that under any kind of circumstances?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will answer that frankly. If there is a demand in the country and a vast majority of the people are so pleased with the weights, and so pleased with the rates that they desire to have them continued, they ought to be continued.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is very frank.

Mr. SWANSON. There is no government in America except the will of a majority of the people. We are not here to make laws in accordance with our own wishes; we are here to give expression to the will of the people in making laws; and I am frank to say if, after we have tried the 50 pounds in all sections of the country, it has been finally decided that it helps the country, that there is a decided opinion for it, and the experience and wisdom of the people favor it, Congress should not repeal it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to thank the Senator from Virginia for his very candid answer to my question.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Virginia has just said that having tried an 11-pound limit weight for a time, a 30-pound weight for a time, and a 50-pound weight for a time under different zone systems and at different rates, in 15 months the department could furnish Congress with statistics as to what had happened under each of those conditions. I should like to have him enlarge somewhat on that idea, and tell us how the department could furnish us any substantial statistics under such conditions.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the Senator how it could be done very easily with the proper experience. You could take an office like New York, or a fourth-class post office in a little town, and find out the number of 50-pound packages that are sent out, the distance they go, and obtain the same information as to the 30-pound, the 20-pound, and the 11-pound packages, and make an estimate of the cost on the amount carried and the net returns. It can be done on 50 pounds as readily as it can on 11 pounds; and it seems to me, with all these packages of different weights going through the mail, the information will be fuller and Congress can reach a better conclusion next winter. If the department will go to the expense of making these estimates, it seems to me it can get a great deal more material than it would simply by having 11-pound packages all the time.

I should like to make another suggestion in this connection. It is said the rates change and that it is impossible for the commission to get the information, with the changing rates. It would seem to me if the rates are changed they could get information as to whether, with lower rates, there would be greater business, which would make it more profitable than it would be with high rates. In addition to that, suppose the Government could not change the rates and the express companies could do so. The express companies could easily take the profitable business and leave the Government carry on the unprofitable business. Then the report made by the commission would show the parcel post to be a failure. It seems to me that the department, desiring to make the parcel post a success, should be given some latitude under certain limitations, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to make that effort until Congress can have an opportunity to investigate the matter and then fix the rates.

I do not know what rules I should fix now. I was on the commission which investigated this question, but I could reach no definite conclusion; and I know such conclusions as I have reached have been more or less tentative and liable to be changed under changed conditions. In these things I recognize that there must be a limit somewhere, and that the Post Office Department can not be converted into a mere carrier of freight to the detriment of other branches of the service and to the rapid delivery of the mails. In the light of experience the Parcel Post System must be developed in the best and safest way it can be done.

It seems to me that the wise thing to do is to let this matter go over, for the commission to investigate it from now until Congress assembles next December, and when the commission reaches a conclusion as to what limitations Congress should put upon the matter that will be the wise time to enact legislation and to impose the restrictions. I believe that would be fairer than to have it limited and made rigid at this time. I am afraid if it is now made rigid the express companies might get the profitable business and the Government the unprofitable business, and the service would not have a fair show. It seems to me that if we can trust the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the freight rates for all the railroads in the country, the passenger rates for 100,000,000 people, to make and unmake towns, cities, and communities, that that body which we have constituted can be trusted, on the petition of the Postmaster General, to handle the parcel post or to govern it until this commission can act and determine what rules, regulations, and limitations are required. I believe that is the right thing to do. It is my belief that we should not legislate on the parcel post without a full and fair investigation in connection with what the Postmaster General has done.

I have not looked at the rates; I am frank to say that I am not acquainted with them; I am not acquainted with the irregularities enumerated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. I am not one of those who lack confidence in the Senator from Kansas being a good friend of the parcel post, for I believe he is. The Senator from Kansas, when he investigates this matter during the next summer, as we have authorized him to assist in doing, will, I am quite sure, come back here after a full investigation, as he did when the rates were established, and give us useful information and valuable suggestions, which Congress can then consider, and it will be far preferable to consider them then than now.

Mr. President, this proposition shows the viciousness of legislating on general appropriation bills. This would unsettle the whole parcel-post system until Congress should see proper to change the law. The Senator from Kansas has pointed out this injustice; he has pointed out the irregularities; and yet the provision which he advocates would make statutory law, as has been well suggested, the discriminations of which he complains, and they could not be changed except by an act of Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield to the Senator in one moment. Of course the Senator from Kansas thinks it possible the Postmaster General may go further and make greater discriminations than these; but I am certain, if the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Postmaster General should become satisfied that these rates will not pay, that they are productive of injustice to cities, communities, or to business, they will change them. Anyway, I should like them to have the authority to change them. When any community, any city, any business can prove it is injured by these rates, they ought to have the opportunity to go to the Post Office Department, and, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, have the changes made. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I presume the Senator from Virginia is aware, is he not, that the Interstate Commerce Commission has asked to be relieved of the supervisory control it has over the parcel-post rates?

Mr. SWANSON. If they desire to be relieved, I am not for relieving them.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask if the Senator is aware that they have asked to be relieved?

Mr. SWANSON. I am aware that they do not wish to exercise the power.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator is likewise aware, is he not, that they have also asked that, if not relieved, this provision placed in the act of 1912 be made more definite as to the duties they are to perform?

Mr. SWANSON. I did not know that they had asked that.

Mr. BRYAN. I will read their request. They say:

If that is not done—

That is, if the commission is not relieved—

the duties to be performed by the commission, as well as the standards to be applied to it, should be more clearly stated.

Mr. SWANSON. I am willing when this investigation is made and the commission is satisfied what limitation should be fixed, to put that provision in the law; but I think it is far wiser and better to leave it to the joint commission, in which I have confidence, to investigate this matter and come back to Congress next year and recommend with clearness what limitation they think Congress should fix and what should be left to the discretion of the Postmaster General. I believe, in order to make the system a success, in order to make it possible to ascertain what the parcel post will do, it is necessary to have these changes pending the investigation. It is with that view that I think there should be no legislation of this character on this appropriation bill.

I think the Postmaster General, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, should always have a large amount of discretion in fixing rates in order to meet the competition which the Government must necessarily encounter in this matter. I am not for relieving the Interstate Commerce Commission of this work. They have fixed the rates of the express companies, and why should they not also fix the parcel-post rates of the Government, so that every interest may be treated with fairness, justice, and equity?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the work that the commission does, to which reference was just made, the Senator knows that it is initiated either by a complaint of some one who feels that he has been unjustly dealt with or upon the motion of the commission itself. There is then a hearing and a decision, and the courts have certain power over the act of the commission. If we are to go into the freight business, does not the Senator think that an individual or a community that feels himself or itself aggrieved by postal rates should have the right to file complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if it is found that the rate is unjust, unfair, and discriminatory that then relief should be given to that person or that community?

Mr. SWANSON. Of course that would depend on whether the Government should finally adopt a rigid zone system and should establish certain definite and fixed rates. If it left with the Interstate Commerce Commission a discretion to fix parcel-post rates, as it does the rates of the express companies, and if there were no zone system, the Senator would be entirely correct. My contention is that the joint commission should investigate the facts and report whether we should have a rigid zone system or whether some other system should be devised by which further discretion in fixing rates independent of a zone system should be given to the Postmaster General, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that, however, hardly reaches the point I suggested. Whenever a rate is fixed, no matter how it is fixed, it affects a great many people. It is unfair, and has been recognized by all the people to be unfair, to fix a freight rate that will affect the business or the welfare of communities or of individuals without giving those communities or those individuals an opportunity to be heard somewhere before some tribunal; and when the individual or the community appears, the question must be judged by some rule, some law laid down by Congress. I hope the Senator from Virginia, reposing as much confidence as he does, and properly so, in the Interstate Commerce Commission, will stand for giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the same power over these rates that we have given that commission over railroad rates and express rates; so that the rights of individuals and of communities can not be judged and foreclosed without an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will say that under the present provision, as I understand, complaint would be first addressed to the Postmaster General, and then the Postmaster General could carry the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. That was put there pending, as I understand, investigation by the joint commission and the reaching of a conclusion by Congress as to what is the wisest and best method ultimately of fixing parcel-post rates. First, we will have to determine whether or not we will establish a flat rate; second, whether or not we are going to have a zone system; and, third, whether the Interstate Commerce Commission, acting on petition of the Postmaster General or of an individual, shall fix rates for the parcel post as it now fixes the rates of express companies.

Mr. CUMMINS. Without giving the people any chance to be heard?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; on complaint. We could arrange that.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no opportunity now.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand this question has been left open for a commission to investigate and report upon it, so as to aid Congress in reaching a conclusion; and my contention is that we do not now have the information and facts upon which to act. I am not prepared, in my own judgment, to say at this time what is the best course to pursue, what is the best limitation to be fixed, and what is the best method of procedure.

Mr. CUMMINS. And in that state of mind the Senator from Virginia wants to put the fortunes of the people of this country into the hands of one man?

Mr. SWANSON. They are not put in the hands of one man. The Postmaster General can hear any complaint, and, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he can fix rates pending the commission's report.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Postmaster General can not receive a complaint; he is not obliged to receive any complaint; and there is no way the Postmaster General can give a hearing.

Mr. SWANSON. He can have hearings, and I have no doubt he has had hearings in this case.

Mr. CUMMINS. But not the kind of hearings the Senator and myself have in mind, where one who is injured appears and desires relief.

Mr. SWANSON. I can recall that when the establishment of the Rural Delivery System was under consideration the same complaint was then made. It was thought wiser, before laws governing it were passed, to let it go through the experimental stages so as to give Congress time to reach a conclusion as to what limitations and what methods were wise and good. I believe when the joint commission, in which I have confidence, gathers the facts and reports when we assemble here for the next session of Congress its recommendations will be given consideration, and I believe the conclusions reached will be wiser than if we were to undertake to legislate now.

Mr. TOWNSEND obtained the floor.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to introduce an amendment and have it printed, if the Senator from Michigan will yield for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the amendment read, so that it will appear in the RECORD, and also to have printed in the RECORD a table showing a comparison of the rates provided by the proposed amendment with the rates now in force.

To state briefly the purpose of the amendment, it is to fix the same standard of pay to the railroads for express matter by the department that is paid to the railroads by the express companies. The amendment also proposes to establish by law the zones as they were established in the law of 1912; and it fixes a system of rates which I think is the best that has been devised up to this time. I ask that the amendment be read, and that in connection with it the paper which I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the proposed amendment as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 12, after the colon, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That for carrying parcel-post matter no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any railroad for such matter carried by such railroad in excess of 50 per cent of the gross receipts by the department under the following charges:

On all matter mailed at the post office from which a rural route starts, for delivery on such route, or mailed at any point on such route for delivery at any other point thereon, or at the office from which the route starts, or on any rural route starting therefrom, and on all matter mailed at a city carrier office, or at any point within its delivery limits, for delivery by carriers from that office, or at any office for local delivery, 4 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 1 cent for each additional 2 pounds or fraction thereof.

For delivery within any zone, as provided in the act, "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, except as provided in the next preceding paragraph, the rates shall be arrived at by multiplying the number of pounds of weight by the number of the zone in which delivery is to be made and adding 3 to the result so obtained: Provided, That the weight limit for parcel-post matter shall be 50 pounds, and that fractions of a pound over the first pound shall be charged for at the pound rate.

Provided further, That for delivery between the Philippine Islands and any portion of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the several Territories and possessions, the rates charged shall be the same as for delivery within the eighth zone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks that a table of comparative rates under the amendment proposed and under the orders of the Postmaster General be printed in the RECORD. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to follows.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will permit me, I merely want to ask for the printing of a brief article, and not to make any extended remarks in connection with the subject at this time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. In connection with this subject and at this time, I ask permission to have published an article on the subject of rates. It is an exhaustive article, not very voluminous, but it treats the subject of a flat rate very thoroughly. I am frank to say that I am not a convert to it, but I think it is well worthy of a place in the RECORD, and I ask that it be published.

Mr. BRYAN. By whom was it prepared?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. By Mr. James L. Cowles, of New York.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator ask that the article be referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am willing that it be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The article will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to ask permission to withdraw the amendment which I have offered and to substitute for it the one which I send to the desk. There are changes in phraseology, but in substance it is the same. If it will interrupt the Senator, I will not trespass upon him——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator wish to have it read?

Mr. OWEN. I want it read just so that it may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, what disposition has been made of the paper submitted by the Senator from New Jersey?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was not authorized to be printed in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the amendment intended to be proposed by me be now read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

And provided further, That no part of the $56,188,000 of any future appropriation shall be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of the fourth-class mail matter of the United States at rates greater than the rates paid to such railroad company by the express companies for like class of service, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power to settle all controverted questions and make its orders necessary to effectuate this provision.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], if I understand it, providing that no greater rate shall be paid by the Government for the carriage of fourth-class mail matter than is paid by the express companies to the railroad companies for a like service would very much improve the administration of the parcel post. So far as I am concerned I am ready to vote for that amendment to the committee amendment, because I can not understand what reasonable objection there can be to it. If Senators are as anxious to render real service in the administration of the parcel post as we have been led to believe in this debate, then there ought not to be any question about the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize that it is a waste of time for Senators at this hour to discuss this question, especially after it has been discussed so long. I would not now attempt to say anything were it not for the fact that I am a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, was a member of the subcommittee which reported and framed this bill, and am also a member of the Parcel Post Commission created by the act of August 24, 1912.

I realize also that it may seem ungracious to take a position different from that occupied by my colleagues on those committees. I have been very pleasantly associated with all of the Senators on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and with no two of its members have I been more intimately connected than with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], and in no two members of the committee have I greater confidence, so far as their ability and patriotism are concerned. I have not differed from them generally on matters affecting the Parcel Post Service. I feel, however, before casting my vote, that it is proper to say that I have not been entirely satisfied with the efforts of this so-called joint commission.

I believe that commission has had great possibilities, not all of which it has improved. I am rather glad it has been continued in this bill. I should not have voted to continue it, however, had I not believed it would be more active in the future than it has been in the past. The question here at issue is one which should be considered from all of its viewpoints, and all the facts materially affecting it presented to the Congress so that it can act intelligently in the matter.

I have felt that the Postmaster General has gone faster than he ought to have gone in making changes in the parcel-post law. There was not sufficient need of such haste as he has made. I have felt that he has not always been entirely frank and fair with the committees of Congress, and especially with the joint commission. I think he had a right to assume that the members of that commission were quite as much in favor of a fair and just parcel post as he was or is himself. It would have been an easy and proper thing for him to have called into conference with him the members of the commission, in order that all could have talked over the matter together; and he might have obtained some light even from Senators, and he certainly would not have been subject to the criticism of ignoring the properly constituted committees of Congress to which I feel he is now subject. I am not satisfied, however, that he has in mind any other object than that of serving the people and of administering his duties as he sees them to the best of his ability.

I was impressed with many of the arguments that have been suggested, to the effect that possibly we were entering upon dangerous ground and that we might be assuming burdens which would be too great a load for the Post Office Department to bear. But I have been to the department several times on my own account and have talked with the various experts who have been employed by the Postmaster General, and candor compels me to say that I am not convinced that the steps already taken will prove disastrous to the Postal Service. I am inclined to believe that under proper administration the parcel-post law, even as changed by the Postmaster General, can be conducted at a profit.

There are very many things connected with this law which are crude, very many things which may result in local wrong, but the present good very much outweighs the bad, and experience will demonstrate wherein corrections should be made. The joint commission, if it gets busy, if it becomes active, can assist very much in future legislation.

This amendment not only prevents any future action on the part of the Postmaster General looking toward enlarging the service, but it prevents him from making any changes in the existing regulations which he has promulgated. If the Postmaster General is convinced that his changes are going to work so badly and are working so badly, I can not believe that he will not himself make changes which will remedy the defects.

But, Mr. President, the merits of this amendment have been discussed to a great extent, whereas the question before us now is whether or not this amendment is in order on the bill. I do believe it is in order.

I realize, of course, that I have voted for general legislation on appropriation bills; but the point of order was not raised against the items, and I would not raise the point of order on legislation in an appropriation bill which was thoroughly understood, about which there was no great controversy, upon which the minds of Congressmen had been settled and fixed and they felt that it ought to be engrafted into the law. Here, however, is a question about which there is great dispute. There is a wide difference of opinion as to this particular matter. Therefore I think we can invoke the rule and not be considered inconsistent in doing so.

There is no question in my mind but that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill. Every argument that has been produced has been to that effect. Every argument that has been presented thus far by the proponents of the amendment has been to show that a change of existing law was desired and that this provision would effect that change. The existing law, whether good or bad, is that the Postmaster General can make certain changes by and with the advice and consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This amendment is proposed to repeal that law. There can be no object in adopting the amendment unless it is to change the law and make it ineffective. Senators may cloud that intent and, by invoking some technicality, hope to divert it into a construction that would mean that it is a limitation. It is not the object, however, to limit this appropriation. The object is to change the law so that the Postmaster General hereafter shall not exercise the discretion that he has exercised in the past.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote to sustain the point of order. I can do it consistently; I can do it and shall do it conscientiously. I want this subject discussed further. I want more light on it than I have now.

I confess that I have doubts of the correctness of my position when I realize that I am differing from men who have given this matter greater study than I have given it, and who are certainly as intensely interested in the parcel post and as much in favor of it as I or any other man can possibly be. When I differ from them I sometimes hesitate and wonder if I am right; but I can not bring myself to the belief that it is our duty, or that it is wise for us at this time to change the law on such information as we possess.

I submit that there will be no change in vested rights during the next year. There can be no great change in the attitude of business toward this service. It will not suffer. When the joint commission does its duty, gets the facts, and presents them to the Senate, we shall be better able to act, and in the meanwhile the great parcel-post law will be unhampered in its operation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want very briefly to call the attention of the Senate back, if I can, to the question before the Senate.

Before I proceed further I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall offer a substitute for the proposed committee amendment; and I will ask the Secretary to read it now, in order that the Senate may know what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, as printed at the foot of page 15, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That no portion of the sums so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of a greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me some Senators have discussed this question from the viewpoint of one who believes that there is an attempt here to destroy or impair in some way the parcel post. I am sure no member of the committee ever had a thought like that. The only purpose of the amendment is to fix and establish existing conditions. The amendment can not be construed to intend to change any rates or to change any weights or any zones. I am talking about the original amendment. Of course the substitute I have offered eliminates that objection. The only purpose of the committee was that the present rates, the present zones, and the present weights should not be changed until authorized by law, or until by experience it could be demonstrated that they were wise or unwise. That is the whole purpose of the original amendment.

It seems that a large number of Senators object to the provision of the amendment which prohibits the Postmaster General from changing the zones or changing the rates as now established. I do not think this is material. I do not think it is so important. I think the important thing to do here is to fix a limit of weight beyond which the Postmaster General, in his discretion, can not go until we have more information on the subject. That is the whole purpose.

I have no apologies whatever to make for my attitude in this matter, but I might be permitted to say that I was here "at the borning" of rural delivery. In the last 27 years I have had perhaps as much to do with that subject as any other Senator on the floor. In season and out of season I have insisted upon its extension. I have given my approval to every suggestion that tended to improve the rural service and to extend it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course, I know the Senator is not referring to any remarks of mine.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not wish to be invidious when I mentioned the two Senators. The reason I mentioned those Senators individually was because I have been associated with them on the joint commission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have the utmost confidence and respect for all the members of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I said "rural delivery," not "parcel post."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well. I should like to have my remarks of esteem and confidence extended to cover all the members of the Post Office Committee who have been actively engaged in the committee work of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right. I have no objection at all to what the Senator said.

I have insisted from time to time, as the business of the rural service grew in point of weight and tonnage, that the salaries of the carriers should be increased. In view of the provisions of the parcel-post law, and in view of the fact that their burdens have been materially increased, we have insisted upon a provision in this bill increasing their salaries further to the amount of $1,200. What I do not want to see, what I do not want to take a chance on, is a condition that, in my judgment, will certainly arise if the weight limit in the Parcel Post System is extended to 100 pounds—that it will materially affect the Rural Delivery Service. It can not be otherwise. To my mind there can not be a doubt that the rural service of the parcel post as it now exists, with a weight limit of 50 pounds, will put out of business three-fourths of the star-route service of the country.

Now, that may be all very well, but there is no instrumentality of this Government that has been received with more favor than the rural delivery. Of course, the star-route service has been with us from the beginning of the Government, but the rural service has largely displaced the star-route service. If this increase is to come, is Congress prepared to make some provision for the star-route service? Or are we willing to say that by our own act we will practically abolish the star-route service, which is so useful and so general in large sections of the country by permitting or authorizing the imposition of a burden that we know it can not carry?

The persons who perform the star-route service are under contract. Most of them are taking their contracts at prices below those which give compensation. These contracts are all competitive and they go to the lowest bidder. In many instances they are bid off at sums for which the people can not afford to render the service; but they give bonds, and when they can not afford to go further and longer and carry more burdens than they contracted to carry they must surrender and their bondsmen must be sued.

When it comes to the Rural Delivery Service, I want to ask Senators in all seriousness if they do not believe a package of 50 pounds imposes too great a burden on the carrier? It must be understood that if people can ship one package containing 50 pounds they can ship five different packages containing 50 pounds, or any other number of packages, providing they do not go above 50 pounds each. How will the rural carriers handle them? That is the question. Can they handle them? Does any Senator believe they can handle them without a large increase in their salaries and a large addition to their equipment?

Most of the rural carriers of this country now transport their mails over their routes in a one-horse or a two-horse buggy. They carry their mails and such parcel post as is tendered them. When, however, they come to carry 50-pound packages and 100-pound packages, or if Congress authorizes the parcel post to carry steam engines and steam shovels and things like that, I do not know how they can get along with their two-horse buggies.

All I want to do, if I can, is to preserve the existing conditions. I have no criticism for the Postmaster General. Why should I? I think he has done the very best he could under the circumstances. I have known him ever since he entered public life. He is a conscientious, honest, diligent public servant. But, Mr. President, we all know that when the head of a great department like the Post Office Department undertakes to solve a problem he must necessarily refer it to some clerks in the department. That always has been true, and that always will be true. They sum up, they get such information as they can, they make their report and their suggestion to the Postmaster General, and he naturally accepts it. He can not do otherwise.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] laid great stress upon the provision of this bill which requires the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission to changes. That provision does require the Postmaster General to submit his proposition for change to the Interstate Commerce Commission; but the same provision requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon it after investigation. These changes doubtless have been submitted under the provisions of this law to the Interstate Commerce Commission; but the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission themselves, when called before the committee to answer questions, said they had not made any investigation of the matter; they had simply accepted the recommendation of the Postmaster General. They could make no investigation, and, as he had recommended it, they had approved it.

That is all right. That is perfectly proper. I am not criticizing the commission. What I want to emphasize, however—and then I shall be through with my suggestions—is that the substitute I have offered for the amendment seems to me to eliminate all proper objection to the committee's original proposition.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has offered an amendment to our suggestion. I am willing to accept that. I think, perhaps, it is an improvement; that is, it goes a little further than we have gone in the direction of adjusting matters in the interest of the people and the consumer. That is all I want. I simply ask the Senate to agree with the committee that the existing conditions shall not be changed until there is an opportunity for further investigation and further examination; that is all.

If the changes heretofore made by the Postmaster General are all right, they are not disturbed, they are not interfered with. The same zones and the same rates apply, and he may change them in his judgment. He may extend zones; he may reduce rates. The only limitation on this appropriation is that he shall not pay any part of this money for the transportation by parcel post of packages that exceed in weight 50 pounds each; that is all.

Will anybody contend that Congress has not the right and the power to put a limitation upon an appropriation that it makes for the public service? I never have heard that Congress did not have that right. Our rules all authorize it, and the placing by Congress of limitations upon appropriations never has been regarded as new legislation or as changing existing law.

I hope we shall get a vote on this matter to-night. Of course I am not suggesting that any Senator ought not to be heard. I want the subject to have full and free discussion, but I hope we may have an opportunity to vote on it during the afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks to substitute a certain proviso, which has been read to the Senate, in lieu of the proviso offered by the committee, as there is a point of order pending as to that. The substitution can not be made except by unanimous consent. Is there any objection to the substitution?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I object for the time being.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question here as to procedure, if the Senator from Utah will allow me, without delaying him. Do I understand that the Senator from Alabama withdraws the committee amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer a substitute for it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the Senator withdraws the committee amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be considered as withdrawing it. I offer a substitute to take the place of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator can not withdraw it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the committee amendment is still pending?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it is not pending, because I have offered a substitute for it. It is pending unless the Senate adopts the substitute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand, the committee amendment can not be withdrawn without the consent of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. It can not be withdrawn without the consent of the Senate while the point of order is pending.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any substitute pending, then?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no substitute now pending, because the Senator from Utah has objected to the substitution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, to my mind the substitute which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] suggests does not cover the difficulty. It reaches only one phase of it. While I should have no objection to his proposed substitute going in as an amendment to this paragraph in case the proviso now pending before the Senate should be defeated, I very much prefer the committee amendment, and I should like an apportunity of voting upon it directly.

I rose, however, for the purpose of discussing the point of order. Perhaps I ought to apologize to the Senate for undertaking to do that, because we have spent two or three days in discussing everything but the question which is before the Senate. I know it is the habit of the Senate to discuss the merits of questions upon points of order. After all, however, the immediate question before the Senate is whether or not the amendment proposed by the committee is in order, and I wish very briefly to address myself to that question.

The substantive provision of the paragraph to which this amendment is a proviso is:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000.

That is an appropriation. To that substantive provision there are already two provisos. One of them reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying the mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., other than upon a mileage basis.

Then there is another proviso relating to another subject. The third proviso is the one which has been suggested by the committee.

Mr. President, a provision of law may be interpreted in one way where it is written into the statute in a substantive form and in an entirely different way where it is written into the law in the form of a proviso. The very object of a proviso is to limit the generality of the substantive paragraph to which it is a proviso. The courts will always interpret the proviso as being a limitation upon the substantive part of the paragraph unless it is clear, I might say beyond a reasonable doubt, that it was intended as an independent provision by itself.

In other words, if we were to write into this bill a separate and distinct provision in the language of this proviso, but leaving off the words "and provided further," and having it read only that there shall be no change in the existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones of fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law, then there could be no question but that it would be general legislation. It would then stand by itself as an independent and substantive provision. But that is not what we do. We have made a provision for an appropriation, and we add to that provision the language "And provided further, That there shall be no change," and so on. It is precisely as though we were to say, "For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000, but notwithstanding the appropriation of this amount of money there shall be no change in existing rates." It is a limitation upon that substantive provision, and the courts would so interpret it.

I call attention very briefly to the language of one or two authorities. They are innumerable upon this subject, but I content myself by calling attention to only one or two. In the second volume of Sutherland's Statutory Construction, section 352, it is said, speaking of a proviso:

It is to be construed in connection with the section of which it forms a part, and it is substantially an exception. If it be a proviso to a particular section, it does not apply to others unless plainly intended. It should be construed with reference to the immediately preceding parts of the clause to which it is attached.

Mr. President, suppose a motion should be made here to strike out this appropriation and that motion should be sustained in the Senate and we should strike from the bill the words "For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000," taking out of the bill the substantive provision entirely, is it not clear that the provisos would fall with it? They are dependent upon it; they are attached to it; they have nothing to apply to if we get rid of the substantive provision. They depend for their existence upon the substitutive provision. By the very language "provided" we have declared a limitation upon the appropriation which would cease when the appropriation ceased. It would be the same as if there had been a repeal; and as to that the same author says, at section 351:

A proviso is so identified with the text of a statute which it qualifies that if such enacting part is repealed by a subsequent statute repugnant to it, the proviso will fall also.

Because it is perfectly manifest when Congress uses the word "provided," it means to qualify the preceding words and it intends that there shall be no qualification except in connection with the substantive provision of the statute. The question, I think, has been squarely ruled by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Minis v. United States (15 Peters, p. 445). After calling attention to the statute which was involved in that case, which, by the way, was an appropriation bill, the court proceeds:

That act, after making the specific appropriations, contains the following proviso: "Provided, That no officers of the Army shall receive any per cent, or additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatsoever, on account of the disbursing any public money appropriated by law during the present session for fortifications, execution of surveys, works of internal improvement, building of arsenals, purchase of public supplies of any description"—

Now mark—

"or for any other service or duty whatsoever unless authorized by law."

I can not imagine any language more general in its form than that, but it constitutes a part of a proviso to a specific appropriation, precisely as this forms a proviso to a specific appropriation. The court says:

The argument on behalf of the United States is that this proviso, although found in a mere appropriation law of a limited nature, is to be construed, by reason of the words "or for any other service or duty whatsoever, unless authorized by law," to be permanent in its operation and applicable to all future appropriations, where officers of the Army are employed in such service or duty; and that it appears from the record that this was the very ground on which the Treasury Department rejected the claim of Dr. Minis for commissions. The same question has been made and fully argued in the case of Gratiot v. The United States, at the present term, and we have given it our deliberate consideration. We are of opinion that such is not the true interpretation of the terms of the proviso, and that it is limited exclusively to appropriations made at the session of 1835.

Mr. President, I direct the attention of Senators particularly to the language which follows:

It would be somewhat unusual to find engrafted upon an act making special and temporary appropriation any provision which was to have a general and permanent application to all future appropriations. Nor ought such an intention on the part of the legislature to be presumed, unless it is expressed in the most clear and positive terms, and where the language admits of no other reasonable interpretation. The office of a proviso generally is either to except something from the enacting clause or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of it, as extending to cases not intended by the legislature to be brought within its purview. A general rule, applicable to all future cases, would most naturally be expected to find its proper place in some distinct and independent enactment.

Exactly the same thing may be said and must be said of this proviso. If Congress intended to make a general rule—in other words, to pass a general law applicable to all other cases wholly independent of this appropriation—we would expect to find it inserted as an independent proposition, not associated as it is here with this appropriation. The very fact that Congress does associate it with the appropriation, does say that it is a proviso to the appropriation, is sufficient to show that Congress intended that it should come into existence with the appropriation and go out of existence with the appropriation.

This appropriation is made for a year. Yet it might be repealed to-morrow. If it were repealed to-morrow, then the proviso would go with it. It is tied to it; it belongs with it. If the appropriation is not repealed, it is only in operation for the fiscal year, and at the end of the fiscal year it lapses. Precisely the same rule would apply as though it had been repealed. When the substantive provision ends, everything that comes into existence because of the substantive provision will end also.

For my part I can not come to any other conclusion than that this is to be construed, as the language plainly indicates and as the courts have held repeatedly, as a limitation only upon the substantive provision, and that it will end when the appropriation has served its purpose; and if next year we shall make a precisely similar appropriation for that year, but shall not repeat the proviso, then this proviso will be at an end.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to a statement made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], which showed that a rather peculiar condition of affairs exists in connection with this Parcel Post Service. A claim was made that the express companies carry packages from Chicago to some other point at a price which is much less than that charged by the Government, I think a dollar and some odd cents less on a total charge of $1.35, and that they had an arrangement with the railroad company by which they divided with it the profits or the price charged to the customer, the railways charging the Government a rate greatly in excess of that which they made to the express companies. It seemed to me that that might account for some of the large cost of the service attributed to the parcel post, and that therein might lie an evil that Congress has the power to correct; and if so, that it should do it. It seems to me, in other words, that the Government has as much right to receive a fair transportation rate from the railway companies as has a private corporation which is in direct competition with it, and that it is wrong for any other condition to exist.

There was another point in respect to zone rates which attracted my attention, and I think there should be discussion upon it. It seems to me that there is a solution of the question which is reasonable and which would work out satisfactorily. The present Postmaster General, or for that matter any Postmaster General, is bound by the rules and regulations which are made by Congress. If we are ever to get good service from him and he is ever to be able to fix equitable rates, rates which will apply justly under differing conditions—and conditions do differ all over the country on account of geographical, climatic, and other forces—he ought to be given the right to fix the rates to meet such conditions and be allowed to put them into effect, and then be compelled to report to Congress for its approval of what he has done. That is the only way I have ever seen the superintendency of a large concern carried out successfully. Congress can not fix the rates. What do the majority of the Members of the Senate know about local conditions of roads and trails in the State of Idaho, or in Oregon, or in the mountainous regions of California or Nevada? We could not fix such rates. Yet there is a rate which can be made in each case, which will be fair, and which at the same time will prevent the merchant or the miner from overloading the mails with bulky material, for the reason that he can do it more cheaply than if he hired the method of transportation which other people have to use.

The Postmaster General ought to be allowed to exercise his judgment in all such cases. He ought to be allowed to say what zones and what particular districts should pay a certain rate, and report it here and get the consent of Congress to enforce it and have pretty large liberty in adjusting those things and be held responsible for the successful conduct of such affairs in his department. There is no other way, in my opinion, by which you will ever arrive at a system of just rates.

I am not in favor of the provision which has been reported by the committee. I am in favor of enlarging the power and of reposing the executive power in the hands of the Postmaster General, and if he does not make good, get some one in his place who can do so. It may be that he will have to employ a traffic man, a man particularly well informed and posted on that line of work. It is a difficult proposition, and yet it can be worked out, and worked out equitably. If so, let him do it.

I am of the opinion also that the people are not suffering so badly, although in individual cases there may be a difference in this respect, as they suffered when they were helpless in the hands of the express companies. It has been urged that there may be a deficit of $30,000,000. Just a few years ago the express companies were reported to be making a profit of $300,000,000 a year in the express business of this country. It is better for the people to pay out $30,000,000 a year than to pay $300,000,000. There was one express company reported two years ago, I think it was, that they had on their hands, left over from unjust overcharges alone from the flotsam and jetsam of their business, moneys which they were unable to return to the people who paid it to them for the reason that they could not locate them, a sum of money nearly equal to their total capitalization. Millions of dollars of money were gathered in by them through overcharges made against their customers. Nice way of doing business, that. These are the people who now fear that the Government may coddle the farmers and others of this country.

The burden has been onerous and heavy upon the people of this country in the past, and that is the reason why we have inaugurated and entered upon the parcel-post system.

I do not think there is anything too good for the American people. I do not think there is any function of the Government which is higher or a duty greater than that by which it gives to the greatest number of people the greatest public service possible. The Government is under obligations to do that, and it is not a good government if it fails to do so.

In New Zealand they have a parcel-post system, and the farmers are encouraged in many ways by Government aid. It loans money directly to them and make the farmers pay it back with interest, and the Government makes money by the transaction. There came a time, when the Boer War broke out, that the farmers of New Zealand had large quantities of mutton for sale, and the soldiers needed it; yet the transportation companies stepped in and raised freight rates and fixed an arbitrary charge upon its transporation which absorbed all the profit.

The representative of the Government called in the agents of the ships which carried the meat in cold storage and asked them if they would not lower their price. They positively refused to do so, upon which he notified them that the Government would immediately put on a line of steamers of its own if fair rates were not established. The transportation companies met the situation by restoring the former rates.

No one wishes to do any injustice to the express companies; I as little as any other man. I would not take a cent away from them that they fairly earn; but at the same time I would not allow them to impose in the slightest degree upon the people. If the Government should carry on the business and enlarge its zones and benefit the farmer and others without losing money, or even if in some isolated cases it does lose money, when in the main it makes a profit and is for the general benefit, I believe it is the duty of Congress to see that the people get the opportunity to receive that service. I do not think there can be a question about it. There may be questions of details, but merely those.

I think, as I said in the first place, and I close with the statement, that the remedy in my opinion is a simple one. It is not in restricting the power of the Postmaster General. It is to give the Postmaster General the legal executive authority with large powers to carry out in detail the will and wishes of the people, and then hold him strictly responsible for the results. In that way we will accomplish more good, I think, than we will in any other way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask the Senator to withhold that motion a moment if he will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly; I withhold the motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I feel a deep interest in the pending amendment, and had hoped to be able to take part in the discussion. I have not been very well for some weeks, and I have been denied the opportunity to participate in the discussion and consideration of legislation here, some of them measures of very great importance. But desirous of getting some information from the department which I thought would bear upon the consideration of this question, I addressed a communication to the Postmaster General, and received from him the reply which I send to the desk and ask to have read. In this connection I ask to have printed in the RECORD certain tables which accompany the communication. I will say, Mr. President, if these can be printed so as to appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning, I think Senators may find them interesting and perhaps useful in the further consideration of the pending measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1914.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of the 25th instant requesting certain information relative to the administration of the parcel post, I beg to inclose herewith certain statistical data covering the number of parcels handled in the 50 largest offices of the United States between the 1st and 15th of October, 1913, with the costs in connection therewith. These data are not estimates, but accurate records kept in the post offices at the time each parcel was handled. There is also inclosed a statement (Table 3) showing the estimated profit on each parcel handled throughout the country, based on the data referred to above, but applying the rates effective January 1, 1914. These statistics clearly indicate that at the present rates there is a safe margin of profit on this business. In estimating the cost of administering this service it has been assumed that the railroads are actually paid at the present rates of transportation for every parcel transported, so that any readjustment of the railway pay, unless the rates are fixed higher than at present, would not increase the estimated cost of the service. The average haul in all instances is based on the radial distance of the zones excepting the eighth, where it is 2,200 miles. In actual practice, however, the average haul would not be as much as the radial distance of the zones. This would still further lessen the estimated cost shown in Table 3. In preparing Table 3 not only has every cost chargeable to the Parcel Post Service been included but an allowance made for unforeseen charges. Thus the cost indicated is really more rather than less than the actual cost of the service.

The Parcel Post Service was in effect only six months of the fiscal year 1913, yet the audited receipts for that year exceeded the audited expenditures by $4,510,650.91. This is the best showing in the history of the service. The audit of the accounts for the first two quarters of the current year is not yet available. While the expenditures of the first quarter of the fiscal year always exceed the receipts of the quarter, the best information obtainable at this time indicates that the deficit for the quarter ended September 30, 1913, will be materially less than for the corresponding quarter of 1912, notwithstanding the increased cost of administering the service, due to the 8-in-10-hour law, the granting of compensatory time on account of the Sunday service of clerks and carriers, and because of the parcel post.

The first reduction in rates of postage and increase in the weight limit ordered by the Postmaster General became effective August 15, 1913, and notwithstanding these reductions in rates and the great reduction in the parcel-post rates over the old fourth-class rates, the receipts at the 50 largest offices during the month of December, 1913, as well as for the entire December quarter, show an unprecedented increase over those of the corresponding periods of previous years.

No changes have been made in the weight limit and rates until after most searching investigations and careful consideration as to the effect on the revenues of the service. The administration of this facility has been highly commended by the public, and all changes have been in the interest of the public as well as more efficient and effective service, with every caution in safeguarding the revenues.

Sincerely, yours,

DANIEL C. ROPER,
Acting Postmaster General.

The tables referred to are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art above, beneath, around, within us, our Father and Friend, our Refuge and our Strength, our Life and our Inspiration, quicken our susceptibilities, renew a right spirit within, that whatsoever we do this day may be in the full consciousness of Thine approval; that the earth may be more beautiful, the stars shine brighter, and our intercourse with our fellow men be more cordial and sympathetic; that we may go on our way rejoicing, trusting in Thy loving kindness and tender mercies after the manner of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISCRIMINATION IN PRICES.

Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13305, to prevent discrimination in prices and to provide for publicity of prices to dealers and to the public, be reprinted, with the following correction: In paragraph C, line 10, page 3, after the word "thereof," insert the words "to dealers."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 13305, with the correction which he has stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORT OF PHILIPPINE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 798).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13612, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], and, without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, what is the parliamentary situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is to strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000," at the end of line 18, page 33, and the gentleman's amendment is the pending question.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to debate that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to debate the amendment at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes and that I may have five minutes, so that the committee may understand the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I request that there be 10 minutes on a side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not consent to that. I think five minutes are ample for a statement of what the facts are.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes and that he may have five minutes on the pending amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] for five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is now pending is to increase the amount from $3,000 to $30,000 for the purpose of printing research work on industrial diseases and industrial accidents and other reports which are now compiled ready for printing. If this appropriation is not made, the Bureau of Labor Statistics will be unable to print this matter, that is of great importance to the people of our country in the industries, until next year, and then probably will not be able to do so unless they are given this amount in excess of what they would otherwise need. In other words, appropriating this money now, if this matter is to be printed at all after it is prepared, will not cost any more than it would to wait until after July 1, and it seems to me the people who wish this sort of information so that they will be better able to protect the working people from industrial diseases and industrial accidents will be unable to secure this important information for that purpose. Not only are their reports compiled and ready for printing on matters of this kind, but there are other publications in regard to arbitration, a matter that may come up in this House before the next fiscal year, and it will be information that would be of importance and enlightening to the Members of this House. There are compiled and ready for printing the labor laws of this country, which have not been compiled and printed since 1907, which is also of importance and of interest and of great value to the people of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be thought by some here that because I am known as a labor man that I am in excess in asking these appropriations for the laboring people. The other day I offered an amendment for $29,000 for the continuation of the research work on industrial diseases and industrial accidents, that this work might not be delayed, that its value might not be lost; and, in spite of the fact, a few short days ago this Congress gave its unanimous consent to $600,000, to which I raise no objection, for the purpose of preventing hog cholera and diseases of animals, withheld that $29,000 that human beings may be protected against the ravages of industrial diseases and industrial accidents. I say I believe every Member of this House who understands this question will not withhold his consent for a small request of this kind. It was said, of course, by those who oppose that somebody somewhere had been a little bit irregular. Many of us know that that department is in the state of organization; that it has taken other bureaus, and it was necessary to reorganize it. It may have been a matter of importance, for all I know, to hew strictly to the line, as the law would be construed by my friend from New York, who stands on technicalities at the sacrifice of humanity. It may be so; I do not know; but I do not believe the law has been violated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I have only five minutes; I wish I had more time, so that I could yield. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the gentleman any proposition to make as to this—how he can get laboring men to read these reports? I have a great many of them, and I find it difficult to get the men to read, for instance, in relation to mine accidents.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will say this to the gentleman: When I was a laboring man I appreciated information of this sort, and I asked for and got it, even under Republican administration, and is seems to me that the Democratic Party, that has made the declaration that it is for the laboring people, ought at least to be as considerate to the laboring people as the Republicans were.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment is to strike out, in line 18, page 33, "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000." The Department of Labor was given, out of the appropriations of the Department of Commerce and Labor in the segregation of appropriations, $84,000 for printing and binding for the current year.

An estimate was submitted at this session of Congress for a deficiency appropriation of $8,000. The committee has reported an item of $3,000, and in addition has inserted in this bill a provision that certain paper purchased for use in printing by the Department of Labor might be used, so as to obviate the necessity of charging against the printing appropriations the cost of paper to the extent it is now on hand. On Tuesday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] moved to strike out the amount carried in the bill and insert the $8,000, the amount estimated for by the Department of Labor, and the committee refused to adopt that amendment. He thereupon moved to strike out the "$3,000" and insert "$30,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes. Will not the gentleman state that I offered an amendment for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and it was ruled out of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have only five minutes, and I do not wish to be interrupted. I desire the committee to have the facts. The motion is to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$30,000," and the purpose of that amendment is to put at the disposal of the Department of Labor, for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, $28,000 additional that is said to be required to print certain bulletins that are ready for printing or that it is believed would be ready to print before the expiration of the current fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, there was no estimate submitted at this session of Congress by the Department of Labor for this money. In the investigation conducted by the Committee on Appropriations the statistician of the Bureau of Labor Statistics stated as incidental to the investigation that there were certain publications prepared and in the course of preparation which it had not been possible to print, and he asked leave to insert in the record a list of these publications. It appeared in that investigation that out of the $84,000 appropriated and made available for the Department of Labor during this fiscal year the Bureau of Labor Statistics was given $32,000 for printing. Its entire pay roll amounts to only $69,000, and they are now asking $28,000 in addition to the $32,000 already appropriated in order to spend $60,000 for printing the work done by a force with a pay roll of $69,000.

Mr. Chairman, a list was read the other day of the documents and bulletins, either in preparation or ready for print. Among some of these documents the gentlemen assert are so valuable and should be printed at once is one giving the retail prices of commodities from 1890 to 1913. Does anyone in this House believe that printing the retail prices of commodities for the past 23 years will give any valuable information to anyone in this country or that anyone here will ever read or use the list?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. I have only five minutes. No investigation was made as to the manner in which the $32,000 placed at the disposal of this bureau was expended, because no request was made for this additional money for printing for the bureau. But after the bill was reported to the House, and after the House had reached the provision, gentlemen rise and charge that this committee has refused the necessary appropriation to enable this bureau to do its work. If we are to appropriate not only the amount of the department's estimates, but, in addition, money that the departments may believe may be desirable, but do not even ask Congress to appropriate, relying upon individual Members to introduce amendments on the floor therefor, then the record of this Congress will be such that not even our most bitter political opponents could anticipate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 52.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 63.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no part of any money appropriated in this or any other act shall be used for compensation or payment of expenses of accountants or other experts in inaugurating new or changing old methods of transacting the business of the United States or the District of Columbia unless authority for employment of such services or payment of such expenses is stated in specific terms in the act making provision therefor and the rate of compensation for such services or expenses is specifically fixed therein, or be used for compensation of or expenses for persons aiding or assisting such accountants or other experts, unless the rate of compensation of or expenses for such assistants is fixed by officers or employees of the United States or District of Columbia having authority to do so, and such rates of compensation or expenses so fixed shall be paid only to the person so employed.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against section 4, and I make the point of order against the words "or any other," in line 5, page 46.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BROWN] reserves a point of order against section 4, as to the words "or any other," in line 5, page 46.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, section 2 of Rule XXI provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

And so forth.

This amendment limits the compensation that can be paid to persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I submit it is clearly within the rule. The purpose for which the Holman rule was adopted by the House was to enable it to reduce or to limit or to restrict the compensation of officials paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is mistaken in the effects which the adoption of this section, or rather these words in the section, would have. Instead of limiting appropriations, instead of effecting economy, instead of being a retrenchment in the Government service, I maintain it would have exactly the opposite effect for this reason: This section, and these words especially, require that before any expert advice can be had with regard to a change of the methods of administering the Government's affairs, it shall be specifically stated how much the expert's messenger boy, or anybody employed by him, shall receive; how much the junior clerk and how much the senior clerk shall receive, and so on.

Now, I maintain, Mr. Chairman, if you want expert advice you have to pay for the expert at the head of the firm, and you do not have to arrange for the payment of the subordinates of that expert. If, for instance, I went into the office of a distinguished lawyer with a case and wanted his opinion and gave the case to him to handle, I could certainly not get any less of a bill from him if I arranged with him as to how much his office boy was to receive, how much his junior or senior clerk or chief clerk were to receive, while hunting up the records or the precedents in the matter. And I claim that the very fact that it requires the Committee on Appropriations and Congress to state exactly what shall be done with any particular sum of money usually appropriated in the contingent fund for expert advice, subject to the discretion of the disbursing officer, would nullify the service for which that money is intended.

The executive officers of the Government could not in contingencies employ people and make more efficient the Government's business methods if this section were adopted, and consequently it is not retrenchment under the Holman rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, my colleague from New York [Mr. BROWN], has not had as much experience with governmental affairs as he has had with business affairs or he would not make the statement he has made regarding the arrangement that it is necessary to make with these experts. For instance, it appears in the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations that recently an expert was employed in the Treasury Department four or five months, and this is the examination as it developed:

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know what his compensation was?

Mr. WILMETH. His own compensation was $50 a day.

Mr JOHNSON. What allowance did he have?

Mr. WILMETH. He had a per diem allowance of $5 per day, besides traveling expenses.

Mr. JOHNSON What allowance did he have for assistants?

Mr. WILMETH. Twenty-five dollars a day for senior assistants with per diem of $4 additional and railroad expenses; also $12.50 for junior assistants with no per diem.

Not in this case, but in another case that came to the attention of some of the Members of the House at one time, it appeared that one of these experts was employed in one of the departments of the Government at $50 a day, with an allowance of $12.50 a day for his assistants; and one of those assistants, for whose services the Government was apparently paying this extra $12.50 a day, came up to the Capitol to ascertain if there was anybody or any means by which he could compel the expert to pay him the difference between the $12.50 which the Government paid for his services and the $15 a week which he received from the expert, who collected the $12.50 a day.

It was information of this character that determined the committee to recommend this provision—that wherever it is proposed to employ experts for the purpose of installing new methods or changing the existing methods of various departments of the Government no lump appropriation should be used for that purpose unless authority is specifically given and the compensation specifically authorized.

Under the law at present there is no limitation whatever upon the compensation that may be paid. This provision restricts the compensation that may be paid, and therefore I contend that it is a reduction of the compensation paid to the officials or persons employed and paid out of the Treasury, and it is in order in this bill.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the statement of my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] that my experience in governmental matters has not been long or deep. But the determination of this question seems to have become a practical matter of the business of accountancy.

Some years ago, when certain insurance companies were being investigated in the city of New York, I did some work under the direction of these accountants, and I found, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has suggested, that some of the clerks were not receiving in full the amount which the company was paying for their services to the accountants. One reason was that the accountants were short of clerks trained to the work and had to send over to Europe, bring those clerks over for a comparatively few months, and send them back. But another reason is that when one employs accountants of any value at all one employs them for the brains of the man at the top. If I hire an accountant to hunt up some record I can telephone any time during business hours and immediately I can be furnished with the requisite number of people who can go into the particular transaction which I wish to have investigated and check it up. For that privilege I have to pay a certain percentage for office rent and charges and that sort of thing when paying for the services rendered.

I claim that anything that tends to limit the discretion of officers who may need public accountants for the retrenchment of the public expenses is not germane to this act and should be stricken out, because its adoption would definitely prevent the economical administration of the public business.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the chairman of the committee under which one of the branches of the Holman rule this section comes? It does not reduce the number or salary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The provision is—

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask the chairman further to specify more particularly what portion of the section brings it within that language. I mean more particularly what language is there in it that does not leave the question a matter of speculation simply as to whether or not the amount so paid will be reduced?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, there is no one part of the section. It is the effect of the entire provision that does so, Mr. Chairman. If any part were eliminated, of course the provision would not accomplish its purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question in the Chair's mind is whether the provisions of the section clearly result in retrenchment in that way, or whether it is not a mere matter of speculation whether they would or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe it does. I can not admit it does not, if that is what the Chair wishes me to do. I contend that it does do it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question, whether it would necessarily result in retrenchment or in a reduction of expenses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no doubt about the result, because anyone who is now employed would immediately go off the pay roll because there is no specific authority for compensation fixed. If this provision be adopted, the services of any person employed as an accountant out of lump appropriations would terminate. It is inevitable from the adoption of this provision, unless the provision carried in the appropriation specifically authorizes his services and fixes his compensation. Wherever these so-called experts are now employed, with the enactment of this provision they must cease to be paid out of the Treasury, and there is such an appropriation in existence. It is carried in the legislative act for the current year. I shall read the provision to the Chair so that he will see how this provision will operate. For instance, in the legislative, executive, and judicial act for the current fiscal year, approved March 4, 1913, is this provision:

For investigation and experimentation and to secure better methods of administration, with a view to increased efficiency or to greater economy in the expenditure of public money, including necessary traveling expenses, in connection with special work, or obtaining of better administrative methods, in any branch of the service within or under the Treasury Department, including the temporary employment of agents, stenographers, accountants, or other expert services either within or without the District of Columbia, $20,000.

Under that authority the employment which I previously mentioned was made. After the enactment of this provision any persons employed as—accountants, or other experts in inaugurating new or changing old methods of transacting the business of the United States or the District of Columbia—would seek other employment, because there is not fixed in that provision the specific compensation which can be paid to them.

Mr. BROWN of New York. If the gentleman has concluded, I would suggest that if he has reference only to certain persons employed in the Treasury Department, those persons have been paid and their services dispensed with for many weeks. This section does not show anything on its face, as the precedents in Hinds' fourth volume require, which will effect any retrenchment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the chairman of the committee has said, the enactment of this particular provision in this bill unquestionably will immediately result in a reduction of expenses, because a man who is doing work in the department, who is paid either out of the contingent fund of the department or out of a fund which has been appropriated for the purpose of inaugurating new systems of accounting, will immediately go off the pay roll unless the provision has been created by law and the salary fixed by law. Therefore this provision instantly reduces expenditures.

But I will call the attention of the Chair to the very clear ruling made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], that it is not absolutely necessary that the bill itself shall specify the number of horses that are going to be reduced, as in the military appropriation bill, but that the ultimate result of the legislation will reduce the charges against the Federal Treasury. But this is even stronger than that, because it instantly takes off the pay roll all those men who have been employed without specific authority of law.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Are there any such, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; but whether they were or not——

Mr. BROWN of New York. On the face of the bill, how can it be told that there is going to be any reduction of expenditures, if there are no such persons?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman loses sight of the fact that these appropriations have been made for these purposes. Now, if you enact this provision of law, it will be necessary that the salaries of these men shall be fixed by law. If not, the department could fix their salaries at any amount.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Exactly.

Mr. SISSON. There is no limit to the amount.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Exactly.

Mr. SISSON. And the immediate result of this would be to reduce expenditures, because in the department where they are doing this work they will have to get the authority to fix the salaries and the number of employees. It is necessary that this be done, so that Congress can control the methods in which the money is being expended.

Most of the legislation of this kind, Mr. Chairman, comes up because the various committees of the House find abuses existing, as we found some abuses here. It is not necessary to go into all these matters, but these abuses were apparent to your committee, and in order that we might be sure to reduce the expenses and control the expenditure of this money this very wise legislation is put in this bill. As an Appropriations Committee we could not report it, and your committee would not have reported it if they had not been absolutely sure that the effect of this would be to reduce and curtail expenses.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to infer from the gentleman's own statement that the only object of this provision was to dispense with the abuse claimed to be occasioned by the employment of certain accountants in the Treasury Department, whose services, as I have stated, were dispensed with weeks ago, and with reference to whom everything is paid and settled. I do not think that the discretion heretofore had of employing certified public accountants, with such limited funds as the Committee on Appropriations may give them, should be taken from these executive officers. They ought to be allowed to jump in at any minute and get somebody whom they need to correct any irregularity or extravagance. The whole question should rather be reserved to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. A bill can be brought in by that committee if they think it necessary. This section has no place in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it appears from the language of the section with reasonable certainty that the effect of it must be to reduce expenses and to bring it within the purview of the Holman rule. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BROWN of New York. I withdraw the point of order against the paragraph, but I move to strike out the words "or any other."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the words "or any other," in line 5 on page 46. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 5, strike out the words "or any other."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] desire to make a motion to recommit? He so warned the Chair.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have considered the matter, and I shall not make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, H. R. 13453; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on the bill be confined to six hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to six hours, three hours to be controlled by himself and three hours by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13453, the Army appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much time in general debate on this bill. I simply want to call the attention of the committee to what the bill carries in the way of appropriations. The total estimates submitted by the War Department aggregate $104,947,758. The bill carries an appropriation of $94,214,173, a reduction of $10,733,585 from the estimates.

The amount appropriated for the last fiscal year was $94,241,145, so this bill carries about $27,000 below what was carried in the bill last year.

It may be proper for me to say that a large portion of this estimate pertained to artillery guns and artillery ammunition, and the committee reduced the amount asked for in the case of artillery guns from $2,100,000 to $750,000, and in the case of artillery ammunition from $3,000,000 to $1,000,000. The appropriation asked for is for the purpose of creating a reserve and not for the current use of the Army.

The fortifications bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations carries a reserve for field artillery guns of $450,000, which, with the $750,000 carried in this bill, makes a reserve fund for field artillery guns of $1,200,000. That bill also carries $900,000 for field artillery ammunition, which, added to $1,000,000 carried in this bill, makes $1,900,000 for the reserve for field artillery ammunition.

Taking the evidence of Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, I think it will be found that these two appropriations carried in these two bills really give more money than can be used by the department or by the Ordnance Bureau during the fiscal year.

So that, in my opinion, we have provided all that is necessary and all that the Ordnance Bureau can use, unless it goes outside for the purpose of acquiring and procuring these guns and ammunition. The provisions of this bill and those carried in the fortifications bill provide that all of this reserve artillery and ammunition shall be manufactured in the Government plants, and that none shall be procured outside. In view of the fact that it was testified to by the Chief of Ordnance and the Chief of Staff that we have now in reserve 20 per cent of ammunition sufficient for an Army of 570,000 men and 57 per cent of guns in reserve for an Army of 570,000 men, it seems to me the amount carried in this bill for the purpose of reserve ammunition is ample. There is, in my judgment, no reason why it should be any larger than it is.

There is no likelihood of any war which would make it necessary to make larger appropriations in this bill. I want to call especial attention to the fact that this bill is altogether for the Army in time of peace, and it does not in any way contemplate war. If war should unfortunately occur, Congress could then appropriate the money necessary. I know it will be said that you can not manufacture this ammunition and these guns quickly. That is true, but there is no necessity, so far as we can decide, nor does the War Department contemplate, that there is any necessity for making in this bill an appropriation which contemplates war. The Chief of Staff was asked in the hearings whether or not in his recommendation for this ammunition and field guns he had made it in view of the situation in Mexico, and he distinctly said he had not.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. How does the amount carried in this bill for reserve ammunition compare with the amount appropriated for a similar purpose in prior years?

Mr. HAY. Two hundred and fifty thousand more than it was last year for ammunition and $250,000 less for guns. The reason of that was that the appropriation for guns was so much greater than ammunition that we thought we ought to give more for ammunition this time than we gave for guns. The expenditure of this $1,000,000 for ammunition and $750,000 for guns will aid very materially the reserve.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman recall how the appropriation of last year compared with prior years?

Mr. HAY. In 1910 and 1911 the War Department made no estimates whatever for these items. In 1912 we carried a small appropriation for guns and ammunition.

Now, a great deal has been said, Mr. Chairman, about the question of reserves, and I bring that matter in for the reason that I want to put in the RECORD a statement given to me by the Commissioner of Education, showing the number of men who in 1913 attended the agricultural and mechanical colleges of the country and who were required to take part in military drill.

In 1913 in agricultural and mechanical colleges there were enrolled 67,021, and of those 26,167 were reported as taking a military drill. Outside of these agricultural and mechanical colleges in 1906 there were 53 universities and colleges which had 8,174 young men who were required to take military drill.

Also in 1906, the last year statistics were compiled, there were 105 public high schools, where they had 9,427 in military drill, so that if you bring it down to the present time, there are now, as near as I can average and estimate it, very nearly 75,000 young men who are being drilled every year in this country, and, in my judgment, they constitute a reserve much better than can be obtained by paying for it, and it is obtained at no cost whatever to the Government except the money which the Government pays to these agricultural schools.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print these statistics which I hold in my hand, referring to these military schools, as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the idea of the chairman of the committee that these young men would be available in case of need?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I think they would be the very men who would be most apt to volunteer in case of any trouble, if this country were so unfortunate as to have it.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to consume any more of the time of the committee unless some one desires to ask me some questions in regard to the provisions of the bill. Under leave to print, I insert herewith the tables to which I have referred:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, February 19, 1914.

Hon. JAMES HAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAY: In reply to your letter of February 12 regarding military instruction in schools in the United States, I am sending herewith a memorandum and statistical tables prepared by the statistician of this bureau.

Sincerely, yours, P. P. CLAXTON, Commissioner.

MEMORANDUM.

In 1913 the 68 agricultural and mechanical colleges had an enrollment of 67,021 men in all departments. Of these 26,167 were reported in military drill. The item relating to military drill has not been included in the statistical schedules sent to other institutions since 1906.

In 1906 there were 53 universities and colleges other than the agricultural and mechanical colleges reporting students in military drill. The 53 institutions had an enrollment of 15,437 men, and of these 8,174 were in military drill. The same year the 66 agricultural and mechanical colleges had an enrollment of 44,852 men, 18,620 of these receiving military drill.

Table 1, sent herewith, is a list of the 53 institutions mentioned above, with the male enrollment and the number in military drill.

Table 2 shows that in 1906 there were 105 public high schools, with an enrollment of 18,930 boys, having 9,427 in military drill; also 132 private high schools, with 9,151 boys enrolled, and 8,291 of these in military drill.

Table 3 is a recapitulation of the 1906 figures. It will be noted that since 1906 the enrollment of men in the agricultural and mechanical colleges has increased by 22,169 and the number in military drill by 7,547.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Did I understand the gentleman to say, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], that there had been an increase in the appropriation for ammunition?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Referring to the Ordnance Department, page 41, I see that it recommends $250,000 for ordnance service.

Mr. HAY. That is a different proposition. The gentleman from Iowa asked me about the appropriations for reserve ammunition for field artillery.

Mr. MOORE. I call the gentleman's attention to the Ordnance Department.

Mr. HAY. Ordnance service, the gentleman means?

Mr. MOORE. Page 41.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. That has been reduced?

Mr. HAY. That has been reduced $50,000; yes.

Mr. MOORE. And there has been a series of reductions in the Ordnance Department appropriations?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Ordnance stores have been reduced?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. From $200,000 to $125,000?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Manufacture of arms has been reduced from $600,000 to $450,000?

Mr. HAY. Yes. I will state to the gentleman that the evidence before the committee was such as to justify us in making the reductions.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman whether the reductions were based on the belief that the country is amply supplied with reserve material to meet any emergency?

Mr. HAY. As to the manufacture of small arms, yes. We now have in small arms of the new service rifle, in reserve, about 700,000, and we have in reserve of the old Krag 300,000, so that we have in reserve, outside of those in the hands of troops, very nearly 1,000,000 service guns that can be used in an emergency.

Mr. MOORE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that all of this ammunition now will be manufactured in the arsenals, and no provision is made for the purchase outside?

Mr. HAY. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. One other question. The gentleman is optimistic with regard to the future, and I am very glad, occupying the distinguished position he does, that he is so; but he is aware of the complaints that the Army perhaps is not as strong in personnel as it might be, and that there are rumors of trouble along the border, particularly along the southern border, and that officials of the War Department have been frequently quoted in the newspapers as saying that there ought to be a filling up of the Army to meet any possible emergencies. The gentleman indicates, and his report so states, that we have a reserve in the militia.

Mr. HAY. In the Organized Militia; yes.

Mr. MOORE. And he states now and puts in the RECORD figures backing up that statement that the students in certain agricultural colleges, who are trained in a military way, may also be serviceable, and would probably be the first to be called on in an emergency. Could the State militia, as at present constituted, or these students in the agricultural colleges, be called upon for military service except to repel an invasion?

Mr. HAY. Of course they could. If war were declared, the President would issue his call for volunteers, and they could all volunteer.

Mr. MOORE. Then the constitutional question would be met by volunteer service?

Mr. HAY. By volunteer service; yes.

Mr. MOORE. That is the belief of the gentleman?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. In the event of sudden emergency which would call the troops of the United States into any other country, as was developed in the case of Cuba and the Philippine Islands, would we not have to meet that constitutional question?

Mr. HAY. We would meet it by a call for volunteers, and I will state to the gentleman that this House passed a volunteer bill some months ago, for the very purpose of having a law on the statute books which would meet the situation which the gentleman is speaking of. That bill, as I am informed, has been reported to the Senate, and the Senate has amended the bill so that, if three-fourths of a militia organization volunteer, they will be taken in as an organization, and I have no doubt that a large proportion of the Organized Militia of the country would volunteer in the event of any trouble.

Mr. MOORE. If the men in the colleges and the militia were properly drilled and understood the tactics of war and were ready to volunteer, there would be no delay at all in attending to the defense of the country?

Mr. HAY. Well, of course the gentleman understands there is a certain amount of preparation which would have to be made——

Mr. MOORE. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. HAY (continuing). But so far as the reserve supplies of the country are concerned for Infantry and Cavalry, and even for the Field Artillery, in my judgment, we are in a condition to arm what men would be needed in the event of any emergency to the south of us.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman have any information as to what proportion of the militia enlisted or volunteered in the service in the Spanish-American War?

Mr. HAY. My information is that it was not a very large per cent.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is my impression.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota, there has been a very great improvement in the Organized Militia since the Spanish-American War. Congress has provided appropriations of which these organizations have taken advantage, and they have been very greatly improved, and the spirit of the organization is very much better than it was before the Spanish War.

Mr. ANDERSON. And the gentleman thinks that spirit will find expression in an increased number of volunteers?

Mr. HAY. I think so; in the unfortunate event anything should happen, which I do not think will.

Mr. ESCH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. ESCH. On page 18 I notice provision is made to meet the expenses of the encampment and maneuvers of the Organized Militia, and an appropriation of one and a quarter million dollars is made and the same is to be immediately available. Was that with a view to meeting the expenditures where such maneuvers and encampments were held prior to July 1?

Mr. HAY. I will say to my friend they have to have it before the 1st of July, because before the 1st of July the War Department has to prepare for these maneuvers and has to go to some expense in the preparation of maneuver camps, and the appropriation is made available for that reason.

Mr. ESCH. Although the main expenditure would come in the next year.

Mr. HAY. Of course the main expenditure does.

Mr. ESCH. How does this compare in proportion with that of a year ago?

Mr. HAY. This has been reduced, because we were informed by the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs that they had on hand a balance of $200,000, so that it was cut down. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OGLESBY. In regard to the question of the volunteer services of militia regiments I want to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that when the request was preferred through the governor of New York at the time the call was made in 1898 every regiment in the State of New York volunteered except one for service in foreign fields?

Mr. HAY. That may be; I was answering the gentleman and had no reference whatever to the State of New York. I now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is the Secretary of War requested an increase in the strength of the Army. Is that true?

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. How much of an increase?

Mr. HAY. Seventy-five hundred men.

Mr. MONDELL. Seventy-five hundred?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the committee grant any increase at all?

Mr. HAY. It did not.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, in declining to grant the request, did the committee take into consideration the fact that within a very short time, if we carried out our present policy, we must place quite a good force on the Panama Canal?

Mr. HAY. The committee took all that into consideration, and if the gentleman will do me the honor to read the report which I made on the bill he will find that the committee provided for the number of men which the Secretary stated he desired to put on the Panama Canal, in the Hawaiian Islands, and in the Philippines, and after providing for those men for those places there would still be left in continental United States 42,000 men, which would be sufficient for all necessary purposes. And I will state to the gentleman, as he very well knows, that it is within the power of the President at any time to increase the Army to 100,000 men, and if there should be any occasion for that the President, under the law, has the right to do it, and he would not have to come to Congress to do it——

Mr. MADDEN. Except to get the money.

Mr. HAY (continuing). Because the law gives him the right to do it, and under the law Congress would be compelled to meet the deficiency and pay those men should the President determine to do it; but the committee was acting upon the theory that this was a peace proposition and not a war proposition, and they did not think it was wise to provide for a larger number of men than peace conditions, which now prevail, require.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], made some statement in regard to enlistments, but I did not hear it clearly.

Mr. HAY. I stated to the gentleman that we had decreased the appropriation for the maneuvers which came every year because it was shown that the appropriation we had heretofore been making was more than necessary for the purpose. We have a balance of $200,000.

Mr. MONDELL. What has been the recent experience of the War Department under the new lengthened term of enlistment?

Mr. HAY. Why, I understand now the Army is full. We have all the men we want. I will say to my friend, however, that I think the reserve feature of that enlistment contract ought to be repealed.

Mr. MONDELL. How about desertions? What effect has it had on desertions? However, I will not put it that way, but I will ask what the situation is in regard to desertions?

Mr. HAY. Desertions have increased.

Mr. MONDELL. They have increased?

Mr. HAY. They have; but, in my judgment, not on account of the enlistment contract. Now, there are different opinions as to that. Some officers think it is on account of the contract and some think it is for some other reason.

Mr. MONDELL. There has been something of an increase?

Mr. HAY. There has been a considerable increase in desertions, and I think an unnecessary increase.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the committee go into that in the hearings somewhat?

Mr. HAY. We went into it pretty fully. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if a man enlisting in the Army now is required by the terms of the contract to serve seven years?

Mr. HAY. No; he is required to serve only four years.

Mr. MADDEN. He goes into the reserve after his term of of enlistment?

Mr. HAY. No; he does not have to go into the reserve. It is entirely voluntary with him whether he goes into the reserve or not, and, as a matter of fact, during the two years under which they have been operating under this law, they have gotten only 11 men in the reserve.

Mr. MADDEN. What was the inducement for creating a four-year enlistment term instead of three, and then providing for a three-year reserve?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman, to be perfectly frank with him, the reserve feature was put in the bill as a sort of compromise. In my efforts to get so many things on the bill at that time I was willing to let that reserve feature go in, because at that time the War Department insisted that there should be some reserve feature put in the law. And rather than lose some of what I considered more important legislation, I consented to that feature very much against my will, and it has turned out as I thought it would. In some ways, I believe, it deters men from enlisting in the Army.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to say what, if any, inducements there are for a man to go into the reserve?

Mr. HAY. None. You do not pay him anything. You can not get a man to go into a reserve, subject to the call of the War Department, unless you pay him for it. That is my idea of it.

Mr. MADDEN. If he does go into the reserve, is he required to report at certain periods?

Mr. HAY. I do not think so. It amounts to practically nothing whatever.

Mr. FARR. To what does the gentleman attribute the increased number of desertions?

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I attribute it to the fact, in some degree, that the laws against desertions have not been carried out with the same severity which prevailed for some years.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the pending military appropriation bill does not contain any items of legislation that seriously affect the organization of the Army. The amounts allowed for the military establishment are certainly not exorbitant. It may be that in some of the items—if the amounts are not increased by another body at the other end of this Capitol—there may be some deficiencies next winter. Personally, I do not believe that the proper expenditure of money for the maintenance of a military establishment commensurate with our standing in the family of nations is an onerous burden upon the taxpayers of this country. If the money were being expended extravagantly, there might be just cause of complaint; but I believe that every branch of the military establishment is striving earnestly and honestly to secure the best possible results with the least possible expenditure.

We have just celebrated the one hundred and eighty-second anniversary of the birthday of the Father of his Country. One of the wise sayings that he uttered during his lifetime was this:

> To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.

I have always believed in the wisdom of this counsel. Washington had served in two wars when he made this statement. He was not uttering platitudes. He was not voicing theories. He had had practical experience on the field of battle. And he spoke for what he deemed the future welfare of the Republic.

There is much criticism in these days of the expenditures for the military and naval establishments. We hear much talk about returning to Jeffersonian principles nowadays. Jefferson believed, as many of the disciples of the small-Army and small-Navy theorists of our day believe, that our geographic isolation is our greatest military asset. In his day, under his leadership, the Regular Army was reduced to a negligible number. An Organized Militia was to take its place. How the militia ran at the first fire of the British regulars at the Battle of Bladensburg is one of the discreditable incidents of the War of 1812. In consequence of that rout of the Organized Militia the Capitol and the White House were burned by the British troops. Under Jefferson's plan our Navy was made up largely of about 150 so-called gunboats, that were intended to prove an adequate coast defense in case of hostilities. It was only three years after Jefferson retired from the Presidency that our country became involved in war. What became of the coast-defense vessels that were to prove such a boon to our seaboard? They were promptly thrown upon the scrap heap. All they had cost was a total loss. We had to develop a Navy as best we could, for, apart from a dozen real fighting ships, we were without a navy. In those days a wooden ship of war could be constructed in three or four months. To-day it takes us three years to build a dreadnaught. Fortunately for us, the embargo act of the Jefferson administration and the nonintercourse laws of that period had embittered the owners of our merchant vessels. We had a large merchant marine at that time, whereas to-day we have none to boast of. The owners of the merchant vessels, having suffered great loss on account of the unfavorable legislation that England's Orders in Council had forced Congress to enact by way of retaliation, were glad to apply for letters of marque and reprisal, and these were readily issued by our Government. In that way we were able to prey upon English commerce. But under modern conditions civilized nations no longer issue letters of marque and reprisal. We must build our battleships and prepare our armies in times of peace.

While we may have some jingoists in the United States who thirst for war, I do not believe we have anything to fear from them. We have much more to fear from the jingoists of foreign lands. They are the real menace—if there be any menace anywhere. And from our own past experiences, especially in the War of 1812, in the Mexican War, and just prior to the Spanish-American War, we ought to have learned the lesson that when the jingoists of a nation arouse the latent patriotism of the citizens of that nation into a blaze of passion, conservatism is thrown to the winds, and nothing but armed conflict can appease the vengeance that blood alone seems to be able to quell. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that our own past experiences ought to determine our course in voting reasonable appropriations for both the Army and the Navy in times of profound peace. I believe that we are compelled to appropriate large sums of money to-day for past wars because in our past wars we were not properly prepared at the outbreak of hostilities. If there had been proper preparation in times of profound peace, they would not have cost as much as they did by many millions of dollars. One frequently hears, too, that the great European powers are also expending large sums for the maintenance of peace and that the inhabitants of those countries are groaning under the burdens of taxation which the maintenance of their armed forces imposes upon them.

Mr. Chairman, what has been the positive result of that great expenditure? Since 1870 there has been no war between the great powers of England, Germany, France, Austria, Russia, and Italy, while during many centuries prior to 1870 the doors of the Temple of Janus were seldom closed in Europe. These nations, with slight periods of intermission, were generally at war with each other. A new generation had scarcely grown to man's estate ere the dogs of war were let loose and the battle drums were calling men to arms.

The youths of these lands were constantly being cut down on the battle fields that extend all over continental Europe, in the wars that form the greater part of the history of these nations. Does anyone doubt that if Germany were not constantly prepared for war that France would not attempt to regain her lost Provinces of Alsace and Lorraine?

Paradoxical as it may seem, the present war lord of the German Empire will undoubtedly go down in history as a man of profound peace. Instead of seeing hundreds of thousands of the young men of his Empire crippled and slain on the battle field, instead of listening to the tear-compelling cries of widows and orphans that always accompany the roar of battle, he has seen the citizens of his Empire develop the industries of the farm and field, of the workshop and the factory, until to-day Germany is one of the richest nations of the world. True, the people of that Empire pay heavy taxes to maintain the standing armies and the expanding fleet; but how infinitely better it is to expend these vast sums in maintaining peace than it would be to cut the appropriations to a niggardly pittance and thus expose the Empire to all the horrors of war. And what is true of Germany's program is equally true of the program of every one of the European great powers.

And so we who really want peace hope that the statesmen of our own country will still continue in times of peace to vote such appropriations for the Army and Navy as will enable us to maintain peace. Oh, we all hope that the time will never come when our country will again become involved in war; but, as has been said so often, the millenium is not yet here. And until it does arrive we will have to be prepared for every possible contingency, for every possible emergency that may confront the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that those who denounce necessary expenditures for the national defense exalt the dollar above the man. Sir, we can better spare the dollar than we can spare the man. The man must be exalted above the dollar, and we must keep pace with the other civilized nations in spending necessary dollars in order to maintain peace and spare men. [Applause.]

In recent years it has become the fashion in some quarters to denounce the Monroe doctrine as being archaic and to demand that it should be abandoned. Whether those who advocate this plan simply enunciate their views in order to get into the public print or whether they honestly believe in their theories, I do not know. Perhaps it is due to the fact that we are living in a period of fitful emotion; a period of fads; a period of extreme governmental experiments, with their consequent uncertainty. Seriously, would any of those who advocate the abrogation of the Monroe doctrine prefer to have a strong military power in control of the country on our southern border? Would they prefer to see one of the great military Governments of Europe take possession of Mexico and convert the lazy peons of our sister Republic into a powerful army of soldiers, officered by men of splendid military training and ambitious to achieve great military distinction? Would the presence to the south of us of such a great military empire tend to diminish the expense of our own military and naval establishments? I believe they would be greatly increased, if anything. Would any of the advocates of the policy of recession from the Monroe doctrine desire to see Germany, or England, or France, or Russia, or Italy, or Japan installed in any of the Republics of Central America? Would it not be a great calamity to our Government if any foreign power were to be permitted to take possession of any of the free States of North America? Could we consent to have a foreign Government so near the doors of the Panama Canal? Not alone so near, but actually between continental United States and the Canal Zone. Sir, it would be a national disaster if such a condition were permitted to arise.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Do I understand the gentleman's proposition to be that in the event of trouble in the Panama Canal Zone, or in the event of a war with such a country as Mexico, it would be better to have a South American alliance than an European alliance, such as we had during the partition of China?

Mr. KAHN. Decidedly. If there were to be any intervention in Mexico, I would infinitely rather have the cooperation of the Latin American States than allow a single European power to participate with us. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe the Monroe doctrine has come to stay. It must stay. But I believe the time has also come when the Government of the United States should invite to conferences on great international questions affecting the welfare of the States on the American Hemisphere those Latin-American Republics whose Governments are stable and who have made giant strides in the paths of progress and commercial development, such as Argentina, Brazil, and Chile. I am satisfied the cooperation with us of these States in extending the hand of friendship and fellowship for the amicable settlement of difficulties that confront the inhabitants of any Latin-American Republic will have a great influence in establishing stable government in all of the Republics on the western continents. Let them understand that the interests of all American Republics and ours are mutual, not alone in the continued maintenance of the Monroe doctrine, but also in the continued maintenance of the peace, welfare, and happiness of their citizens. Let them understand that Uncle Sam does not desire to loom up as a mentor for all the countries of America, but that he is willing to join with other American Republics to arbitrate differences between conflicting contestants in any one State, as well as between conflicting sovereign States. Such a policy would cement the ties that should exist between all Latin-American States and ourselves. Suspicion and hatred of us would soon disappear. Amity and friendship between us would become an actuality. The clouds of distrust would be dispelled by the warm rays of confidence. The Pan American Republics would march onward to greater destinies, with mutual respect and mutual esteem as their guiding stars.

Mr. Chairman, it would have been the part of wisdom, in my judgment, to have inaugurated such a policy in connection with the settlement of the difficulties that exist at the present time in our sister Republic of Mexico. At any rate, we would have secured definite results long before this. The policy of "watchful waiting" has turned out to be a policy of "deadly drifting." The fact that it became necessary to issue a proclamation removing the embargo on arms to be shipped into Mexico is practically an admission of the failure of the policy of "watchful waiting." [Applause on Republican side.] "Deadly drifting" is a much more accurate description of the administration's policy. And since the embargo has been removed, what has happened? Additional murder, additional lawlessness, for which we are probably responsible.

The present administration, on or about August 27 last, made four propositions to Gen. Huerta, as follows:

First. An immediate cessation of fighting throughout Mexico, a definite armistice solemnly entered into and scrupulously observed.

Second. Security given for an early and free election, in which all will agree to take part.

Third. The consent of Gen. Huerta to bind himself not to be a candidate for election as President of the Republic at this election.

Fourth. The agreement of all parties to abide by the results of the election and cooperate in the most loyal way in organizing and supporting the new administration.

Of course it was practically impossible for Huerta to comply with these demands. How could he guarantee the acts of men who, up to the time they enlisted in the cause of so-called constitutionalism, had been known to be disreputable cutthroats and bandits? Could he speak for them? Could anyone speak for them? And in the light of recent events would our own countrymen be willing to trust them? But we ought to make renewed efforts to restore peace to the distracted inhabitants of Mexico. I still believe that if this Government were to invite the cooperation of Argentina, Brazil, and Chile in trying to straighten out the difficulties that beset the people of Mexico, we would soon be able to bring order out of chaos; that we would be able to protect human life, as well as property interests; and that we would be acting, in fact and in deed, in the great cause of humanity.

Mr. Chairman, in recent months it has become somewhat fashionable in certain quarters to assert that we must "get Huerta." But he seems to be able to take care of himself, notwithstanding our failure to recognize him. Do you believe we have added new laurels to American diplomacy by our handling of the situation? If my memory serves me aright, we made some kind of a proposition to the Mexican de facto or provisional minister of foreign affairs to the effect that if Huerta would resign the administration here would try to negotiate a loan for Mexico. With befitting sarcasm Gamboa, Mexico's minister of foreign affairs, scornfully rejoined: "You are trying to bribe us." Probably it was a fitting rebuke, but how the incident must have jarred the sensibilities of every patriotic American.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman recall the policy of the late administration, which endeavored to improve our commercial relations by what was known as "dollar diplomacy" in China and Nicaragua?

Mr. KAHN. I do.

Mr. MOORE. In view of this statement of Gamboa, does the gentleman believe there has been any recession by the present administration from its stand with regard to the "dollar-diplomacy" policy?

Mr. KAHN. As I now recall, the late administration had been trying to arrange for a loan by an American syndicate of bankers to China, and also, I believe, to Nicaragua. The present administration withdrew its participation in those negotiations and announced that "on principle" it would not go into those matters; and then, subsequent to that announcement, this proposition which I have just referred to was made to Gamboa, and it elicited the sarcastic reply from the Mexican secretary.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman recognize any distinction between a dollar diplomacy that has as its end simply the helping to a profit of an American syndicate and a proposal as to the financing of a loan having as its purpose the peace of a people?

Mr. KAHN. The term "dollar diplomacy" was applied to the policy of the former administration. The loan that was intended for the Central American Republic was for the purpose of insuring peace to that country; and in the matter of the Chinese loan, it was for the purpose of helping that Government to construct railroads.

Mr. MADDEN. The Republic?

Mr. KAHN. The negotiations were in progress even before there was a Chinese Republic. The situation in China is rather peculiar. The Chinese deal with the people who lend them money. If the United States manufacturers and business men were to have any participation in the business of China in connection with the construction of the railroads, for which this money was wanted, it was necessary for the United States bankers to lend some part of that money.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. KAHN. For that reason this Government, in trying to extend American commerce in China, tried to get American bankers to participate in that loan, in order that we might sell some of the locomotives and the rails and the machinery that were necessary for the construction of the important railroads that were to be constructed and were undoubtedly intended to benefit all the people of China.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that his statement as to the facts in regard to China is unfortunately late. It might have been accepted prior to what has happened since the failure of the Chinese loan, but the facts since do not bear out the gentleman's statement.

Mr. KAHN. I am familiar with Chinese history.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unfortunately the gentleman may be a little biased on the Chinese and Japanese question.

Mr. KAHN. On the contrary, I am not biased as to either the Chinese or the Japanese. I think we can trade with them and do business with them without having the coolie class coming here in mass to settle here and underbid American labor. We have never objected to the Chinese or the Japanese business men coming to the United States. We have never objected to the Chinese or Japanese students or professional men coming to the United States. It is only the coolie class that we have objected to in the Far West.

Mr. Chairman, condemn Huerta as we may, the fact remains that he governs more than two-thirds of the States of Mexico, which have acknowledged his authority, as well as all of the territories of that Republic and its Federal district. He seems to be able to maintain order and discipline in the area which gives him its allegiance. Since the administration's refusal to recognize him we have not heard or read of any overt acts on his part or the part of his followers that have brought a shudder to the hearts of American men and women.

On the other hand, we have constantly read of so-called constitutionalists who live by robbery and rapine, loot and lust. For instance, a few months ago the fair city of Durango was captured by a band of these outlaws who call themselves constitutionalists. We have had authentic information as to what took place when that city was turned over to the rebel horde. Mr. Hamm, the consular representative of our Government, in company with Mr. M. A. Leach and Mr. W. C. Bishop, called upon Gen. Tomas Urbina, who was in command of the so-called constitutionalists, and asked that he order a guard placed before the United States consulate and also furnish guards to all the consulates of foreign Governments represented in Durango. And what was the reply of this constitutionalist patriot, so called? That nothing could be done for 24 hours; that his soldiers had been promised they might have their own way during that time, and that he could not interfere with them. He said it was the only way he had of paying them. Think of it! What happened? The banks and the large mercantile houses were all looted; many buildings were burned and others destroyed; a number of individuals were killed and others wounded. There was practically no defense of the city on the part of the Mexican Federal soldiers.

The latter retired without an apparent struggle, and the looters began their devilish work as soon as they entered the city. I am tired of hearing these men referred to as constitutionalists. They know no more about the Mexican constitution than the Apache Indians of Arizona or the Kamchatka Eskimos of northeastern Siberia. We all know that they are an intensely ignorant lot. Eighty per cent or more are absolutely illiterate. They only know how to loot, how to kill and ravish; and they will fight under the banner of any man who will promise them loot and plunder. To them it is a much easier way of making a living than working for day wages. We who come from the far West know the ilk. The history of California as one of the Mexican States is a history of constant revolution.

I remember when I was a very small boy we had had a bloodthirsty bandit in the State of California, one Joaquin Murietta. Some individual with a fanciful imagination endeavored to make a hero out of him on the score that he had suffered grievances at the hands of the "gringoes" who came to California, and that his raids were made in order that he might recover some of the property that had been taken from him and his relatives by Americans. It was a lie, manufactured out of the whole cloth. This bandit, whose counterparts are now operating in northern Mexico, drew around him a band of nondescript cutthroats and robbers similar to those parading as constitutionalists in our sister Republic across the Rio Grande. They inhabited the fastnesses of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. They would swoop down upon an outlying mining village or frontier camp, shoot up the town, murder and rob the inhabitants, carry off all the loot and plunder that came within their reach, and then retire to their mountain strongholds. They operated in this way for some time; but finally a posse of citizens, organized to wreak vengeance upon the band, came upon them in their lair and killed the outlaw chief, with a number of his followers, before they could get away.

A few years later another bandit chief—Tiburcio Vasquez by name—organized a similar band and operated from the Coast Range of mountains. He fell upon the villages in the Santa Clara, Salinas, and San Joaquin Valleys. He, too, professed to be imbued with high motives. He, too, claimed to have grievances against the "gringoes." "Gringo" is the term of derision applied by Mexicans of the lower classes to all Americans. But he was nothing but an ordinary thief; and when he was finally captured by our citizens he was given a trial, found guilty of the murders which he had committed, and promptly hanged for his delinquencies.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment. They operated along similar lines to that other constitutionalist, Castillo, who recently caused the death of half a hundred innocent men and women in the Cumbre Tunnel raid.

Mr. QUIN. Could the gentleman tell us by what force of action he would create peace, because there has never been peace among such a class of citizenry—cutthroats, thieves, assassins, murderers, robbers, and so forth—that he has described so vividly?

Mr. KAHN. The men in the rank and file of those armies, if they had none of these bandit chiefs as leaders to urge them on in their deviltry, would be willing to work for a living; but it is the bandit chief, who operates ostensibly as a constitutionalist, who is responsible for their outrages.

Mr. SHERLEY. What does the gentleman think of the character and achievements of the man who is heading the other forces in Mexico?

Mr. KAHN. Huerta?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I dare say that Huerta has committed in his day just as many assassinations, or is responsible for as many, as any of these men. I do not know. But Huerta represents a de facto government, and these men do not.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I understand the gentleman's position, it is, then, that when a man has successfully killed enough people to make himself in a measure impregnable he is then recognizable?

Mr. KAHN. Well, the gentleman seemingly does not recognize the usages that prevail among civilized nations. Let us go back into European history for only a few years—for six or seven years. I recall a few years ago reading in a morning newspaper that a mob composed of nobles of the Kingdom had gone into the palace of the King of Servia, butchered the King and Queen, and thrown their bodies out of the window. They elected a new King. All countries recognized the new monarch. There is no question about it. I believe we, too, recognized the new Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The gentleman admits that Huerta is quite an assassin?

Mr. KAHN. I do not wish to be understood as saying that he is. I said he probably is. I do not know. He denies all participation in the murder of Madero, and, as I have been informed, there is no one who can say positively that he did kill Madero, or, rather, that he had Madero killed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, take the gentleman's own statement that he is likely to have been an assassin of the kind that the gentleman has described, and is now simply at the head of a faction which happens to be, as the gentleman claims, quite a large faction in Mexico. Is the gentleman in favor of this Government's recognizing this asasssin, with the character that he gives him?

Mr. KAHN. I believe in this Government recognizing the de facto head of any State and letting the people of that State determine whether he is rightfully their ruler or executive or not. That is what was done in Peru very recently.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman explain what responsibility we have in the election of a President in Mexico?

Mr. KAHN. We have none whatever, and it is a gross mistake to attempt to interfere.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it any of our business?

Mr. KAHN. Unequivocally, it is none of our business. If we begin that program in Mexico, then we may be taking it up in Peru, and we may be taking it up in Ecuador, and we may be taking it up in every one of the Central American and South American Republics. We ought not to embark on such a program.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that he is not in favor of the United States Government interfering in the affairs of the Government of Mexico?

Mr. KAHN. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman believes that if the people of Mexico desire to engage in civil war and end their troubles in their own way they should have the right to thrash it out in their own way?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is not in favor of intervention in Mexico?

Mr. KAHN. No. I should be sorry to see a situation arise that would compel us to intervene. But before I get through I will try to show to the committee that if the present policy of the present administration is persevered in, intervention is absolutely inevitable.

Mr. KEATING. Just another question, if the gentleman will permit. The gentleman having declared himself opposed to intervention, in what particular can the President of the United States or the Government of the United States enforce its will on the Mexican people without intervention?

Mr. KAHN. I contend that the President of the United States has no right to enforce his will upon the Mexican Government.

Mr. KEATING. He is not endeavoring to do so, is he? Is not that what the gentleman objects to? In what respect is he doing it?

Mr. KAHN. He is certainly trying his level best to do so.

Mr. MOORE. He is demanding another President for Mexico.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman from Colorado asks the gentleman from California to tell us how the President is trying to enforce his will upon Mexico. If the gentleman had paid attention to current events in the last few months, he would have been informed as to the methods by which the present administration has been attempting to enforce its will in Mexico.

Mr. KAHN. I must decline to yield any further. My time is slipping away, and I hope to finish in another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, take the career of practically every one of the Mexican leaders in this rebellion and you will find that Murietta and Vasquez were their prototypes. Every one of them is practically a bandit chief. If I recall correctly, I have seen it stated in the papers that the administration has been carrying on negotiations, unofficially, with some of these men. I can not believe that to be true. I can not believe that we have been negotiating with Villa, the tiger, whose whole career has been one of lawlessness and crime, and other outlaws of that type. I hope it is not true. I, for one, do not want to see armed intervention in Mexico. We have intervened politically already, and, in my humble judgment, it was a mistake to have done so. And it is going to prove a most expensive experiment.

Sir, a few months ago all American citizens in Mexico were ordered out of that country by our State Department. Thousands of our countrymen promptly heeded the order and embarked for the United States. They probably could not have brought all their belongings with them; many of them, doubtlessly, sacrificed their holdings, while others still came away without having had an opportunity to dispose of their property. The latter were compelled to abandon it altogether. Does anyone believe that these refugees will fail to file claims against this Government for their losses? And are we not morally, if not legally, bound to pay them? But that is not all. I have read somewhere that England is giving us a free hand in Mexico because she expects us to pay the claims of her citizens who suffer loss in this deplorable internecine conflict. Talk about expenditures for the Army and Navy! We will probably have to pay enormous indemnities—sums that might have enabled us to build a dozen superdreadnaughts—not alone to our own citizens, but to the citizens of every foreign country who suffered loss by reason of our policy of "deadly drifting," before we get through with this miserable business.

Mr. Chairman, I contend we have no right to interfere in the internal affairs of Mexico. We would promptly resent the interference of any foreign power in our internal affairs, and rightly so. But if we shall once embark on the policy of determining who constitutes rightful authority in any of the American Republics we will have a much greater task on our hands than we have ever undertaken heretofore during any period of our history. To my mind all of Mexico would not repay the tears of the widows nor the wailing of the orphans that would result in consequence of our armed intervention. And yet I believe that the present policy of the administration, unless speedily and radically changed, inevitably must lead to armed intervention. I do not see how it can be otherwise. If Huerta should fall, who would take his place? The bandit Villa? God forbid! And how long will Huerta's successor be able to sustain himself before a new revolution will confront him? Will the present administration recognize the man who succeeds in wresting power from Huerta and establishing himself in the presidential chair in Mexico? Why, sir, only let it be known that any successful aspirant for the Presidency in Mexico is the "gringoes'" candidate and I predict that no insurance company in the world will be willing to write a policy for any considerable amount upon the life of the new usurper. That is undoubtedly the temper of the people of Mexico toward the citizens of the United States at the present moment. Therefore I hope that this policy of "deadly drifting" which we have pursued for about a year and which has proved to be a dismal failure will soon give way to a new policy, a more humane policy, a policy that will unite all Americans in an honest, earnest effort to secure peace and tranquillity, happiness and contentment to the Mexican people. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell us how?

Mr. KAHN. I have just suggested one way, namely, that there should be a concert of the great American powers in this matter, and that we should endeavor, by lending the good offices of these powers to the people of Mexico, to bring about peace in that republic. There are, undoubtedly, other ways.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman interpret that statement? It sounds well, but I do not quite understand what the gentleman means by it.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is familiar with the concerts of the powers of Europe. There are two coalitions in Europe to-day——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KAHN. I can not go into this question as I should like to, for my time is up. Let me briefly answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Whenever a situation like that which confronts us to-day has confronted the powers of Europe, the powers have had a so-called concert, and they have agreed upon a program. Up to two or three years ago it was believed that if ever there should be an outbreak in the Balkans it would occasion a great European war. That was the universal belief. And yet the European powers, operating together, were enabled to bring about a condition which averted a general war and which now has brought about peaceful conditions again in the Balkans. But it would be the easiest thing in the world for this Government to invite the friendly cooperation of the South American stable Republics to join with us in trying to bring peace to the unfortunate Mexican people.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman——

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield any further. I am sorry I can not, for I have all my time allotted, and therefore I must close, much as I should like to accommodate my good friend from Pennsylvania. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I ask that the gentleman be given another hour, because it would be well worth while if he has a solution of this question which he can present to us.

Mr. HAY. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall consume all of the hour which has been given me. That will depend on whether there are any interruptions or not. But before I address myself to the other matters which I have in mind I want to call attention to the services of the gentleman who has reported this bill to the House.

The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAY] has reported a bill which is as small, perhaps, as the great demands upon him will permit.

He is to be congratulated that he has been able, with the assistance of the members of his committee, to hold this great supply bill within the limits proposed.

No one not a member of these supply committees can have an accurate knowledge of the means resorted to to induce members of the committees to vote vast sums of money for some pet scheme of some one connected with some arm of the public service.

I fear that too many of us are losing sight entirely of the true relation of things and are swept along with the current of events without being aware of where we are drifting.

And I want to call the particular attention of the committee and the country to this, because every man connected with a particular department of the Government believes that his department is the most important, and therefore entitled to the first consideration. I suppose that is perfectly natural. I suppose if a Member of this body were put in charge of one of these departments or should become the head of one of the bureaus of the Government, he would be suddenly converted from a man conserving the money of the people into one who was endeavoring to advance his department with the idea that he would be advancing the interests of the people.

The chairman of this committee possesses that rare mind which does its own thinking and is not influenced by the current.

He is cool always, but ready to receive the truth when it is presented and has the courage to act upon it.

He keeps in his mind as well as in his heart that every dollar spent by the Federal Government comes from the pockets of the people and is the product of their toil.

No bureau chief or department head can cause him to even momentarily forget this.

He rarely, if ever, attends a banquet board which, like a net, is spread to catch the unwary.

His long service in Congress has not spoiled him nor blunted his conscience nor blurred his judgment.

He has totally failed to broaden out—as I fear too many do—to the extent that he has forgotten that he is the representative of the people and is their servant and not their master.

It is this that causes the membership of this House to have confidence in him and to rely upon his judgment and his statements. [Applause.]

I shall not discuss the bill under consideration in detail, but will discuss the subject of war and preparations for war generally.

The American idea that the Government does not or should not exist as a power but "as the center of jurisdiction" is the true idea of government and the true reason for the existence thereof.

I want to pause for a moment to call attention to the fact that in the early days it was considered the function of the masses of the people to supply the demands of those in official life, so that those in official life might appropriate just what they saw fit and proper for the Government from their own viewpoint, and for their own benefit rather than for the benefit of the people. That view has been entirely changed, because government should serve the people and not the people the government.

The ancient and medieval idea that the chief purpose and function of government is to bring unwilling people under its domain for the benefit solely of the ones in authority is being discarded by the people everywhere.

I might mention, by way of parentheses, that China has limited to 50 years the time within which she will adopt completely the modern idea of government. This is the present trend of thought throughout the world.

It has not made progress as rapidly as I would like, but all permanent growth in the upward march of civilization is slow.

Governments in the past have been so conducted that the majority of the people have worked for the small minority.

Laws have existed which have enabled a few men to secure for themselves that which others produced.

In the earliest times petty princes or chiefs would, at the head of a band of desperate men, secure for themselves all that some neighboring people had produced, and in the majority of cases made the people themselves slaves.

This was the reason for and the effect of the earliest wars in which mankind engaged.

History shows that in nearly every case war was waged for some selfish reason.

Mr. Novicow, a Russian authority on war, says:

> Since the remotest period men went to war only with some particular object in view. The goal striven for by every human being is enjoyment. If the death of one of his kind can procure him that, he will sacrifice him without pity. But if such is not the case, he will not take the trouble to kill him, since purposeless work is the worst kind of suffering.

War has been waged, says this same author, from the following motives:

> To kill one's fellow men for the sake of using him as food; to deprive them of their women; to obtain booty from them; to improve a religion; or to force certain ideas or a type of culture upon a people.

Wars for the first two causes have disappeared and the last is rarely the sole cause of war.

The third, "to obtain booty," is the one cause that now brings on a war.

This "booty" may be more territory, or to obtain trade advantage.

Can you now conceive of any other cause for war than this?

If I am right in this analysis—and I am supported by many great writers and thinkers on the subject—then there can be no just cause for war. For this reason, in every war there must be an aggressor who causes the war; and the cause being "to obtain booty" is no just or righteous cause.

Let me illustrate: If A should kill B in private life to obtain his property, A would be scorned by all good people; and under the law he would be punished as a criminal, and in most countries would forfeit his life for such a foul deed.

We all sympathize with B and his family.

Our heart goes out to him and his in pity; we rush to do his unfortunate family some service.

But, in the language of another, our morals take a sudden turn when international relations enter into the question.

By the strangest aberration, all of our sympathy and admiration go to the one that transgresses the rights of his fellow creatures—to the glorious conqueror.

Our hatred and contempt go to the victims.

Strange that we scorn the unfortunate culprit but not the vicious conqueror.

Mr. Chairman, a defensive war is not necessarily wrong.

Each human being has the natural right to defend his own life, even to the extent of slaying his adversary.

So he has the right to defend his home and family.

Upon this ground, and this only, can a whole nation of people sustain their moral right to go to war.

When attacked a nation has the right to defend itself.

In short, to risk one's life in defending one's rights, to prefer death to disgrace, is great, is beautiful, is generous.

But it is base and vile to violate the rights of others, to steal, despoil, pillage, and tyrannize over people's consciences.

Now, every aggressor, of necessity, commits those misdeeds, since there can be no war without an aggressor.

War is one of the principal causes of the degradation of the human race.

Nearly every nation in the world now professes to believe in these general principles.

What a change is this within a century!

Look back upon the world-wide war waste.

Novico says that from 1946 B. C. to 1861 A. D., a period of 3,358 years, there have been 8,000 wars in the world.

During these 3,358 years there have been only 227 years of peace and 3,131 years of war.

In Europe alone within the last three centuries there have been 287 wars.

Since 1648, not including the Balkan War, the cost of war to Europe alone has been over $80,000,000,000.

The authority for this statement also says that during the entire period of her history war has cost Europe $800,000,000,000.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. KAHN. Can the gentleman give the committee an estimate of how much war has cost the six great powers of Europe—Germany, France, England, Italy, Russia, and Austria—for any wars between themselves in the last forty-odd years?

Mr. SISSON. I can not, because I have no available data. I gave my authority for the data that I am giving you, which is up to 1861. I am going to discuss in a moment, however, the reason for this condition, as it appeals to me.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman has stated the number of wars that have occurred in the history of the world.

Mr. SISSON. In 3,000 years, as nearly as they can get the data.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Can the gentleman state how many wars have occurred in the last 40 years?

Mr. SISSON. No; but I can state those which I can rapidly recall: The Chinese War, the war between Russia and Japan, the Balkan War, the war between the United States and Spain, some minor revolutions in South America, and the war in Mexico.

Mr. KAHN. The war between Russia and Turkey.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The war between Turkey and Greece.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

A MEMBER. The Franco-Prussian War.

Mr. SISSON. The Franco-Prussian War was not fought within the last 40 years.

What war has cost the entire world no man can even approximate; how many millions on top of millions of men have died in the wicked and useless wars of the past no statistician can enumerate.

This loss of life added to the cost in money, to say nothing of the loss of property, the time lost from peaceful pursuits, makes the history of the human family, at best, a fearful, gloomy, ghastly picture.

Think of the human agony of body and mind.

Think of the widows and orphans, the poverty, want, misery, and starvations that have followed in its awful wake.

If men responsible for war could hear the groans of the dying, the wail of the widows, the cry of the orphans, and could see the mighty torrents of blood, the flaming dwellings by night, and smoking ruins by day, could there be a man, beast and devil though he be, that would be responsible for war? [Applause.]

The money cost of war is the least of the evils that flow from it.

The loss of life is the most serious, because war always claims the strongest and bravest.

I want to call attention especially to this, because both the Army and the Navy take only the brightest boys, the perfect specimens of manhood, when war breaks out; it is the strong and the brave in mind and heart that venture to offer up their lives, while all the weak in mind and in body are the ones that remain at home. Great students have said that that has been one reason for the deterioration of nations in physical and intellectual strength in many portions of the world. It would be interesting to follow that further.

Sophocles said:

War does not of choice destroy bad men, but good men ever.

The Army officer exacts his toll not from the average man in body and mind, he demands the best.

The weakest and most unfit are left at home, the diseased and the coward are left behind.

His children become the most numerous, thus preventing the perpetuation of the best of the race.

If the evil ended here, it would not be so bad, but war brutalizes men, and women as well.

War of aggression is nothing but wholesale murder.

To murder wholesale is worse than to murder by retail.

One murderer is despised, but thousands of murderers are honored.

Am I right about the morals of war?

The nations think so, because in every modern war each nation tries to make her own people believe that she is not the cause of the war.

This is because the race has made progress in morals to that extent that they will not stand for war for war's sake.

When have you found in modern times a nation going to war that has not said, "We are not to blame"? Did not we in the War with Spain create the impression that the blowing up of the Maine was the first act of war? So it was between the North and the South, and there is to-day a controversy upon the point whether the actual hostilities began at Fort Sumter by the act of the North or of the Confederates.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we are led to the conclusion that the people at the present time tolerate the expenses of war and the preparation for war upon the assumption that the other nations can not be trusted.

Because the conscience of the people of the world will not tolerate going to war for war's sake, and therefore they permit themselves to be taxed upon the sole idea of national defense.

To state the proposition differently, the people of the world do not want war, and will not agree to go to war, except upon the idea that it is for their defense and the defense of their homes.

You then ask, if all the people feel that way, Why not agree to stop all this vast expense entailed upon all the people of all the Governments of the world?

The answer is that other nations will not stop, and we can not afford to quit as long as other nations keep increasing their war weapons.

This does not answer the question, because the same reason is given by the people of all nations.

The people everywhere say that they would be glad to be relieved of the burden if they could.

Then, if the people of all the nations feel that way about it, why do all nations continue this criminal waste of money?

What is the mainspring behind it all?

In some countries, where the people have no franchise and are dissatisfied with their Government, the Government is impelled by fear of the people to keep a large standing army to keep the people in subjection.

In others the fear of contiguous nations is the cause of the standing armies.

Both of these are reasons, but they are bad reasons, for the existence of great armies, because in the first case the army serves a bad purpose, it forces upon the people a bad government against their will and extorts from them the means to continue to oppress them.

The army in this case not only perpetuates the evil government, but forces the oppressed people to pay the expenses of their oppression.

This is the chief reason why the people of the nations have made such slow progress.

The great burdens of taxation drained from the substance of the people year by year for the support of millions of soldiers prevent them expending it upon institutions of learning, good roads, and other things for the betterment of the conditions of life.

The total amount spent last year on universities and colleges and technological schools in the United States, according to the Bureau of Education, was $89,835,787—not as much as this one bill carries.

This $89,000,000 supports 596 institutions of learning, with 30,134 professors and instructors, who teach 319,490 young men and young women to become leaders of thought in the United States.

What wonders could be accomplished throughout the world if this war fund were spent in training men and women to become leaders in the pursuits of peace.

The last reason, the "fear of contiguous nations," is the one most urged.

This fear, however, is a fear which in modern times is accentuated and exaggerated by interested parties.

If neither nation had an army their differences would be settled in a court selected by the two nations or in a court of nations.

I want to pause long enough to say that originally it was the strong arm and the sure shot that settled differences. Within the memory of some men now living, within the memory of my distinguished friend from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, in different States of this Union differences were settled by the code duello, which was war between two individuals. That was abolished by all of the States. The States surrendered a portion of their sovereignty in certain matters, and now the differences are settled by the United States. If the States of this Union could settle their differences, some plan can settle international differences.

In every civilized Government courts are provided for the settlement of all kinds of differences between individuals and between subdivisions of the Government.

Why do not the nations agree to some such form of settlement among themselves?

What millions of lives and money would be saved throughout the world.

That man, that statesman who is great enough and has power enough to propose and urge on the great civilized nations of the world to embrace this agreement will be the greatest statesman of modern times. [Applause.] I believe that the Speaker of this House told the truth when he said that he knew that five nations could by agreement stop the building of warships and increasing the Army. He believed that three nations could do it; that England and any two great nations could agree to a program and enforce it. But I am sure that any five nations could do it. Any man that could devise a method which will be agreed upon will be the greatest boon to the human race in modern times.

I will tell you what would do a great deal toward it. If they would agree that the open sea should not be invaded by battleships from any nation on earth except under an international agreement; that they should have a navy of mutual ships to police the seas, protect the coast, and keep the battleships bottled up within the 3-mile limit, they would become useless to the people of the world, and the people of the world would soon find that an agreement like the one between the United States and Canada would be an agreement that would be kept throughout the world, because the conscience of the people would be for it. I will soon show you why the masses that produce the wealth of the world do not have their way about it.

Why can not the nations agree to HENSLEY'S peace resolution and other plans similar to it?

I will tell you why:

It is because each great nation has too many business men getting rich manufacturing for the Government war supplies in time of peace.

It is the same old cry of "booty," that I told you about a moment ago.

Let us examine the fact a moment:

A few men always make money out of war.

These men always favor war because of the money there is in it for them.

If they can arrange to sell supplies in time of peace, they would rather do business with a nation at peace because such a nation is sure pay. But it is necessary to keep up the war scare.

So these men have organized syndicates of war in all the principal nations for army and navy extension.

In Europe you have the Krupps, Maxims, Armstrongs, Vickers, Cruesots, and Schneiders.

These great firms sell battleships, cannons, small arms, and powder to the European Governments, and this is their principal business.

Add to them the army and naval officers and you have a large percentage of the people interested in a program of war scare, because without this their business would cease.

In the United States we have the great navy yards and steel plants, who are interested for the same reason.

They have organized a so-called Navy League of the United States, which claims to be a patriotic organization; and yet most, if not all, of the men who are behind it either have their name on the Navy pay roll or are selling supplies to the Government for war preparation.

This Navy League issues a circular assigning 67 reasons why the United States should maintain a strong navy.

Yet this same league fails to assign the principal reason for a big navy.

The principal reason for a big navy is this: The people of the United States are earning, in their fields, factories, and mines, a vast amount of wealth, and our syndicate wants some of it; and the sure way to get it is to join with the war syndicate in Europe and talk war, keep up all the ill will we dare to, provided, of course, that we must be cautious and not really have an actual war, but just enough to cause Germans, Frenchmen, Englishmen, Americans, and Japanese to stand for this toll on their toil.

I can not refrain quoting from Israel Zangwill, The War God, the following lines:

"To safeguard peace prepare for war"—
I know that maxim; it was forged in hell.
This wealth of ships and guns inflames the vulgar
And makes the very war it guards against.
The God of War is now a man of business,
With vested interests.
So much sunk capital, such countless callings,
The army, navy, medicine, the church—
To bless and bury—music, engineering,
Red-tape departments, commissariats,
Stores, transports, ammunition, coaling stations,
Fortifications, cannon foundries, shipyards,
Arsenals, ranges, drill halls, floating docks,
War-loan promoters, military tailors,
Camp followers, canteens, war correspondents,
Horse breeders, armorers, torpedo builders,
Pipe-clay and medal venders, big-drum makers,
Gold-lace embroiderers, opticians, buglers,
Tentmakers, banner weavers, powder mixers,
Crutches and cork-limb manufacturers,
Balloonists, mappists, heliographers,
Inventors, flying men, and diving demons,
Beelzebub and all his hosts, who, whether
In water, earth, or air, among them pocket—
When trade is brisk—a million pounds a week!

[Applause.]

These interests constitute what has been termed "The invisible empire."

This organization of the money gods of the earth controls the earth and the people thereof.

Kings, Emperors, Czars, and Presidents do their bidding.

Senates, and Houses of Lords, and Congresses, and Cabinets take their orders from them.

The public press, theoretically a free press, is owned and controlled by them.

If you will examine for a moment, you will find that it is utterly impossible for nations to go to war until they shall have consulted the bankers of the world. One authority says there are but three nations that can go to war without consulting the bankers, and they then would have to consult their own bankers. He says England, France, and the United States are the only three nations that could go to war. He says Japan could not go to war. She might fight a defensive warfare, but she could not go to war and cross the ocean, because when she leaves her shores she must take with her supplies, and she can only take a limited supply. So, then, she would have to carry with her her chests of gold, and why? This authority said that no man would part with his mule, no man would part with his corn, no man would part with those munitions of war which he raises on the farm or makes in his factory and take the paper of a foreign nation to pay for it, and therefore it becomes necessary that a nation going to war now must have gold in her chests to do the fighting with. It is gold that fights the foreign wars at this time, and it takes gold to do it. In the Balkan War did not the nations friendly with each other finance those nations and finance the war? French bankers financed one side and English and German bankers financed the other. It is absolutely impossible to-day to go to war without consulting this invisible empire to which I have called your attention.

In every age of the world's history the masses have been preyed upon by the few.

One specious and deceptive plea follows another, and as rapidly as the people get rid of one evil in Government another rises and plants itself upon the backs of the masses and takes from them, in one guise or another, what they earn. Mr. Chairman, can Members of Congress look without alarm on the rapid increase of war tax upon their constituents.

Let us examine our expenses in 1880 and our expenses now

In 1880 we spent on the Army $26,797,300, or in round numbers, 50 cents per capita.

In 1910 (the last accurate census was taken then and for this reason I select this year for comparison), we spent $101,195,883.34, or in round numbers $1.10 per capita.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is one intermediate period that the gentleman seems to have entirely overlooked in the period from 1880 to 1910, and that is the date of the last Army bill just before the Spanish War, which was in round figures about $25,000,000 or $26,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. About $26,000,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And the Navy at that time cost about $34,000,000?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

In 1880 we spent on the Navy $14,029,968.95, or, in round numbers, 28 cents per capita.

In 1910 we spent on the Navy $136,935,199.05, or, in round numbers, $1.50 per capita.

That is, our Army expense has increased in 30 years 110 per cent per capita, and our Navy expenses over 531 per cent per capita.

The actual increase in the Army expense is over 380 per cent, while that of the Navy leaps to the enormous rate of 971 per cent.

And it will go over 1,000 per cent if the appropriation bill that is about to be reported to this House is passed. In other words, in less than a generation the naval expenses of the United States have increased over 1,000 per cent.

Including fortifications, the Army and Navy cost each congressional district in round numbers $560,000.

In 1910 the Navy cost every person in the United States $1.50 and the Army cost each person $1.10.

These two items alone of governmental expense cost each person $2.60.

They cost each family about $13.

The method of calculation to reach that is this: It is estimated that the internal revenue and the tariff tax are paid almost or practically in proportion to the number of people living within the congressional district, because it is paid on what they consume, but it figures a little more than $560,000 for each congressional district for the Army and Navy alone.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement to me as to the cost to each congressional district of $560,000. In that $560,000 are there included any pensions?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any data showing what it would cost the congressional districts for the Army and Navy including the pensions?

Mr. SISSON. I have not, but you can get the data.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Divide $180,000,000 by the number of congressional districts.

Mr. SISSON. You can add about two-thirds of this sum to that and it will give it to you.

Mr. COX. Two-thirds of $560,000?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; take two-thirds of $560,000 and add it to that and you will approximately get what the three items—Army, Navy, and pensions—cost each congressional district. The difference is this: When you pay a pension back to a district the district gets something back, but when you pay the money for Army and Navy expenses the money goes to those places where the Army and Navy build vessels, and so forth, and it is spent throughout the world.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Are not our pensions due to the fact that we were not prepared to defend ourselves?

Mr. SISSON. When?

Mr. FARR. In the Civil War and in the War of 1812.

Mr. SISSON. What about the Spanish-American War?

Mr. FARR. Yes; and it was because of it that time.

Mr. SISSON. Then I have got the gentleman just where I want him, and that is why all of the nations in the world ought to have sense enough to relieve themselves of that burden, and if there are statesmen in England, Germany, France, and the United States who can get out from under the control of this invisible empire that is controlling Parliaments, Congresses, Reichstags, and the legislative bodies of Europe you can rid the world of this incubus, but you can never do it as long as selfishness controls. I am not talking alone to the American people, but I am talking to the world. What I am saying may never reach the world, but sometimes little drops of water finally wear away a stone, and if there are enough little men such as I in the world—and it is the little men who send us all to Congress—I think this can be accomplished, but when you get the big fellow on top, he is going to get up all sorts of false issues, and he is going to get the country divided between the Republicans and Progressives and Democrats, and then the people lose sight of the great fact that this invisible empire is riding over us all.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that we ought to have peace, but if we had had a proper Navy I do not believe the Civil War, with its great loss in life and tremendous financial cost, would have occurred.

Mr. SISSON. I am not going to yield for a speech. I am going to show the gentleman that I do not think he is right. I am afraid the big people up in Pennsylvania have got hold of him just like they have the others.

Mr. FARR. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is fair and right to include in connection with our naval and military expenses the pensions that are due to the fact that we were not prepared to prevent war.

Mr. SISSON. Well, in the very beginning of things I want to tell you that war was not justified. I do not pretend to tell you which side was to blame, but there was an aggressor there. But the people of this country are being educated; it is the little red and log schoolhouse doing the work, and the people are finally awakening to the idea that the men who strut around with epaulets on their shoulders are being supported by the men who toil in the factories, in the fields, and in the mines; and when that time comes throughout the world—and they have a right to speak through the ballot box—there will be a reckoning for the men in the Reichstags, the Parliaments, and Congresses that they have not done something to remedy it.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will make his question brief.

Mr. PLATT. I just wanted to ask the gentleman whether he did not think the yellow journals had as much or more to do with war as the Reichstags and Parliaments?

Mr. SISSON. The yellow journals, as a rule, are under the control of the invisible empire—these men who have vast amounts of money interested in building war equipment—that Israel Zangwill speaks of. Those are the men, the great bankers of the world, and I want to come to that in the course of my remarks, if I have time, and I hope I will not be interrupted, because I desire to get to that point. At times they have to have a war scare so they can get big appropriations for war preparation. It is the case in England, Germany, France, and Russia; and even poor little Japan, with her back broken under her present burden, is trying to get money to build battleships to defend herself against the very best friend she has got in the world, the United States Government.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. For just a question.

Mr. QUIN. After these vested interests fool the people into a war, who does the fighting?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, well, I will tell my friend from Mississippi occasionally he will find a millionaire volunteering because he wants glory, just like the balance of us, but when the time comes, if we ever did get into trouble, I think everybody, from the richest to the poorest, whether we are right or wrong, will stand behind our country; but you will find as a rule men of great importance hire substitutes. I do not know that it is a very bad idea, because then you can kill a man five or six times. It was said about Cleveland—at least by the Republicans, to create a sentiment against him—that he had been killed 10 or 12 times; that he hired substitutes. I do not know that that is so. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope I will not be interrupted for just one moment.

We have spent on our Navy within the last 20 years $1,706,819,818, and on our Army $1,484,986,858, and on both together the stupendous sum of $3,191,806,671; and yet the Army and Navy officers who have spent this sum would have the country believe that we are in a helpless, defenseless condition in the event of war.

If one-half this vast sum had been spent on public roads, over 1,000,000 miles of post roads could have been put in ideal condition; that is, every dirt road over which the rural mail is now carried and over 100,000 miles additional could have been improved.

Now, listen. If this money had not been collected from the people and had remained in their pockets, they could have done it themselves. Now, it seems the trend of modern thought is that the Government itself ought to take away from the people money to improve roads whether the people want them improved or not. That seems to be the policy.

For one-twentieth this sum every acre of swamp land in the United States could be drained.

For less than one-tenth this sum every county courthouse in the United States could be built.

For this sum a county high school could be built in every county in the United States costing $100,000 each, leaving a sum of over $2,855,000,000, which, put out at 3 per cent interest, would yield $85,650,000, and would allow $300 each per year for 285,000 boys and girls.

Or for one-fourth this sum you could spend $1,000,000 in buildings and grounds for four universities in each State in the Union and endow each university so built with $3,000,000, and the interest on this sum would keep in perfect condition these buildings for all time and pay the salaries of 40 professors in each of these institutions, paying more than the average professor is now paid in our institutions of learning.

With what is left you could build a county school in every neighborhood of the United States, costing $25,000 each, or nearly 100,000 schoolhouses; and no child would be required to go more than 3 miles to school, and the average distance for each child to go would be a little less than 2 miles if a home were on every quarter section of land.

Or you could consolidate the schools, giving to each school 144 sections, and spend $100,000 on each school building and have $25,000 left for each school to purchase conveyance to haul every child in the county in every country district in the United States to school every morning.

Then, if you were to devote what we spend annually for the Army and Navy to paying school-teachers to teach the children in these 100,000 schoolhouses, you could pay each teacher $60 per month, put four teachers in each schoolhouse and 160 children in each school. This, added to the high schools and universities which could be endowed as I have before shown, would give every child in America a finished education. How do you like the picture, gentlemen?

Mr. Chairman, this is what could have been the condition in America to-day if the taxes taken from the people had been wisely spent for educational purposes and not shamelessly squandered on battleships, guns, and soldiers.

By way of parentheses, when you get a battleship built they say it is out of commission always in 20 years, and they say many are out of commission in 10 years and——

Mr. SLAYDEN. By commission the gentleman means they are obsolete?

Mr. SISSON. Obsolete is the term I should have used.

What is true of America is true of the other nations of the world, except that the United States is better able to stand the burdens than are the nations of Europe.

Great Britain took from the taxpayers for the fiscal year 1913–14 for her army $224,300,000 and for her navy $224,140,000, or a total for army and navy of $448,440,000.

Germany wrung from the suffering taxpayers $183,000,000 for her army and $111,300,000 for her navy, or a total of $294,300,000. These figures do not include the expenses of her colonial troops.

France spent $191,431,580 on her army and $119,571,400 on her navy, or a total of $311,002,980. This amount does not include what she spent on her colonial troops.

Russia spent on her army $317,800,000 and on her navy $122,500,000, or a total of $440,300,000.

Japan spent $82,000,000 on her army and $46,500,000 on her navy, or a total of $128,500,000.

Will some advocate of a big navy rise in his seat and tell me what real benefit civilization is getting out of this vast expenditure? What real service is being rendered to the people by this vast horde of soldiers?

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for just one question? How does the per capita expense of Germany——

Mr. SISSON. I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. PLATT. I wondered if the gentleman was coming to it.

Mr. SISSON. The cost to each nation to keep a soldier in the field in the army is as follows: Japan pays $328 per man per year; Germany pays $183 per man per year; Russia pays $247 per man per year; France pays $280 per man per year; England pays $883 per man per year; United States pays $1,545 per man per year.

In the navy it is as follows: Japan, per man, $910; England, per man, $1,634; Germany, per man, $1,662; France, per man, $1,955; United States, per man, $2,320; Russia, per man, $2,335.

The standing army of Germany is 870,000 men; that of the United States only 90,000 men.

I understand that 90,000 is just about the quota now?

Mr. HAY. That is, exclusive of certain corps that are not included in the line of the Army.

Mr. SISSON. I am including the 90,000 in the standing Army of the United States.

If our Army were as large as the German Army and the cost per man should be what it is now, the cost to the people of the United States would reach the enormous sum of $900,000,000 per year, or nearly as much as the entire Government now costs per year.

As to soldiers to population, Germany has 1 soldier to every 65 people; France has 1 soldier to every 55 people; Austria has 1 soldier to every 128 people; Russia has 1 soldier to every 137 people; Japan has 1 soldier to every 268 people; Great Britain has 1 soldier to every 177 people.

Including the navy, Germany has 1 soldier and sailor to every 61 population; Great Britain has 1 soldier and sailor to every 115 population; France has 1 soldier and sailor to every 51 population; Japan has 1 soldier and sailor to every 223 population.

To the soldiers and sailors add the vast number of civil employees connected with the Governments, and what a shocking burden the people have to bear.

Now, I want to call your attention to the world's condition, and I shall not take up the time of the committee to go into all the smaller nations. In 1911 there were 41 countries enrolled as members of The Hague Tribunal; yet in that same year, according to the Statesman's Yearbook, 30 of these countries spent for army and navy approximately the amounts given below:

Russia	$304,333,585.00
Norway	5,704,934.50
Sweden	23,947,287.40
Denmark	9,210,905.40
Germany	303,290,492.00
Belgium	14,800,511.87
France	289,962,838.00
Italy	126,753,522.00
Austria-Hungary	109,455,565.00
Bulgaria	8,877,421.00
Egypt	5,101,176.60
Japan	65,190,690.00
Argentine	17,518,514.13
Belgian Kongo	2,211,876.50
China	22,365,000.00
Greece	5,757,040.23
Guatemala	2,243,996.00
Mexico	10,833,603.00
Netherlands	20,613,370.72
Peru	2,175,324.00
Portugal	13,595,539.24
Roumania	13,370,782.92
Servia	5,655,841.14
Spain	49,689,752.78
Switzerland	8,515,845.72
Turkey	48,418,131.24
Uruguay	3,580,740.00
Chile	6,100,000.00
Great Britain	339,425,000.00
United States	280,073,619.00
Total	2,109,792,824.79

Now, the current expenses of European Governments have been practically paid—sometimes a little overpaid—each current year out of the current taxes. Therefore the indebtedness of all of Europe—the great nations, at any rate—is a war debt. Now, let us see what it is. The war debt of Europe is as follows:

Austria and Hungary have a bonded war debt of $4,000,000,000; France has a bonded war debt of $7,500,000,000; Germany has a bonded war debt of $5,000,000,000; Italy has a bonded war debt of $2,750,000,000; Russia has a bonded war debt of $4,500,000,000; England has a bonded war debt of $3,500,000,000; or a total of $27,250,000,000.

As will be seen, these six nations have a fixed bonded indebtedness on account of war and the support of armies in time of peace of $27,250,000,000. In other words, all of Europe is mortgaged for the stupendous sum of $27,250,000,000. The interest on that, one authority says, is a little over $900,000,000 annually. I did not have the data available in order to ascertain whether that statement is true or not, but these figures are ones which you can get by an investigation of the reports in the Library of Congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit just a question?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that debt being paid or is it being increased?

Mr. SISSON. The debt is not being paid, and for this reason: The English debt is a fixed indebtedness, and is never intended to be paid, because they realized after the Napoleonic wars that they never could pay it. But France last year was not able to pay her current expenses and pay her war-debt interest, and so she actually sold bonds to pay the interest on her bonded indebtedness. In other words, France borrowed from her own people money with which to pay the interest on what she owed them, as all of this debt is practically owned by her own people.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Practically, what is the difference between the intention not to pay and inability to pay?

Mr. SISSON. There is practically no difference. Under all the theory of political economists and all the authorities on the question, when a nation can not pay the interest on its debt the nation's finances will soon reach the point where her credit is bound to go by the board unless she retrenches expenses. But France has reached her limit for borrowing, because she is compelled to borrow from her own people now the money to pay the interest which she owes to her own people.

Mr. Chairman, the picture in Europe is indeed gloomy. Think of the toilers of the future having taken away from them the interest on this vast war debt. They are the slaves of the bondholders; nothing more or less. May a wise Providence guide our people so as to avoid this horrible condition. The United States now owes nearly $3,000,000,000, upon which our people pay interest, and unless Congress calls a halt on appropriations we will have to add to our bonded indebtedness, and soon our children will be enslaved by the fortunate bondholding class. I am sorry that my time will not permit me to finish what I had intended to say on other phases of this subject. I should have been glad to have discussed a world remedy for this world's sickness. I hope to be able to do so later in the session. Let me appeal to Congress in the name of the masses who bear this great burden not to make the load heavier. Let me appeal to our great President and this Democratic Cabinet to aid and assist in carrying out the one plank that has always been in Democratic platforms from its birth, "Economy in public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened." This is the touchstone and true test of Democracy. Do you respect the man that toils? If so, let him keep what he earns? Do not take it from him in excessive taxation. Let us by legislation keep our pledges. This is the plain duty of the party to-day. Will we live up to it? If we will, the Democratic Party will have a long lease of power. If we do not, we will surely go out of power, as we should.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am very sorry indeed that I can not finish these desultory remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the figures that I called to the attention of the committee a few moments ago. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a resolution asking for an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the financial transactions connected with the management of the Rock Island Railway in recent years and the condition of its property with reference to its capacity to serve the public and safety for travel. Other investigations, similar to the one proposed, have been ordered with reference to other railways. As a result important facts, valuable to the public, were developed in regard to the New Haven and Frisco Railroads. The New Haven was found to be swamped with properties purchased at a price much greater than their real value and its management to have been either woefully incompetent or willful in malfeasance. The same and more could be said of the Frisco management. The investigation disclosed both incompetency and malfeasance, and suits are now pending against some of its officials to compel them to disgorge their ill-gotten gains. What will be developed by the proposed investigation I do not undertake to say. If the desired facts could be otherwise ascertained, the investigation would not be necessary. Not knowing what the investigation will show I make no predictions as to its results, and will only state that upon its face a case is presented that calls as loudly for investigation as either of the companies I have mentioned. It should also be added that the management of the New Haven in an economic way affected only its stockholders. The management of the Rock Island has more particularly affected the public.

The story of how the control of the Rock Island was obtained by a few daring speculators and reckless financiers reads like the pages of a romance.

The era surrounding the opening of this century was characterized by the formation of great combinations, among which was a trust which took in the tinplate mills and turned a cataract of water upon their stock. In 1902 a syndicate or association, which had made immense sums by organizing the Tinplate Trust, cast about for a new field of operation, and their eyes fell upon the Rock Island Railway as affording a new and greater opportunity for gain. The Rock Island was then a splendid property. Its main line reached from Chicago to Denver, with branches to St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Kansas City. It ran through the most fertile districts of a great Nation; its location in Iowa and Illinois was especially favorable; its short branch lines served as feeders; its terminal facilities in the large cities that I have mentioned were of immense value; and its line was double-tracked some distance beyond the Mississippi. Its main line had continuously been improved by the erection of fine stations and other facilities; its trackage, way, and equipment were kept in condition that enabled it to compete successfully with other roads in its field; and its capital stock and interest-bearing debt was low in proportion to its mileage and assets. The amount of its stock at that time was only $60,000,000, and this and the other matters which I have mentioned rendered it a most enticing object in the eyes of those who managed railroads with a view to speculation rather than public service.

Early in the year last mentioned there was formed by the association to which I have referred two holding companies, one called the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Rail*road* Co., to hold the stock of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Rail*way* Co.—the original company—and the other to hold the stock of the railroad company. This second holding company just mentioned was called the Rock Island Co., and was a New Jersey corporation. The first move which these promoters made was to get control of the directorship of the original railway company. Having done this, they immediately raised its stock from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000. Then they issued 4 per cent bonds to the amount of $71,000,000 of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co. and $71,000,000 common stock and $50,000,000 of preferred stock of the Rock Island Co. The 4 per cent bonds of the railroad company were to be secured by an equal amount of stock in the original company pledged as collateral. At one stroke they issued against $71,000,000 of stock of the original company $192,000,000 of stock and bonds. Thus $121,000,000 of water was poured not exactly into but upon the Railway Company's stocks and bonds. As an irrigation feat this ought to recommend those who planned it to the Reclamation Service, but it ought not to have been expected that it would be appreciated by the general public.

It will be observed that by the device of creating a holding company to control a holding company the promoters were enabled to secure control of this magnificent property with a small investment on their part. The preferred stock in the Rock Island Co. alone had voting power. A majority of this $50,000,000 of stock—now quoted at about $5,000,000—could manipulate this great railway system at its pleasure. What profits were secured from this scheme is one matter which this investigation should develop. What banking institutions, if any, were concerned therein is equally important. It is not necessary to inquire what the railway company got, for it received nothing from the sale of such of these securities that went upon the market.

The first year of the new management was notable for an increase in mileage operated of about 3,000 miles, but nearly all of this increase was in properties of questionable character—lines that ran through sparsely populated districts, cheaply constructed and poorly supplied with equipment. For example, the new management acquired by lease or purchase of stock the Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf and the Arkansas & Louisiana Railroads, aggregating about 1,350 miles. Later an investment was made in the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, commonly called the Frisco, to which investment I shall refer hereafter. The effect of these and other investments of a similar character is shown by the fact that while the old Rock Island Railway was operated at a cost of about 60 per cent of its gross earnings, to-day its operating ratio is 73.5 per cent, notwithstanding the great improvements that have been made in respect to its heavy traffic lines by the use of larger cars and engines.

Information as to the cost of the properties acquired would be both interesting and valuable. The new management has bought and constructed additional lines, has leased others, acquired bonds and stocks of various kinds. With the exception of the Frisco and the leased lines, their cost is not known, and, while only an investigation can determine their values, it is evident that their ownership, on the whole, is not profitable.

This, however, was not the worst effect of the control under these holding companies. In 1902, according to Moody's Analyses of Railroad Investments, the Rock Island interest-bearing debt was $18,239 per mile. In 1911 it was $38,692 per mile. At present it is still larger, and if the rentals are capitalized at 5 per cent and included the debt is now $51,304.55 per mile. Bear in mind that this has no reference to the bonds and stocks of the holding companies, which, while in a position to suck the lifeblood from the operating department of the railway, were not a debt of the original corporation. These figures refer simply to the interest-bearing debt of the original railway company. In other words, in less than 10 years this holding company management had more than doubled the amount of interest-bearing debt per mile, and it has reached such a stage to-day that the net income of the system is but little more than sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds issued by the railroad company to which I referred in the outset, and would not be sufficient for that purpose if the road was properly maintained. This interest must be paid from dividends on the original stock, and there is over $3,000,000 less available for dividends in 1913 than in 1902.

But, some one will say, perhaps this increase, although it seems enormous, is still justified by the expenditures for improvements. Possibly the line has been double-tracked, new terminals have been acquired at large expense, and its equipment raised to a degree of efficiency comparable to that of the best roads of the country. Unfortunately exactly the contrary is true. No double-track worth mentioning has been built since the holding company's control, although the line through Iowa is sadly in need of it. There has not been expended an amount anything like what ought to have been set aside for maintenance purposes.

It is specially in need of terminals in the South and West. Its equipment is so short that it is reported that it has spent $6,000,000 since 1907 for equipment hire alone, and still it is known that it has not been properly supplied. A chorus of complaints has gone up from the public all along its lines for lack of proper service, trains behind time, inability to move traffic, and the road has been heavily mulcted in damages by reason of delayed freight. Wrecks have been frequent, and only good fortune has prevented the casualties from being large. For a number of years I have had my home in a county-seat town on a branch line of this road, the rails of which bear the stamp showing that they were made in Sheffield, England, nearly half a century ago. Its whole line, from the Mississippi west through Iowa, needs reballasting. From Iowa City to Council Bluffs the management is trying very unsuccessfully to do a double-track business over a single-track road. Its competitors, the North Western, the Burlington, and even the Milwaukee, which has not half the opportunity for traffic which the Rock Island possesses, have all constructed double-track lines across Iowa and spent millions in taking out grades and curves. The Rock Island still has the same grades and the same old line in western Iowa, so crooked that it was facetiously said that its engineers were trying to get as much mileage between Des Moines and Council Bluffs as possible in order to get a larger land grant, for, like many other western roads, the Rock Island Co. was largely aided by the Government when its main line was constructed.

As I have stated, the amount expended by the Rock Island for maintenance has been much less than that of other similar companies. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, it spent more for maintenance than theretofore, but then only 27.9 per cent of gross receipts, as against 30.8 per cent by the ill-equipped Missouri Pacific, 32.3 per cent by the Atchison, and 30.3 per cent by the Burlington. Its gross receipts increased for the same period $6,597,000. This made it possible to increase its expenditures for maintenance beyond the meager scale which had hitherto been allowed, with the result that there has been a noticeable improvement in the service. The difference in expenditures for maintenance looks small when expressed in percentages, but the Rock Island's receipts for transportation were nearly $71,000,000 for the last fiscal year, and 3 per cent more for maintenance would have been over $2,000,000, which, if used, would have greatly benefited its service and increased its earning power.

The most extraordinary feature of the situation is the manner in which the per cent of fixed charges has risen as compared to the total net income. In 1902, when the present management assumed control, the fixed charges were only 40 per cent of the net income. In 1911 they had risen to 90 per cent. At the present time, if I am correctly informed, even this small margin has been practically wiped out. This is due to the enormous increase of the interest-bearing debt. In the fiscal year of 1911 and 1912 alone the net increase in funded and interest-bearing debt was over $21,000,000, without any increase in the mileage to speak of. This allows for all indebtedness that was taken up during that year. The greater portion of this increase was caused by the issue of $20,000,000 in new bonds. A portion of this sum was used to make much-needed improvements in equipment and maintenance, but this accounts for a comparatively small amount. The interest-bearing debt has now risen to nearly $258,000,000. As near as I can ascertain, when control was acquired by the holding companies, the interest-bearing debt was about $71,000,000. In other words, it has increased since that time about $187,000,000. This can not be accounted for by the increase in mileage. The railways acquired, while extensive in length, were, for the most part, such as I have heretofore described, and it does not seem possible that their value can make up a proper proportion of this increase in indebtedness. It should also be observed in this connection that a large portion of the mileage operated by the Rock Island is leased.

Where has the money gone? I can not say. An investigation is the only way in which such facts can be ascertained. But, while I can not tell where all the money has gone, I find that over $13,000,000 of this interest-bearing debt is due for equipment which other roads similarly situated managed to obtain without so disproportionately increasing the interest-bearing debt, while the Rock Island was borrowing for this purpose and expending less than its competitors.

There is also another place I can designate. In 1903 the management purchased the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co., since made notorious by bankruptcy and a congressional investigation. After this unfortunate railway had been loaded with about $58,000,000 of additional interest-bearing debt it was concluded that it would be well to cut it loose, but, as may be supposed, after these encumbrances had been saddled upon it no one would buy it for the original amount which it had cost the Rock Island, and the only wonder was that it could be sold at all. When the Rock Island bought the Frisco stock it gave $60 a share in 5 per cent bonds and $60 a share in Rock Island common. In other words, it put out over $17,000,000 in 5 per cent bonds of the railroad company and an equal amount of Rock Island common stock. At that time the common stock was estimated to be worth $40 a share. In the sale there was lost, whatever common stock was worth, the interest on the bonds up to February 1, 1910, when the sale was made, and the additional amount of bonds supplied to retire the original $17,000,000, which was $6,945,000, a total amount estimated by the Financial Chronicle at the time of $19,534,000. You will understand that the original issue of $17,000,000 in bonds used as a part of this purchase was paid off, but the new bonds, amounting to $7,500,000 and drawing 5 per cent interest, are in effect a claim against the Rock Island Railway. That much at least the public must pay interest on. While they were bonds of the railroad company, they were purchased by the railway company at the time and put in its treasury. It seems like a jugglery of figures that the rail*way* company should buy bonds of the rail*road* company and put these bonds in its treasury as part of its assets. After all, this sale seems to have been the best thing the present management has done, for the Frisco is now in the hands of receivers.

In 1903, 1904, and 1905 dividends were paid on the preferred stock. Apparently $5,000,000 went in that way. That these dividends were not justifiable is perfectly clear. They were obtained by taking from the road money that ought to have been spent for equipment and maintenance, thus depriving it of the means of performing its duty to the public and injuring its earning capacity.

Evidently a large sum went into stocks and bonds. At the close of the last fiscal year the railway company held over $13,000,000 worth of stocks, the book value of which was placed at over $7,000,000—among these stocks some $5,326,000 of the Rock Island Improvement Co. What this corporation is, why the railway company owns any of its stock, what such stocks cost, and what they are worth are important subjects for investigation. The railway company also holds in miscellaneous investments—such as coal companies, bridge companies, town lot and land companies—stock to the par value of over $4,000,000, which is invoiced at something over $800,000. Among the securities which it holds and has classed as marketable are over $1,000,000 in the preferred stock of the Rock Island Co.—the second of the holding companies. It would be interesting to know what the railway company paid for this stock. It is now worth 9 to 10 cents on the dollar. It also holds over $5,000,000 in the Toledo, St. Louis & Western bonds.

The whole list of the stocks and bonds held by it is too long to be detailed here, and unless an investigation is had the profits or loss on the transactions in its securities can not be made known.

Like the New Haven, the Rock Island has been borne down by a crushing and rapidly increasing load of interest-bearing debt, which, in the case of the New Haven, was caused by the purchase of properties at a price largely in excess of their income-producing value. The rapid increase in the proportion of operating expenses to the gross income of the Rock Island, which I have already set forth, tends to show a similar state of affairs with reference to properties acquired by the last-named company. Of course, nearly all railroads have shown an increase in the percentage of operating expenses as compared to gross receipts, but few make so bad a showing in this respect as the Rock Island. While the New Haven increase of debt very seriously affected its stockholders, the road was not stinted in expenditures for equipment and maintenance. In 1911 it spent for maintenance $6,941 per mile, while the Rock Island spent during the same time and for the same purpose only $3,280. The frightful accidents which have occurred on the New Haven have not been caused by lack of expenditure nor, indeed, by the condition of its track and equipment, unless it can be said that a bad type of block signals contributed thereto and the lack of steel cars. In the case of the Rock Island, inability to perform proper service from lack of facilities is the greatest cause of complaint, but it is one that can be remedied.

Figures are sometimes presented which tend to show that the total capitalization of the Rock Island is not large compared to some other roads similarly situated and smaller than others, which might be mentioned, but these statements convey but little information. The proper capitalization of a road depends upon features that can only be disclosed by a complete analysis of its property, among which I might mention the value of its terminals, the amount of its double track, the condition of its roadbed, and its equipment. This varies so much with different lines that this kind of a comparison means but little. It should also be borne in mind that there is a vast difference between adding to the stock of a corporation and adding to its interest-bearing debts. Upon the stock dividends are, or at least should be, paid only when earned, but the interest on bonds and notes must be paid whether the public is served properly or not or the railroad must go into the hands of a receiver.

Of course, wages have largely appreciated in recent years and all kinds of material for the use of railroads have greatly advanced in price. This advance, however, has been to some extent offset by the increased efficiency of locomotives and cars. In any event, these advances are not controlling with reference to the matters sought to be investigated. The Rock Island is doing business at a profit, and a large one on the whole, although some lines which have been purchased by it are now operated at an annual deficit. The question seems to be how to get the proper proportion of its earnings applied to its maintenance. I have already shown that it has not used the proportion which other lines similarly situated have appropriated for this purpose, and I assert that it can never give proper service to the public until this is done. There seems to be no good reason why the Rock Island should not have expended in the past as much in this direction as the North Western, Burlington, or the Milwaukee.

If it brings its road up to the proper standard it must expend even more than these roads in the future. If there is any reason why this has not been done in the past, the public is entitled to know it. If it can be done in the future, the public wants to find it out and then have this obligation performed. I am satisfied that the public should receive better service from the Rock Island, and I am absolutely sure that the Rock Island itself would be able to make more money as well as render better service if necessary equipment was provided, its line double-tracked where needful, grades reduced, and curves taken out. How this could and should be done is a subject for experts after the facts have been ascertained by a proper investigation, and only by a report made by such an investigation can the public know what it is entitled to demand and what it should receive. Through such a report alone can it be expected that the road will be put in proper condition to render the service of which the public has so unjustly been deprived.

I have made some statements herein with reference to the condition of the tracks, equipment, and also of service. While these are made from my personal knowledge, they constitute but my own unsupported statement. Here, again, the public is entitled to know what conclusions would be drawn by experts with reference to railway matters. Some of the details which I have narrated with reference to the holding companies already have been made known by one of the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission. To that extent the resolution calls for facts that have already thus been published, but the public is not generally aware of their existence, and, in any event, they will become necessary as a foundation for any report that may be made.

The most important questions do not relate to the formation of the holding companies nor even to their capitalization, although the extent to which a confiding public was induced to invest in the securities of these companies would of itself form a proper subject for investigation. So far as the stocks so issued are concerned, about the only value now attached to them arises from the power which they give over the original railway company. The recent quotations for the Rock Island stock are 4⅞ for the common and 8½ for the preferred; but these stocks were at one time quoted as high as 53 for the common and 86 for the preferred. How much of these stocks were marketed and how much retained by the original promoters of the scheme I can not say, but those who bought them as an investment have experienced almost a total loss. The bonds issued by the railroad company and secured by the stock of the railway company as collateral, of course, stand upon a different footing. They always had and still have a substantial property back of them, although considerably depreciated from former values.

It must not be understood from what I have said that the Rock Island has not spent large sums for maintenance and equipment. Necessarily, with so large a mileage and doing so large a business, it was required so to do. Since 1902 more than half of the mileage which it owns has been relaid with better and a portion with heavier rails. In recent years a large amount of track has been ballasted and nearly 1,000 miles equipped with block signals. As regards steel passenger cars, it is claimed that there is only one line west of Chicago that owns more than the Rock Island. There is no question that there has been an improvement recently, but it is equally unquestionable that further improvements are imperatively necessary.

Nor is it to be concluded that the Rock Island is not a paying institution. It has been making money in its transportation business and would make more if properly equipped. Its net operating revenue for the last fiscal year was over $18,000,000 and its operating income nearly $16,000,000. Its total net income lacked but little of $17,000,000, but unfortunately the fixed charges, of which over $11,000,000 were interest on the indebtedness of which I have spoken, amounted to $12,885,000. Its net earnings per mile were $2,343. A concern that can show such a large net revenue from its operations is still a good property, and under proper management may yet rank as one of the great railways of the Nation. By "management" I do not refer to the direct operation of the road, but to its financial policies. Its operation I shall discuss further on. Here I will also say that I use the word "promoters" in its literal sense. I do not know that there were any "promoters," as the term is used on the stock exchange, or any "syndicate." It is immaterial whether there were, but that certain persons were acting in concert can not be doubted.

I have made some investigation as to the workings of the operating departments of the road. In recent years it appears to have been reasonably and possibly highly efficient when considered in connection with the conditions under which the work was conducted. It can not, of course, effect the saving which can be made if the line had more double track and if its way was in better condition. I have no criticism to offer upon the operating department, and so far as the operatives themselves are concerned I know of no finer body of men engaged in that line of work than those employed on the Rock Island system. Give them the material and the opportunity and they stand ready and able to render services to the public not inferior to that given to the public by any railroad in the country.

It has been the fashion in financial circles to criticize those who found fault with the management of some of the railways, because the faultfinders, like myself, have had no practical experience in railroad work. These criticisms are wide of the mark. The fault which is found is not with the operating department, as a rule, but with what I term "the financial management," and I observe that in many instances, and notably with the Rock Island, its board of directors and high officials have not been taken from men trained in the schools of efficiency or practical work. They have usually been men distinguished for operation upon the stock exchange rather than in transportation. In this connection it is noted that the Wall Street Journal of recent date waxes sarcastic and suggests that a lawyer be made president of the Pere Marquette, another debt-ridden institution. Well, the Rock Island had a distinguished lawyer at its head for some time, so the idea does not seem original. It will be admitted that those who controlled the finances of the New Haven and Frisco were "professionals," but the lines in which they were expert were not measured by ties and rails. On the other hand, it may be questioned whether even with amateurs in the operating department the death roll of the New Haven would have been increased or the expenses of the Frisco made heavier.

The difficulty under which the Rock Island labors at present can not be laid at the doors of its operating department. The real cause, as I believe, is the holding company under which it has been managed, with its resulting evils. I know it will be said that the holding company's indebtedness is not that of the Rock Island, but the interest-bearing debt which has been so greatly inflated is the debt of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co.

Nor is this all. The stocks and bonds of the holding company have hung over the railway company like a cloud. They have increased the rate of interest which it must pay and compelled its securities to be sold at a discount. The existence of the holding companies was also the cause of this increase in capitalization being made in the form of interest-bearing debt rather than by stocks upon which dividends would be paid when earned instead of interest regardless of the earnings of the road. Some roads which are in excellent condition appear to have a higher capitalization compared with the Rock Island, but it is in the form of stocks and not interest-bearing debt and presents no obligation which absolutely must be met.

The system under which the holding companies have controlled the finances of the Rock Island is utterly indefensible from any standpoint. In its origin it afforded financial freebooters an opportunity to exploit the railway and the public. The railway company never received one dollar of benefit by or through the stock issued by these holding companies. The millions of securities thus floated were put up merely for the aggrandizement of a few men without any return being given therefor. The holding companies ought to be abolished. The slate should be sponged clean and a new start made.

I am not an advocate of the Government ownership and control of railways, and the facts which I have stated have no tendency to support the theory of those who favor it. They do show, however, that we need laws to regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds by public-service corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and that any device similar to the holding companies put in practice in this case should be absolutely forbidden. When this is done there may not be as many American speculators who are able to maintain racing stables in England and hang the stalls of their horses with silk, as the newspapers reported with reference to one of these promoters, but the public will come nearer getting its dues.

At this date a reorganization is under way. Whether the road will be put upon a sound basis, in my opinion, can only be determined by the facts developed by the proposed investigation. If the result should show that circumstances beyond control had brought about a state of affairs by which this once splendid property has been reduced to its present condition, the public would like to know it. If, on the other hand, it develops a repetition of the facts shown by the other investigations made, certainly it is imperatively necessary that the public should be informed. What has already developed has made plain the evils of holding companies generally. It is perhaps too early to say whether they must entirely be abolished, or whether in cases where the State laws permit no operating companies except those organized under their own laws, they may be permitted under certain restrictions.

There have been many investigations of late, some of which have not been altogether profitable, but it can not be said that the investigations into railway affairs have been of this character. So far as the public is concerned, there are no investigations for which it looks forward so eagerly, nor for which it is so desirous; nor have there been any which, in my judgment, are of so much public benefit as those which relate to public utilities. The public wants the light turned on, and those who are connected with the railway management ought to be, and I assume are, willing to have these matters brought into the open day. Publicity is the greatest opponent of wrong and the greatest champion of the right. There are some evils which can not be reached by statute and are only curbed and controlled by the force of public opinion; but so long as we have merely charges and denials the public opinion is unsettled, becomes willing to believe there is wrong where none exists, and for want of information is unmoved by acts which have been concealed from its scrutiny. Whatever expenses are necessary for making this investigation will be grudged by no one. The proposed investigation, Mr. Chairman, is called for by the facts demanded by the public, and this House ought soon to enter upon the consideration of the resolution which provides for it. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I had an understanding with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to the effect that I might yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] is recognized.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I simply ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is recognized. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to himself?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will indicate that later.

Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me I desire to discuss with the committee a military training schools bill which I introduced some time ago and which is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

But before going into the consideration of this military training schools bill I desire to make some observations concerning the Army. From time to time during the last five or six months statements have been made in the public press purporting to come from high officers of the Army reflecting upon the efficiency of the Army and our preparedness for war. Whether the officers of our Army in these newspaper stories have been accurately quoted or not I do not know; but I know that on Tuesday last I received a pamphlet under the frank of the Chief of Staff, which pamphlet, among other things, has the following:

> The present status of the Army is not satisfactory to those who are in it or those who are out of it, so far as the latter have knowledge of the facts. It is very small considering the population and extent and exposure of the country. It is, we hope, very efficient for its size, and we believe that it would give a very excellent account of itself as long as it lasted in a serious war.

If ever an army was damned with faint praise, in my judgment, the American Army is damned in the above excerpt taken from the printed article written by a Mr. Orton and sent out by the Chief of Staff.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That was written by whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. By a Mr. Orton.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who is he?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I believe he is a professor in an Ohio university. Appearing in the papers from time to time have been purported statements from high Army officials that the Panama Canal was in danger of being taken by the British or the Germans; that Hawaii was at the mercy of the Japs; that the Philippines could be overrun in 10 minutes by Japan; and the latest scare was, according to high Army officers, Japan could land a million men on our western coast, the idea being they could soon overrun this country because we had little Navy and no Army to protect us. In talking personally to officers of the Army I find a growing desire among them to say that our Army is insufficient and that we are unprepared for war. In my judgment, this grows out of the published statements from high officers, to which I have heretofore referred. These high officials have in view, of course, the enlargement of our Army. They are constantly talking about the great standing armies of Europe and comparing our preparedness for war with the preparedness of France, Germany, and England.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have a small Army of about 89,000 officers and men. We appropriate, in round numbers, $100,000,000 a year for that Army. This does not take into consideration the 120,000 men in the militia of the various States. England has an army of 255,000 and spends $137,000,000 for her army. France has an army of 712,000 and spends $180,000,000 therefor. Germany has an army of 626,000 and spends $204,000,000 therefor. Russia has an army of 1,200,000 and spends $281,000,000 therefor. Japan has an army of 230,000 and spends $55,000,000 therefor.

It will thus be seen, by a simple calculation, that the average soldier unit is paid per year by the United States $1,125; by England, $500; by Germany, $300; by France, $250; by Japan, $240; by Russia, $230. Thus it will be seen that the larger the standing army the less pay per officer or man. Do these Army officers want us to follow this foreign example? It is sure to follow in the end if this kind of policy is adopted.

Now, it seems that it is the ambition of some of our Army officers to create in this country a large standing Army in time of peace, always ready for war at a moment's notice. This is contrary to our history, contrary to our free institutions, and has always been held by our real statesmen as a menace to free government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these doleful predictions on the part of some of our Army officers about the inefficiency of our Army and its unpreparedness for war always come at that season of the year when appropriation bills are being considered, and I believe they come from a desire upon the part of these officers to scare Congress into making larger appropriations for the Army. The latest scare was given the Senate, it seems, early this month, when it was discovered that apparently we had no field guns or ammunition in reserve. The "Gloomy Guses" of the Army had made a touchdown, and they got the appropriation for that purpose increased over $1,000,000 on the idea that Japan might overrun this country at any time if we did not appropriate $1,000,000 more for reserve field artillery and reserve ammunition therefor. They did this notwithstanding that the daily papers reported the news from Japan that she was almost in a state of revolution and bankruptcy.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come when it is the duty of Congress to pass a resolution or law prohibiting Army officers from making and publishing statements reflecting upon the efficiency of our Army or upon our preparedness for war. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman leaves that particular part of his discourse, will he permit me a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It seems to me I read in the public press or heard about the Halls of Congress a few days ago that an order had been issued forbidding certain people from talking too much about Army matters to the public.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether it has been or not, but I know it was——

Mr. SLAYDEN. There was such an order, I will say to the gentleman, and it threatened to put the Infantry publication out of business. But the gentleman knows that the chief sinners in this respect have not been the subordinates, but the high officials of the War Department themselves, and they have occupied pulpits and rostrums and availed of every means of publicity to do it. I ask the gentleman if he does not believe those should be stopped, too?

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe that anybody, knowing the American Army as I believe I know it, who casts reflections upon its efficiency or upon our preparedness for war ought to be criticized and dismissed from the service. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the gentleman believe that it is an exceedingly improper thing for the officers of the Army or Navy to criticize the policies of Congress?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do. I believe they could better give their time and attention to the building up of the best Army and Navy possible without undertaking to run this end of the machine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does not the gentleman think it especially reprehensible for any high official of the Army to send out, under his frank, such a statement as was read by the gentleman from Tennessee in the opening of his address?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just said so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Reiterate it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; in a moment.

Now, let us see what the facts are, for a moment. We have a well-trained little Army of 75,000 men, officered by officers the most of whom are trained at West Point, the greatest military training school for officers, perhaps, in the world. They are the chosen young men of the country, and, with few exceptions, I believe to be the most capable and efficient officers on the face of the globe to-day. The other officers are taken from the ranks and from civil life, picked men, who know their business and are selected because of their peculiar fitness to act as officers. This Army is the best paid army in the world, as the above figures show. It is the best fed army in the world. It is the best clothed army in the world. It is the best housed army in the world; and, for my part, I believe to-day it is the most efficient and best prepared army there is on the face of the earth, because it is composed of American citizens who are not afraid to fight and who are the superiors of any race of men on the globe. [Applause.]

Added to this Army we have a splendidly trained militia in every State of the Union. Added to this, we have agricultural training-school institutions where military instructions are given by Army officers of the United States to thousands of young men throughout the country. Added to this, we have a great volunteer force of the United States, upon which our country has always depended for protection and from which she has always received every protection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is claimed by some of these officers from time to time that we are unprepared for war because we have not the guns and ammunition. The Army concededly has all of the small arms that it needs. The militia force of the country has all the small arms that it needs, and we have a million rifles in reserve, in addition, that can be put into service on five days' notice and all small-arm ammunition in reserve we need for these rifles. We have spent nearly $200,000,000 since Mr. Cleveland's last administration upon arming and protecting our coasts, and I believe they are in as good a condition as any coast defenses on earth, armed and equipped and ready for action at any time. But the cry is made that we have not the field artillery. In his claim before the committee, Gen. Wood stated that it was necessary to have about 1,300 pieces in reserve and ammunition that is necessary to go with them. Of these, they already have 750 pieces, and in a pinch it is claimed we could manufacture 500 pieces a year. In the fortifications bill this House appropriated $450,000 for field artillery and $900,000 for ammunition therefor. This bill carries $750,000 more for field artillery for the militia and $1,000,000 for ammunition therefor. And yet it is claimed we are not prepared for war because we have not the field artillery and ammunition, and the Senate answered this claim by increasing the amount in the fortifications bill $1,150,000.

Now I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman has been criticizing the officers of the Army——

Mr. McKELLAR. Some of the officers of the Army.

Mr. KAHN. Some of them, I should say.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been very highly complimenting the general officers of the Army, and I believe they are entitled to it.

Mr. KAHN. But does not the gentleman know that those criticisms could be absolutely stopped by a simple order?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly what I think. I think we will get them stopped.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Should not that order come from the head of the Army rather than from this House?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I think when certain Army officers undertake to get appropriations in the House it is a live matter right then and there, and the House ought to act in the matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to injure anyone on earth. I have no interest in this matter except the interest I feel I ought to have as a member of the Military Affairs Committee of this House. I do not believe that these officers ought to be permitted to give out these idle vaporings about the inefficiency of our Army or about our unpreparedness for war. They are misleading and incorrect, and may at any time involve us in trouble, and I want to suggest in all candor that I hope that these officers will not permit themselves to give out more such gloomy statements, such misleading and improper statements. But if they should, then I believe it is the duty of Congress to rise to the occasion and enact a law dismissing from the Army any officer who so far forgets himself, his Army, or his country, as publicly to speak or write either about the inefficiency of our Army or about our unpreparedness for war, whatever his purpose may be for making the statement.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it necessary to invoke a weapon so powerful as that to stop indiscretions of speech on the part of the officers of our Army and Navy?

Mr. McKELLAR. As I stated a moment ago, I hope nothing more than a suggestion is necessary.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is an authority on these military matters. Has not the President, the head of the Army, the authority to stop these things at any time?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is probably true.

Mr. SLOAN. Under his oath of office.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may never have been called to his attention. I do not know now that it has. I do not believe it has ever been called to his attention. I desire to call the attention, not only of this House, but the attention of the American people, and of all those in authority, to what some of these officers are doing.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just one minute.

I would not belong to an army organization that I did not have more confidence in and no better opinion of than some of these officers seem to have in the American Army. In everyday life the lawyer who is always overawed by the splendid case presented by his opponent and doubtful of his own, is a certain loser. The business man who can always succeed if he just had the means and resources of his competitor in business, never succeeds. And so, there never was a commander who won a battle, who was always thinking and talking of the inferiority of his own forces and the superiority of the enemy's forces. Mr. Chairman, if our Army officers feel compelled to go into print they should rather follow the example of that sturdy old soldier, Gen. Miles, who in a recent interview gave stirring expressions of his patriotism and confidence in American arms; or like that splendid specimen of the American soldier, now about completing the greatest engineering project of the world, Col. Goethals, who, when asked by a newspaper correspondent the other day if we were able to protect the canal said: "There never was a doubt about it."

Mr. Chairman, our standing Army is large enough in times of peace—and I do not believe that the American people would agree that it should be made any larger—and in times of war we need have no fears but that it will be large enough, strong enough, and brave enough to come out victorious in any contest in which our people may ever be thrown.

Sixty-five per cent of the entire revenues of this great Government are now applied to war—past, present, or future. We contribute yearly $100,000,000 to the Army, $140,000,000 to the Navy, and $200,000,000 to pensions, a total in these three large items of $440,000,000 per year. For the three most important peaceful pursuits in life we appropriate, for education $2,400,000 per year; for agriculture, about $20,000,000 per year; and for commerce, about $5,225,000 per year; about one-thirteenth, in all, as much as we pay out for the three principal items of war alone. And yet, Mr. Chairman, these Army officers above referred to are continuously striving to increase our standing Army to a half million of men and our annual appropriation for the Army on the road to $500,000,000 in an endeavor to follow and pattern after the tax-burdened and oppressed monarchies of Europe and the East.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that these offending Army officers will read these suggestions and hereafter strive to get the best results from what we have rather than in the vain endeavor to follow plans which are contrary to our free institutions and contrary to the wishes of the American people.

I appeal to them in all kindness, instead of these persistent efforts to imitate European and eastern monarchies in building up a large standing Army to the detriment of the whole people and to the jeopardy of the Republic, that they will heartily and enthusiastically join the Secretary of War and the military committees of the House and Senate in building up the most perfect Army organization of the world within the limit of numbers and within the limit of cost, which in times of peace should never be over $100,000,000.

They could give us a most perfect fighting machine, amply sufficient for the protection of our every interest, if they would devote more time to the internal workings and to the skillful and economic management of the Army now provided for rather than to concocting ambitious and dangerous schemes for the enlargement of our standing Army in times of peace, contrary to the settled policy and wishes of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied 21 minutes.

THE MILITARY TRAINING SCHOOLS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the military training schools bill which I have introduced.

This bill provides that a military training school shall be established under the joint auspices of the State and of the United States in every State of the Union, in the District of Columbia, and in Alaska. It is proposed that the States shall by their legislatures designate an already existing institution, or a new institution to be founded for that purpose, to cooperate with a commission of the United States composed of the Secretary of War, the Commissioner of Education, and a civilian to be appointed by the President; and at this institution there shall be educated each year 300 boys between the ages of 17 and 20. These boys are to be selected by the county superintendent in each county of the States by examinations, competitive or otherwise. They are to be selected from the boys whose parents certify they are unable to give such boys a collegiate education.

The State is to furnish the dormitories, grounds, drill grounds, and teachers in the academic departments. The United States is to furnish the military equipment and military instructions. The entire cost of each boy per year is limited to $400. The State is required to agree to expend $40,000 and the Government to expend $80,000, making $120,000, which, divided among 300 boys, will pay the cost of their education and training. This sum is to be spent by the boy or for the boy as the trustees of each institution may determine. The course is to be fashioned as closely as possible after the course of instruction at West Point, except it is to be less rigorous. It is to consist of a three-year course, and 100 boys are to be graduated each year from each institution, 5,000 being graduated every year from all of the States of the Union.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. MAPES. How does the gentleman arrive at his figures of 5,000 graduates a year?

Mr. McKELLAR. Three hundred boys in each school, and there are 50 States and Territories in the Union. By a simple calculation that is 15,000 boys, and one-third of them will be graduated every year.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman means to have 300 in each State?

Mr. McKELLAR. Three hundred in each State and Territory. There are 50 States and Territories, and by a simple mathematical calculation the gentleman can see how it will work out.

Mr. MAPES. What I rose to ask particularly about was, did you propose to have these carried on at some existing State institution?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the States settle that for themselves. That would happen perhaps in nine-tenths of the States.

Mr. MAPES. How many superintendents would you have?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill provides that it shall be under the supervision of a board consisting of the Secretary of War, the Commanding General of the Army, and a civilian to be appointed by the President.

Now, somebody in criticizing the bill—I think it was sent out by the Chief of Staff—said that it would cost too much. The idea of talking about a bill for the education and training of worthy and ambitious boys that costs a little over $3,000,000, when we are paying out nearly five hundred millions for war and only twenty-four hundred thousand for education, saying that this costs too much.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman proposes to pay the entire cost of the education of the 300 boys.

Mr. McKELLAR. Take the boy within the limit of $400, absolutely take charge of him and educate him.

Mr. MAPES. Give him a collegiate education, as well as a military education?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not a gratuity. The State and National Government educates these boys, but they are required to pay for it in service. These boys, under the bill, will be graduated between the ages of 20 and 23, and they are required to agree that they will serve the United States as officers, noncommissioned officers, or privates at any time within seven years after their graduation.

It will thus be seen, Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is twofold. One is military and the other is educational.

I want to discuss the military feature of it first. Everyone admits that the Military Academy at West Point is a great institution and an indispensible institution. At the time it was established the whole country did not have but 5,000,000 population. Now we have about 100,000,000. It is apparent that we should have more Federal military training schools. At the Military Academy at West Point the average cost per student to graduate is about $20,000. Under my plan the cost to the United States for practically as good an education will be $1,200 per student. We pay this $20,000 per student at West Point without a word, but the Chief of Staff in the pamphlet sent out on Tuesday points out that my bill is an expensive experiment and that the money ought to be expended to pay for a postal card reserve, which I will refer to hereafter.

In the next place this bill will infuse a military spirit throughout the country, as boys are to be selected from every county in the United States, one or more boys from each county.

In the next place, there will be established under the terms of this bill a splendid body of picked and trained and educated and ambitious young men from all parts of the country, and in seven years the reserve will amount to 35,000 of these young men and will continue at this figure. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, right here that with all due respect to the officers of the Army, who are contending for a reserve army, I believe these 35,000 young men would be of more value in the time of a real war than half a million postal-card pension-pay reserves under the plan suggested by the Chief of Staff.

STATE MILITIA PLAN.

In the last few years, as we all know, there has been a tremendous effort made by certain Army officers to increase the Standing Army and to organize a reserve force. It was first thought that this could be done by means of a plan which developed into what was known as the "militia pay bill." By the terms of this bill, generally speaking, the militia in all of the States were to be made a part of the United States Army and they were to be regularly paid by the United States Government, the first appropriation therefor being estimated at about twenty-five or thirty million dollars. A snag was struck in the outset of this plan by a provision in our Constitution limiting the duties of the militia as follows:

To execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.

It will thus be seen that the militia could not be sent out of the country, and this was the defect in this plan.

In the next place, under the Constitution the militia must be officered by State authorities. This in times of war always causes trouble and dissension and makes it impossible to have that cohesive cooperation that is so necessary in the management of the Army. For this reason also the use of the militia was a doubtful matter. It was again urged by the opponents of the bill that if it should pass the nominal militia would be increased in the various States in a very short time to more than a million men, and would result in costing the Government several times as much as our whole Army now costs us. Thus it seems that that plan has been abandoned.

ARMY OFFICERS' PLAN.

In a magazine article Capt. William Mitchell, of the General Staff, United States Army, who, no doubt, outlined the plan of the officers of the Army in essence, set out a bill which he proposed. It seems no member of the Senate or House has yet been brave enough to introduce it.

This bill provides, in brief, to continue the present Army as it is at a cost of $100,000,000 per year; second, to organize what is called a continental army, providing for 240,000 men at an estimated cost of about $26,000,000, and a Regular Army reserve—cost not limited—which would bring up the total force of our Army to 510,000 men. This bill is declared by Capt. Mitchell to be better than the militia pay bill, and perhaps it is if we were a warlike Nation, intent upon entering upon a mission of conquest. While this system, as outlined by Capt. Mitchell, is a very attractive one, looked at from a war standpoint, and is certainly a very carefully thought out one; still it is safe to say hardly a Member of Congress could be found willing to vote for this legislation. It is predicted that such a system would cost the Government $500,000,000 per year in less than 10 years, and this alone would be and should be a sufficient cause for a rejection of the plan. In addition to that, there is no need for such a military system. Further, it would not make for peace, so much desired by every fair-minded man in our Nation, but it would almost be an open invitation to war. In the next place, no State-rights man would ever agree to it on the ground that it would be too large a centralization of power.

THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

The Constitution provides for the calling out of volunteers in the event of war—our great bulwark of defense. The young and active and vigorous men who go into the Army upon a call for volunteers are, as a general rule, the flower of our young manhood. They are inspired by patriotism; they are impelled by ambition, they are steadied by a desire to win. They believe, first, that their country is right in its undertaking, and the result is after a short service, as history has taught us, they make the finest example of the soldier in the world. This was true when men fought hand to hand with swords and with bayonets and on horseback. Warfare under these conditions made the man of the highest intelligence and the highest aims and purposes the best soldier. If it were true under these antiquated conditions of warfare, how much more true is it now under the present conditions of warfare? There can now be no lines of march, no column of attack, no cavalry charges, no bayonet charges, no use of swords, and little of pistols. All these things would be a hindrance in modern warfare.

More than ever would the result of a battle now depend upon individual sagacity, individual action, and individual efficiency. Training is necessary, even more necessary than it ever was; but it is a different kind of training. It does not mean the mere number of men, but it means the skill and ability of the individual man. In the event of a great war, more than ever we would be dependent upon the volunteer force of our country.

It has been seen from what I have quoted from the Constitution that our forefathers on the subject of an army committed themselves to three propositions—first, opposition to a standing army; second, to a militia system, which could only be used to "execute laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions"; third, reliance upon the volunteer forces of the country for an army in case of war.

So that it looks as if we are going to continue to rely upon the volunteer system whenever we are in real trouble.

President Wilson recently stated in a speech at Mobile that this Government will not again wage a war of conquest, and I believe that he expressed the overwhelming sentiment of the American people when he made that statement. Unless we are going to embark upon a mission of conquest we certainly do not need a large standing army, nor do we need a reserve army. At the same time, no one ever knows when we may have to engage in war. We ought to be prepared. Our youth ought to be trained in military institutions, or certainly enough of them should be trained to disseminate a military spirit throughout the country, so that in the time of an emergency we would have not only the trained men, but we would have the best class of our young men imbued with this military spirit. This has been the idea of our great men all the way down the line from the infancy of our Republic to the present day. The first year of our Republic Mr. Knox, the then Secretary of War, said:

All discussions on the subject of a powerful militia will result in one or the other of the following principles: First, either efficient institutions must be established for the military education of the youth, and that the knowledge acquired therein shall be diffused throughout the community by means of rotation; or, secondly, that the militia must be formed of substitutes, after the manner of the militia of Great Britain.

President Washington, in 1796, said, in a message to Congress:

However pacific the general policy of a nation may be, it ought never to be without an adequate stock of military knowledge for emergencies.

Not long after this, in 1802, Congress established the National Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. It will be remembered at that time that the whole United States was not more than half as populous as the State of New York. That school is probably now the most famous military institution in the world. That it was wise to establish it is beyond the question of doubt. It is a little larger in number than it was in the beginning, but not greatly so. It was virtually the same institution a hundred years ago, when our population was not much more than one-twentieth of what it is now.

We need other institutions of like kind. This institution has been a success. Other institutions of this kind will be successes, and in my judgment they are absolutely necessary.

In 1817, just after the war with Great Britain, a committee of this House declared:

There can scarcely be a restraint more vexatious and disgusting to a grown man than the initiatory lessons of the military art, and that to establish a second military system we must begin with the youth of the country; that we ought therefore to devise a system of military instruction, which shall be engrafted on and form a part of the ordinary education of our youth, extended without exception to every individual of proper age, not in distant schools established for the purpose, but that it should form a branch of education in every school within the United States.

When the Civil War arose, as everyone understood, the great trouble was a want of officers not of men. After this war, likewise, in 1865, a resolution was adopted in the House instructing the Military Affairs Committee "to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national military school in some of the States of the great Northwest."

About the same time other bills were introduced to provide for military education. In 1862 a bill was actually passed which provided for the detail of an officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or officer of certain colleges or universities having not less than 150 male students. This bill was passed in 1862. Later on, in 1870, a bill was passed which provided that a Secretary of War might issue small arms and pieces of field artillery for the instruction of students provided for in the foregoing act.

These acts unquestionably have been of real service, but there is no cohesiveness about them, and there is no way of a forced utilization of the boys trained in such institutions in the event of an emergency.

MY PLAN.

My idea of the situation is this, that we do not need a large standing Army in our country. We do need, however, at all times to have a large body of our young men well trained and educated. The time ought never arise, in the event of a war, when we should lack for properly trained officers, as well as men, as it did in 1861. It is difficult to train a man later on in life; he ought to be trained while a boy. Our officers should be made from the best material that we have. They should be well educated. They should be educated, not with a view of entering military life as a vocation, but only with a view of entering military life in the event of a necessity. If another great war is ever fought out between great nations, intelligence of officers and individual soldiers is going to play as an important a part as physical bravery and training. The two should go hand in hand. Educate and train 5,000 boys a year, graduating 100 in each State in the Union, and in a few years such would be the military spirit created in all parts of the country that a call for volunteers in time of trouble would easily bring forth a million of men.

The plan that I have put into a bill which I have introduced in the House performs three great services:

First, it educates 5,000 boys a year, who would otherwise not receive a college education. Second, within seven years there would be created a reserve of 35,000 of the best-trained men in this country or any other country, who would be lawfully required to respond, and who would respond instantly, to a call to arms by their country. Third, it would infuse a military spirit in young men throughout the country—not one that would be harmful, like the spirit that would rise from the establishment of a large standing army, but one that would be helpful, in that our people would know what our country could rely upon in the event of trouble.

A REAL RESERVE.

Within seven years under this bill there would be a reserve created of 35,000 young men between the ages of 20 and 30 years, who would be under a contract with the Government for a most valuable consideration to serve in the Army whenever called upon and in whatever capacity called upon. With all due respect to Capt. Mitchell's plan of a continental army, as shown in his magazine article of recent date, 1 part military and 99 parts civilian, and what we take to be his postal-card reserve of 170,000 more, making in all a total reserve of 410,000 men, I believe if our country had to fight a real enemy the 35,000 young graduates of the several military training schools provided for in my bill, none younger than 20 and none older than 30, would be immensely more effective than the nondescript pension-pay-postal posting throng of 410,000. In the event of real trouble, the pension-pay crowd would be of doubtful value, while the postal-posting crowd could never be found. On the other hand, the kind of young men that will be educated in these military training schools will be those who would be eager for the fray. They would be at the right age to be effective fighters. They would have the education, skill, and scientific training to make effective fighters. They would have education and knowledge to make them take care of themselves, physically and otherwise. They would have the courage to do things. They would have the ambition to excel, because each one, knowing his own power and his own ability, would regard a war as an opportunity to advance himself in the race for life. It would not be a question of pay for them, but a question of patriotism and of gratitude for the opportunity that the Government had given to them.

The difference between the two reserve forces might be illustrated by the well-known story of two boys who applied to an employer for work. The employer asked the first boy what pay he wanted, and thinking the employer had not offered enough he went on his way and remained without work. When the same question was asked the second boy, he said that all he wanted was work and the opportunity to show the employer what he was worth and the employer could fix the pay. In a few years the second boy became the head of the establishment; the first boy became a marcher in Coxey's army.

THE EDUCATIONAL FEATURE.

In no event, however, could this bill, if enacted into law, be a mistake. Assuming that it has no merit at all as furnishing a reserve for our Army, assuming that it would not be an aid to our volunteer military system, yet it would still educate 5,000 boys a year—5,000 manly, vigorous, active, intelligent, worthy boys, that could not otherwise get a collegiate education. This proposition alone should cause every Member of this House to vote for this measure, for as a measure to promote higher education of boys in this country it could not be excelled.

No State rights principle is involved in this bill. No sectional principle is involved in this bill. It gives every State, every section, and every poor boy in our country a chance. It will prove a great boon to the poor country boys who live on farms and who are ambitious to make something of themselves, but who now have no proper opportunity. While free to the boy who secures it, it is not a charity, and a boy can accept its benefits without a loss of self-respect, because he is required, if called upon, to give his services in return for his education.

The National Government now contributes little to education. It can do more and should do more. It should pay its money where it will do the most good, where it will bring the greatest returns. Could it be imagined how greater good could be accomplished by educating and training well, physically and mentally, 5,000 ambitious boys each year, picked out according to merit from every county, from every State in the Union. In such military training schools there would be taught self-reliance, initiative, pluck, vigorous action in all undertakings, endurance, true regard for discipline and order, regard for duty, patriotism and courtesy, and these things, together with their physical and academic training, would fit them to be leaders in every walk of life, civil and military.

I have looked over the biographies of a great many of the Members of this House, and from an account given in these biographies there are but few men here who would not have in early life regarded such an education and training as the greatest boon that could have fallen to them. It would have meant much to the most of us. A great many of us would have regarded such an opportunity as priceless. Why, then, should we not arrange this for those who will succeed us here and for those who will be situated as we were in early life or for those who go into other walks of life so that they will be better prepared, better equipped than we were. These institutions are not for the rich. The rich are excluded from their benefits unless they pay for them. They are for the poor boys, for the boys possessing merit, and energy, and ambition, and pluck, and bravery. While the city boys are not excluded under the plan, the country boys will be the largest beneficiaries under this act.

COUNTRY BOYS.

We owe the country boys of our land something along this line and should give it to them. Many of them may, the most of them do not, now have a fair chance to equip themselves for the race of life. It is true we now find these country boys in the front ranks in all professions and in all the avenues of business and trade and commerce. They get there by reason of their pluck and ambition. Let us aid them on their upward journey by educating them better and by training them better. Let us join hands with them and say to them that the greatest Government on earth feels kindly toward them; that it wants to encourage them in their ambitions; that it wants to make more capable citizens of them; wants to help them upward and onward; wants to aid in equipping them so that the best in them may be developed; wants to make them the highest and best type of the American citizen, namely, a type that is educated and refined, trained in mind and body, fitted for the peaceful pursuits of life in times of peace, and equally fitted and ready to defend or avenge their country in times of war.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the War Department has direction of the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country, and its work has been developing along that line for many years, increasing with the importance of the projects authorized by Congress for the general commercial welfare of the country.

I intend to address myself for a short while this afternoon to the question of locks and dams, particularly as they relate to one of the great rivers of the East.

In a preliminary way I wish to say that Congress appropriates money for the improvement of many rivers by the construction of locks and dams. It is no new practice.

On a river like the Coosa, which runs through Georgia and Alabama, the Government has thus far expended in the construction of locks and dams approximately $2,000,000. This is to advance commerce and navigation; and the commerce there now amounts annually to 52,000 tons. On the Black Warrior River in Alabama the Government has expended in the construction of locks and dams more than $9,000,000. The annual commerce tonnage there is about 163,000. Great coal fields are tapped by the Black Warrior, and there are tremendous water-power possibilities there.

On the Monongahela River, which runs through West Virginia and Pennsylvania, in constructing locks and dams the Government has spent upward of $6,000,000 for a tonnage of over 11,000,000, very largely of coal, the output of the rich mines in West Virginia and Pennsylvania. On the Cumberland River of Tennessee and Kentucky, in the construction of locks and dams the Government has spent approximately $3,300,000 for a commerce of 300,000 tons per annum.

On the Columbia River in the rapidly developing Northwest the Government has spent many millions for improvement, much of it largely in the construction of canals and for locks and dams to surmount considerable engineering difficulties.

I cite these rivers in different sections of the country in order to better explain the peculiar circumstances attending the one river which I desire now to bring to the attention of the House.

OVERLOOKING A GREAT RIVER.

Mr. Chairman, there are some great rivers in the United States that are not treated by the Federal Government with the same consideration that is accorded to other rivers, and the Susquehanna is one of them. I do not know of any other river in the country so capable of public service that has been so signally overlooked. It runs through a section of the country where the people generally have been prosperous and busy, and it is because of that condition, possibly, that the immediate inhabitants of the valley have come to look upon the Susquehanna more as a beautiful creation of nature than as a means of reducing transportation costs or of developing commercial and industrial possibilities. Had it been otherwise, the river doubtless would long since have been improved, very much as the Columbia has been improved, or as the Government is now improving such comparative engineering projects as the Monongahela, the Ohio, or the Cumberland.

Since the population in the drainage area of the Susquehanna and its tributaries is constantly increasing, and large appropriations are being made for rivers of less importance in other parts of the country, it is fair now, when there is a growing demand for water power and waterway improvement, to call attention to past indifference to the Susquehanna, and to the tendency which has prevailed elsewhere in the Eastern States, and particularly as to the Hudson and rivers of New England, to take such rivers out of the public service altogether.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. In all the rivers that the gentleman has been discussing, the less tonnage the more locks and dams appear to be there.

Mr. MOORE. That has happened in certain instances. I have named rivers upon which improvements have been made, and upon which a greater commerce is expected to develop, but there are others upon which expenditures have produced but a small amount of commerce.

Mr. SLOAN. Would not you, by your locks and dams, simply reduce the tonnage passing through the river?

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will listen to what I have to say, I think he will see that that is not the fact.

NEW ENGLAND RIVERS AN OBJECT LESSON.

The recent awakening of the people of Massachusetts to the bridging over of their streams and to the heavy freight charges to which they have been subjected because of the incompetency and neglect of their rivers affords a lesson for the people of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia with regard to the treatment of the Susquehanna. Not only have the old canals which were fed by the river and its tributaries been put out of business, but the Susquehanna itself has been completely dammed at McCalls Ferry in Pennsylvania, and the unusual position has been taken by the War Department that the river is not to be regarded as navigable above the Maryland line. It is possible the rocky condition of the river and the expense of dredging may have had something to do with the edict of the War Department, but it is easily demonstrable that engineering problems such as are presented by the Susquehanna have already been met by the expenditure of large appropriations upon other streams where the public purposes to be served are not so great as those that would result from the improvement of the Susquehanna.

THE SUSQUEHANNA CLOSED TO NAVIGATION.

The Susquehanna River is picturesque and historically interesting, but, in addition, it has a record for serviceability equal to the best of our American rivers. Men are still living who recall the tales of the frontiersmen and the lumberjacks who operated along its banks. Like the upper Delaware or the upper Mississippi, the Susquehanna was the highway of the raftsmen who brought their timber to market, and it is still used for logging purposes. It was also the avenue for commerce passing back and forth in the "arks" or river boats which thrived upon it in the earlier part of the last century. It is to-day the scene of much boating, conducted for business or pleasure, but the canal boats which formerly operated along its banks and carried coal and other commodities to Baltimore and points south have disappeared through the competition, if not with the assistance of the railroads. The construction of various railroad bridges without draws and the completion of a great dam for generating water power at McCalls Ferry have practically closed the river to navigation above the Maryland line. Thus the people of Pennsylvania and New York have quietly been deprived of their right of an outlet to the sea.

400 MILES LONG; DRAINAGE AREA, 27,400 MILES.

Because of these unusual conditions bills were introduced by me and are now pending to revoke the War Department ruling and to secure a survey to determine the feasibility of improving the Susquehanna by means of locks and dams, as in the case of other rivers. As to these bills, I direct attention to the important areas that are traversed by the Susquehanna and its tributaries. The river rises in New York near the Catskill Mountains and flows through Pennsylvania and Maryland into the Chesapeake Bay, and then on to the Atlantic Ocean through the Virginia capes. The main stem is about 400 miles long and has a drainage area of 27,400 miles. Together with its many and lengthy tributaries, it courses through the great anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania and irrigates some of the richest farm lands in the United States, including the banner counties of Lancaster and York. It is a copious and powerful stream, running through the richest mining, agricultural, and industrial territory, but the Federal Government has not thus far given even so much consideration to it as has been granted to scores of smaller streams that would readily be swallowed up in the waters of its tributaries.

EARLY IMPORTANCE OF THE STREAM.

Only one appropriation for the improvement of the stream in Pennsylvania is reported, that of $45,000 for work upon the North Branch, from 7 miles below Wilkes-Barre to the New York State line. The other appropriations were for dredging and improvement from the Maryland line to the Chesapeake Bay, amounting in all, since the beginning, to $316,620. And yet in New York State bordering the branches of the Susquehanna are such cities as Elmira, Binghamton, and Owego; and in Pennsylvania, important centers of population like Athens, Sayre, Towanda, Tunkhannock, Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, Bloomsburg, Danville, Williamsport, Lock Haven, Emporium, Columbia, Wrightsville, Harrisburg, Sunbury, Lewisburg, Lancaster, Marietta, and York; and on the beautiful Juniata, a branch of the Susquehanna, which entered into the plans for western transportation anterior to the railroads, are such cities as Mifflintown, Lewistown, Huntingdon, Tyrone, and Altoona.

All of these cities, most of which once used the Susquehanna and adjacent streams for transportation purposes, are now dependent upon the railroads for the carriage of their enormous tonnage, and being deprived of the use of the canals which formerly gave cheaper rates to most of them, are left without hope of future waterway accommodations unless the War Department order denying the navigability of the river is revoked.

HISTORIC TRIBUTARIES BOTTLED UP.

In addition, the dozens of streams that are tributary to the Susquehanna above the Maryland line are utterly removed from Federal jurisdiction over navigable waterways and may be bridged or dammed, or bottled up, apparently, without the regulation and protection afforded by the general bridge and dam acts to other navigable waterways the country over. Among these branches of the Susquehanna so removed from governmental supervision are rivers that long ago attained a place in the history and even the songs of our people. They include the Juniata, the Conestoga, the Codorus, the Conewago, the Swatara, the Wiconisco, the Shamokin, the Penn, the Catawissa, the Wapwallopen, the Lackawana, the Chenango, the Chemung, the Chicton, the Canisteo, the Tioga, the Sinnemahoning, the Moshannon, and others.

LOWERING RATES ON THE CONESTOGA.

It is not my purpose to deal extensively with the history of the Susquehanna except to say that its navigability seems never to have been disputed until the question was determined by the War Department in 1904. Early engineers and statesmen contemplated the use of the river and its branches as avenues of trade and commerce, and Maryland, New York, and Pennsylvania contended more than a century ago about the effect of the construction of dams for power purposes and to create slack water above the Maryland line.

Efforts to clear "the Conestoga River," a branch of the Susquehanna leading to Lancaster, date as far back as 1771, when an act was passed making that river "a public highway" and providing that "all obstructions to His Majesty's subjects and their commerce up and down the said Conestoga River shall be held to be common nuisances." From the Clark and Eshleman papers before the Lancaster County Historical Society on this subject it appears that a 17-mile canal along the Conestoga to the Susquehanna was subsequently built, and that although it ultimately went the way of most canals in Pennsylvania after the advent of the railroads it succeeded in proving that transportation by water was the cheapest method of transportation. "Lumber and coal business," it was reported in 1832, "has increased for the last two years to an amazing extent, and it must increase every succeeding year. Coal received by the Conestoga Navigation Co. sold at Lancaster from 50 to 75 cents a ton cheaper than at Columbia or Marietta, charging land carriage to Lancaster; and boards and shingles from 50 to 75 cents per 1,000 feet less."

Rates for merchandise from Lancaster to Baltimore or Philadelphia by water were given by the company up to 1853.

Mr. PLATT. Can not the States of Pennsylvania and New York improve the Susquehanna as New York has improved the barge canal?

Mr. MOORE. Perhaps they could, but why should they? I am treating the Susquehanna as an interstate stream that runs through four States. It is capable of doing business for the entire Nation. Why, if provision is made for streams everywhere, some of them wholly within the jurisdiction of a State, should the Susquehanna be singled out for improvement at State expense? It is as much entitled to Federal aid as any other stream.

THE GOVERNMENT REVERSES ITSELF.

That the Susquehanna was considered a navigable stream by the Government itself is shown by the appropriation of $45,000 for the improvement of the North Branch from near by Wilkes-Barre, in the interior of Pennsylvania, to the New York line. This was in 1880 and 1882. The department ruling that the Susquehanna should be considered as navigable only below the Maryland line did not come along until March 8, 1904. This ruling, in effect, was—that the navigable portion of the Susquehanna River, within the meaning of the Federal laws for the protection and preservation of navigable streams, lies wholly within the State of Maryland.

In response to my inquiry, Gen. Bixby, then Chief of Engineers, United States Army, wrote, on August 5, 1913, as follows:

This is merely a departmental ruling, however, and, so far as known, the question has not been adjudicated by the courts, upon whose decision a final determination of the question would depend; but under the aforesaid ruling the jurisdiction of this department under the laws mentioned is limited to that portion of the river below the Maryland State line.

In other words, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, it presumably exercises jurisdiction over all other navigable streams and regulates the construction of bridges and dams that tend to obstruct navigation everywhere except upon the Susquehanna and its tributaries in Pennsylvania and New York.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How many miles is the Susquehanna navigable under the decision of the Government?

Mr. MOORE. From the head of Chesapeake Bay to the Maryland line, above Port Deposit.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is the distance?

Mr. MOORE. About five and a half miles; that is all the Government assumes jurisdiction over. The river is 400 miles long and its drainage area is 27,400 square miles.

THE QUESTION OF SHALLOWNESS RAISED.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if during certain seasons of the year when it is very dry the Susquehanna River is not very shallow?

Mr. MOORE. It is very shallow at certain seasons of the year, but for a like condition I commend the gentleman to the Ohio; I commend him to the Missouri, and to a dozen other streams; the Trinity, in Texas, for instance; all of which are shallow at certain seasons of the year. These rivers are receiving Federal aid and are being improved for purposes of commerce and navigation.

That the exclusion of the Susquehanna from Federal jurisdiction as to navigation in 1904 was unfortunate, if not unjust, is shown by subsequent events. A valuable canal, which did a big business in carrying coal and other commodities to Havre de Grace, for shipment to Baltimore and other points by way of the Chesapeake Bay, had been destroyed. In its stead arose a power company, which erected at McCalls Ferry, above the Maryland line, a dam, which blocked the Susquehanna River and threw the water back a distance of 7 or 8 miles. If there had been rocks and islands or shallow water in the river before, they now disappeared under the surface of the vast area of slack water thus held up.

DAMS A POSSIBLE AID TO NAVIGATION.

It is possible, answering the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. J. M. C. SMITH] further, that the backing up of this slack water may prove the solution of the question that I am raising as to the best means of improving the Susquehanna. A series of such dams, with locks, and under Federal control, would provide plenty of water for navigation and power also, all the way up to Harrisburg. It is said a depth of from 50 to 60 feet of water was attained at the breast of the McCalls Ferry Dam. A veritable sea was thus created where formerly the river had run its course through boulders, around the islands that had once sheltered the Indians, and over the trees that had fringed the lower banks of the great river bed.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Were not all the bridges that crossed the Susquehanna allowed to be built by charters granted by the State of Pennsylvania, and are those charters not in force at this time?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; some of them are; and some of the bridges were built with Federal sanction before the order closing the river to navigation above the Maryland line was issued by the War Department.

GREAT ENGINEERING WORK WITH NO OUTLET.

The construction of the dam at McCalls Ferry involved a tremendous expenditure of money; it is quoted at more than $16,000,000.

The gentlemen from Iowa who are familiar with the big dam at Keokuk may be interested to know that this dam across the Susquehanna was substantially as great an engineering project and was almost as expensive as their own famous dam which crosses the Mississippi.

Mr. SLOAN. Who built this dam?

Mr. MOORE. A private corporation. It was a great piece of engineering, but it escaped the scrutiny of the Federal Government, which it could not have done had the Government exercised its ordinary jurisdiction. No lock or passageway for vessels seeking an outlet to the Chesapeake Bay or to the sea was provided. Even the shad fishermen above the dam were shut out of their usual occupation, and although a fishway has since been set up, there is no method for fishing vessels to pass the dam. The structure is a barrier to commerce above and to commerce below; it is as much a barrier to the potatoes and tobacco of York and Lancaster Counties as it is to the coal from Wyoming or Luzerne.

THE PEOPLE WANT AN OPEN RIVER.

Since the bills to open navigation and prevent the ultimate closing of the Susquehanna were introduced by me last October expressions of approval have been received from numerous trade bodies and business men in Pennsylvania and Maryland. They do not believe it impossible to improve the Susquehanna and they do believe that some steps should be taken to give the people the advantage of the cheaper transportation the river would afford.

During the operation of the Pennsylvania & Susquehanna Tidewater Canal—hard coal was sold here in Baltimore for $4.50 to $5 per ton, whereas now it is sold for $7.50 to $8. Thirteen years ago coal sold here for $5 to $6 per ton, and the cost of mining has not increased in proportion.

Writes a citizen of Maryland—

POSSIBLE FREIGHT SAVING OF $35,000,000.

If the 40,000,000 tons of coal mined annually along the river above and below Wilkes-Barre were moved to those points (referring to Baltimore, Md., Wilmington, Del., Washington, D. C., and Philadelphia, Pa.)—

Said Mr. Farley Gannett, engineer of the water-supply commission of Pennsylvania, in an address before the Engineers' Society of Pennsylvania in April, 1911—the transportation thereon would amount to approximately $70,000,000 per year, at an average rate of $1.75 per long ton. Would not a good deal of this tonnage find an outlet down the river to these points if navigation was improved and the water rate made lower than the rail rate? This enormous traffic would seem to warrant a heavy expense in improving navigation, and the rates charged thereon should be controlled by the authorities which did the work. If a rate of 50 per cent of that charged by the railroad were fixed for the water-borne traffic a gross income of $35,000,000 would be insured, together with a net saving on the transportation of another $35,000,000.

This question of the improvement of the Susquehanna, therefore, is one of the important questions entering into the cost of living. We can not ignore a cheapening of the cost of our fuel supply.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Can the gentleman explain how it is when a private corporation owns both the railroad and the canal, it will abandon the canal and run the railroad?

Mr. MOORE. The freight rates are higher by rail than they are by water. That has been our experience in Pennsylvania and all along the Atlantic coast. We have been denied the use of the canals, until now, when railroad congestion is frequently acute, we find we need them more than we ever did at any time in our history.

WHAT A NAVIGABLE STREAM IS.

With such tremendous possibilities for useful public service, Mr. Chairman, why should the Susquehanna River be excluded from the favorable and fostering consideration of the Federal Government? The Supreme Court of the United States has given its definition of a navigable stream, and, despite the ruling of the War Department, the Susquehanna comes within that definition. The War Department is familiar with that decision, for it is often called upon to interpret it. As quoted from the case of The Daniel Ball (10 Wall., 557) it is as follows:

Those rivers are public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact. Rivers are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce, over which trade and and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water.

And they constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress, in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the States, when they form in their ordinary condition, by themselves or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which the commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water.

Rafting and the floating of logs, such as is still done on the Susquehanna, are recognized methods of navigation.

WAR DEPARTMENT ORDER SHOULD BE REVOKED.

In the light of these facts, it would seem to be an act of simple justice to revoke the ruling of the War Department, so that the Susquehanna River may hereafter be treated as a navigable stream free to the people of the Nation. It is nature's highway to the sea from the very heart of the greatest anthracite coal fields of the world and ought to be preserved by the Government for the free use of the people, whether Congress is ready to improve it for transportation purposes or not.

The problem of the improvement of the Susquehanna should commend itself to Congress. What is now asked is that the War Department's order shall be rescinded by Congress and that a survey to ascertain the feasibility and cost of improvement by a series of locks and dams shall be granted. This is not an unreasonable request. The Monongahela has been improved by locks and dams; the Ohio is being improved, at an expense of $63,000,000; the Coosa and Black Warrior and the Tennessee are being improved by locks and dams, at great expense. Why not the Susquehanna? Why should the Susquehanna be singled out and closed up?

THE GENERAL BRIDGE AND DAM ACTS.

In the passage of bills under the general bridge and dam acts reference is frequently made to their effectiveness in protecting the rights of watermen. In the interest of navigation I have often asked this question on the floor, only to be answered that the general bridge and dam acts were sufficient; that they protected the right of transportation by water. What shall we say of the Susquehanna? Does it not present a new problem to the defenders of the general legislation governing obstructions to navigation?

I appeal to my colleagues on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and on the Rivers and Harbors Committee to study this case of the Susquehanna. It is a navigable stream within the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the United States, but it is not navigable under a department ruling. It can not be dammed up, but it has been dammed up.

COST OF IMPROVEMENT SHOULD BE ASCERTAINED.

It may be that a survey of the damming already done at private expense will show that other dams backing the water up to Harrisburg, or even Wilkes-Barre, will—assuming that locks are provided—enable barges and other vessels to do the burden-bearing from the mines, the farms, and the mills to the sea. It may demonstrate further that the installation of such a system on the Susquehanna will so reduce the costs of transportation as to justify the improvement cost. At any rate we are entitled to know what the Army Engineers think of such a project and what they think the cost would be. The first step, therefore, is to pass the bill revoking the War Department order closing the Susquehanna to navigation. That would restore to the War Department the duty of preserving the navigation of the river. The arbitrary closing of the river at McCalls Ferry should then be promptly undone by compelling the power company to install a lock or other passageway for navigation. And then the survey should be undertaken to determine whether the lock-and-dam system would be suitable to the improvement of the Susquehanna and could be installed at reasonable cost.

COAL BY WATER WOULD SAVE MONEY.

It is believed by many people that the development of the river for transportation purposes would have the effect of reducing the freight on coal a dollar a ton. In these days of high living cost such a reduction in the price of the essential fuel of the people would be most welcome. Doubtless all the miners of coal would not use the waterway. Many of them do upon the western rivers such as the Monongahela and the Ohio, but even if the Susquehanna obtained but a part of the business of the mines the effect upon freight rates would be immediate.

Many of the larger mines are owned by coal companies controlled by the railroad companies—and it is to be expected that the output of these mines would at first continue to be hauled by rail even in the event of cheaper water-freight rates. There are, however, numerous mines of large capacity owned by independent operators which are more or less under the control of the railroads on account of their dependence upon the railroads for car service, but with a water outlet for their output this dependence upon the railroads would cease. If these independent coal operators shipped by water, the price of their coal at the points reached by water would be reduced, and the railroad companies would be forced either to meet it through lower freight rates or by using the waterway.

[Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, the invention of gunpowder and firearms and the invention of type and the printing press were the stepping-stones of the common people of civilization from oppressed and servile conditions to modern personal and political liberty and equality before the law.

Gunpowder and firearms made the plowman as a fighting machine the equal of the mailed knight on horseback.

Printing, by cheapening books, placed knowledge and the means of its ready dissemination within the reach of all.

And yet it has always required force to wrest power from the hands of the few.

This Republic was baptized in blood and has been maintained by the shedding of blood.

National independence and individual liberty have never been attained by any people except by force, backed by physical and moral courage, and have never been retained longer than the people possessed the physical force, power, ability, and courage and the necessary military skill to maintain them on the field of battle if need be.

Ignoring the lessons of history, the Committee on Military Affairs, lulled into a false sense of security by the narcotic influence of experimental diplomacy, or actuated by principles of uneconomical economy, has reported to this House an Army appropriation bill that will not meet the necessary expenses of our small standing Army of 85,694 enlisted men and 4,738 commissioned officers in the United States and 5,732 enlisted men and 180 officers in the Philippines.

I believe in exercising reasonable economy in making appropriations for the maintenance and support of our Army and Navy.

I hope the time may come when the morality of all nations will have so developed that war and preparedness for war will not be the necessary means to achieve and maintain national greatness, independence, and liberty, and when all differences between nations will have to be submitted for adjudication to an international court of arbitration that will be sustained by universal public opinion and vested with authority and power to enforce its decrees and judgments. But the world has not yet developed to that state of Christian civilization. The time has not yet come when the nations will agree to or when it is safe for the civilized nations to agree to disarmament; to limit the size of their armies to a small number of men to act only in times of emergency as a national police force; and to limit their navies to a few boats of the revenue-cutter type, acting under international authority, and used only to police the ocean to keep it free from pirates and to render assistance to the merchant marine in distress and to succor the shipwrecked.

Under existing world conditions in general, and particularly on account of the international complications in which our Government is involved, I believe it to be my duty as a patriotic American to voice my protest against crippling the efficiency of our Army and Navy by making inadequate appropriations for their economic maintenance and support. I believe it would be unpatriotic not to protest against the maudlin sentimentality that would sacrifice on the altar of the idea of international peace this Government of ours, the only Government that has ever existed on earth whose citizens have proven themselves capable of effective self-government and at the same time maintain both their personal and political liberty. American institutions are the hope of the world; permit them to be destroyed and human liberty dies. Who is so foolish as to cut off his right arm because he is opposed to prize fights?

True economy is a virtue, it nurtures to-day and provides for to-morrow. It should be exercised by the Government as well as by the individual, but there is a vast difference between parsimony and economy. The miser holds his gold, the economical man uses it to advantage. The spendthrift wastes it. As with the individual, so with the nation. The income or revenue should be used with discretion and judgment. Congress should exercise the greatest care and strictest economy in making appropriations. Any department of the Government will spend all the money it can get and ask for more. Each bureau imagines it is the most important branch of the Government. That opinion is natural, for with the exception of the members of the Cabinet and certain few appointees of the Executive and of the Cabinet, the bureau officials have been engaged all their lives in the detail work of their several branches of the Government, and really believe that the whole machinery of the Government revolves around their particular department. I am convinced, however, that the chiefs of the Army and Navy bureaus this year presented to Congress carefully considered and conservative estimates of the actual immediate needs of the Army and Navy and have asked for no more than is necessary.

The amounts appropriated in the Army bill will not meet the demands of the various branches of the military service and, judged by the immediate past, are not expected to do so.

In the Sixty-second Congress a similar condition prevailed. The military appropriation bill, approved August 24, 1912, carried many items which were cut far below the lines of safety. It was a good opportunity to go to the country on an economy platform. Members of the minority side at that time called the attention of the House to the fact that the bill provided insufficient funds for the proper maintenance of the military establishment.

The majority failed to heed the admonitions given by the minority. Then what happened? After the election an act was passed to supply deficiencies in appropriations for this branch of the Government. In that bill the sum of $2,879,622 had to be appropriated for the pay of officers and enlisted men in the Army. The sum of $700,000.15 had to be appropriated for the subsistence of the Army, and merchants who had furnished supplies to the Military Establishment all over this country had to wait months before they could get their pay from this great Government of ours. These two items alone required a deficiency appropriation of over $3,579,000; and if the bill which is now pending should not be amended so as to provide a sufficient amount to enable the Military Establishment to be run on safe lines, there is no question but that at the next session Congress will again be compelled to pass an urgent deficiency appropriation bill carrying large sums to make up the deficiencies in the pending measure.

The shortsightedness of the committee's attitude of saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole is peculiarly evidenced by its treatment of the arsenal at Benicia, Cal. That arsenal is our only arsenal on the Pacific coast. It receives, cares for, repairs, disburses, and in some instances manufactures all the ordnance stores for one-third of the area of the United States proper and also for Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, and the Philippines. The advisability, as a matter of economy, of maintaining Benicia Arsenal in the highest state of efficiency is apparent from the fact that Rock Island is our next nearest arsenal to the Pacific, and that the freight charges for shipping a musket to be repaired from a Pacific coast fort to Rock Island and return is $1, which in many instances would be from two to four times the cost of repairing the musket at Benicia. Testimony in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs shows conclusively that the Government manufactures ammunition and other supplies at the arsenals for 35 per cent less than the War Department is compelled to pay private concerns for identical articles. If that is so—and I believe it is—why did not the committee recommend adequate appropriations for the rehabilitation and equipment of Benicia Arsenal, so it might be prepared to manufacture, store, and care for a large part of the ordnance supplies used on the Pacific coast? That certainly would have been the economical and businesslike thing to do. The element of time and the advantages of Benicia from a military standpoint as a location for an arsenal I will explain in detail later on in my speech.

Owing to the fire at Benicia Arsenal, which occurred October 28, 1912, and which destroyed about $1,622,000 of Government property, including ordnance stores and the storehouse in which they were kept, estimates were submitted by Col. Birnie, then Chief of Ordnance, to the Sixty-second Congress, to be included as deficiencies in the sundry civil appropriation bill, to replace some of the ordnance supplies and for the construction of a new storehouse, at the estimated cost of $200,000. All of the estimates, including the estimate of $200,000 for a new storehouse, were cut out by the Appropriations Committee, for the ostensible reason that the estimates were not in the nature of a deficiency; but, in my opinion, they were in reality turned down for an entirely different cause, which I will state and discuss later on in my remarks.

A deficiency of only $15,000 was allowed to put a roof on the storehouse that had been gutted by the fire. It was found by the department that the first two stories of the burned building could be used, and it has since been roofed in as a one-story building, but the building is neither adequate or fireproof.

Right here permit me to say that Col. Ruggles, who was at the time of the fire in command of the arsenal, had again and again called attention to the danger of a destructive fire occurring at any time at the arsenal. He asked for an appropriation of $8,000 to install an automatic sprinkler system of fire protection. The estimate was made but was disallowed. Had the system been installed as Col. Ruggles recommended, the fire would have done but little damage.

Recognizing the fact that there was no hope of the Appropriation Committee reporting favorably on the estimates necessary to rehabilitate Benicia Arsenal, for the reason that the committee did not consider them to be deficiencies, the estimates were at the present session of Congress referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

For replacing ordnance and ordnance stores destroyed by fire at the Benicia Arsenal, Benicia, Cal., on October 18, 1912, and funds to be immediately available and to remain available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, as follows:

For infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments, including horse equipments (submitted), $541,583.21.

For artillery harness (submitted), $35,273.34.

For drafting and photographic supplies for use in connection with seacoast artillery practice (submitted), $1,496.15.

For carpenter's tools for use in connection with mobile artillery (ordnance stores and supplies; submitted), $735.21.

For small-arms ammunition (ordnance stores, ammunition; submitted), $486,315.55.

For machine guns, their spare parts and accessories (automatic machine rifles; submitted), $10,080.40.

For matériel for small-arms practice (small-arms target practice; submitted), $16,123.88.

For miscellaneous tools and implements for general use, publications pertaining to ordnance matériel, its use, care, preservation, etc. (submitted), $8,724.75.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CURRY. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman states that the Committee on Appropriations refused to recommend the appropriations requested because they were not deficiencies. Upon what does the gentleman base that statement?

Mr. CURRY. Upon the statements of the members of the committee to me personally.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am a member of that committee and I am in charge of the deficiency bill, and I will state to the gentleman that the reason that there was no money appropriated to replace the storehouse at Benicia Arsenal was that it developed that Benicia Arsenal is about 30 miles from Fort Mason, Cal., where the Government is building some very large wharves and storehouses, and the officials of the War Department themselves admitted that it was an indefensible military proposition to have some stores which would be necessary to be shipped at Fort Mason and at the other, 30 miles away, so that in time of necessity a boat would have to be sent from both places.

Mr. CURRY. I believe the gentleman will remember I stated I believe it was for an entirely different reason these appropriations were turned down and that I would refer to that later in my remarks, and I am going into that proposition fully in reference to Fort Mason and Benicia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought at that point it would be proper to put that statement in the RECORD.

Mr. CURRY. Gen. Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, made a hard fight before the Committee on Military Affairs to have the estimates approved, included in the Army bill. The attention of the committee was called to the fact that 10 years ago a similar disastrous fire occurred at the Rock Island Arsenal, at which $2,000,000 worth of buildings and ordnance supplies were burned. Congress made an appropriation to replace the buildings and military stores and supplies. The committee, however, against Gen. Crozier's earnest protest, cut out every item of the Benicia Arsenal estimates and told Gen. Crozier to divert and use funds to rehabilitate the arsenal from the recommended appropriation for the general maintenance of all of the arsenals, and then turned around and cut that, as well as all other Army appropriations, to the bone, so that not a dollar of the appropriation in the Army bill now pending before the House can be used to rehabilitate the Benicia Arsenal.

On January 12, 1914, I introduced House bill 11298, providing an appropriation of $200,000 for the construction and equipment of a storehouse at Benicia Arsenal. The Chief of Ordnance and his predecessor have stated that a new storehouse at the arsenal is necessary. I am patiently waiting to see whether the Committee on Military Affairs, to which the bill was referred, will approve it and recommend it for passage or whether a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy of false economy will induce the committee to ignore the recommendation of the War Department and turn it down.

During the discussion of this item before the committee of the preceding and present sessions of Congress it developed that certain of the members of the committee had the idea that it would be more economical to furnish the storage facilities required for ordnance war material at Fort Mason, in San Francisco, than to construct new buildings at Benicia Arsenal, and they seemed to think it might be desirable to remove a part of the work performed at Benicia Arsenal to Fort Mason, and that the more money spent at Benicia Arsenal the harder it would be to make the move.

The reasons for this attitude of the committee it would seem arise from the following fact, which I will state and discuss: It appears to be the policy of the War Department, undoubtedly promulgated by the General Staff of the War Department, which is made up of officers of the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery Arms—but mostly from the Infantry and Cavalry Arms—to concentrate all reserve supplies for use in case of war at five principal points or depots, namely, Philadelphia (Schuylkill Arsenal); Jeffersonville, Ind.; St. Louis; Omaha; and San Francisco. These are all storage places for the Quartermaster Corps, and it is proposed to take to these points also supplies furnished by other departments of the Army, such as medical supplies, Signal Corps supplies, and ordnance supplies. The Quartermaster Corps furnished all transportation, such as wagons, mules, and so forth, and clothing, bedding, camp and garrison equipage, and food for the Army. The supplies furnished by the Medical Department are evident, consisting of medicines and surgical instruments. The supplies furnished by the Signal Corps are mainly instruments of communication, such as telephones and telegraphs, and this corps has now taken over the aviation service. The supplies furnished by the Ordnance Department are weapons of all kinds—small arms, consisting of pistols and revolvers, sabers, bolos, machine guns, rapid-fire guns, field artillery guns, siege guns, and heavy seacoast guns. In addition to the arms proper, the Ordnance Department furnishes all the accessories to the arms, such as gun carriages for seacoast, field, and mountain artillery, projectiles, powder, high explosives, small arms and ammunition, fuses, rammers and staves for cleaning the guns and for loading them, range firing and other apparatus for directing and controlling the fire from guns of all kinds, ammunition trucks, and also the equipment worn by the individual soldiers for carrying his arms, such as cartridge belts and also cartridge boxes, and canteens for carrying water, haversacks for carrying food, and so forth, on the person of the soldier in the field. The Ordnance Department also furnishes all the harness for the Field Artillery horses, all the saddles and bridles and other horse equipments for mounted troops, and all the pack outfits for the mountain batteries, the guns, carriages, and ammunition of the mountain batteries being packed on mules. It is evident therefore that the great bulk of the war supplies are furnished by two principal departments, namely, the Quartermaster and Ordnance Departments. The supplies furnished by the Medical Department and the Signal Corps, while most important, are very much less in quantity than those furnished by the other departments.

It may be well to briefly consider how the scheme of concentration at the five places mentioned affects the four principal departments. So far as the Quartermaster Corps is concerned, the scheme will work excellently for it, since it is not proposed to remove any of the Quartermaster Corps supplies to some other points beyond the control of the Quartermaster Corps, but merely to keep them all in its own establishments, where it has its own organizations, and to bring to these establishments the supplies from the other departments. So far as the supplies furnished by the Medical Department and Signal Corps are concerned, the scheme is also excellent. Neither of these departments manufactures or repairs its own supplies, these supplies being all purchased. Some place of storage is necessary, and they might as well be stored at the points selected by the Quartermaster Corps for their principal storage places as anywhere else. These departments have no large plants to abandon, and I am informed that such storage places as they now have are not owned by the Government but are merely rented. It seems very natural and proper that the supplies for the Medical Department and Signal Corps should be concentrated with those of the Quartermaster Corps, since they can be handled by the personnel of the Medical Department and the Signal Corps as well at Philadelphia, Jeffersonville, St. Louis, Omaha, and San Francisco as anywhere else.

If this country were starting now with no large manufacturing establishments and storage plants belonging to the Government and operated and controlled by the Ordnance Department, it would be a very sensible thing to establish these manufacturing and storage plants at the same localities as the storage plants for the Quartermaster Corps, but the Government has invested millions of dollars in very efficient manufacturing plants of the Ordnance Department, and it would be absolutely impracticable to remove these great plants to the localities established for the concentration storage plants of the Quartermaster Corps. The War Department therefore does not propose to remove the manufacturing plants of the Ordnance Department to these places of storage but merely to remove the articles manufactured at these great plants and store them at a distance from the place of manufacture in close proximity to the supplies furnished by other departments. It appears from the hearing of Col. Birnie that he acquiesced in the storage of the reserve war supplies of the Ordnance Department with the other supplies of the Army at the five principal points heretofore mentioned. That his agreement was based upon expediency and the futility of opposition rather than upon his belief that such action is advisable is evidenced by the following letter on the subject I received from him:

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1913.

HON. CHARLES F. CURRY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CURRY: 1. Since your call this afternoon I have looked up the matter of the brief regarding the needs of the Benicia Arsenal received with your letter of the 13th instant. I have carefully read the paper and thank you very much for the suggestions contained therein.

2. You will appreciate, I think, from my testimony before the committee, to which reference is made, that I am distinctly not in favor of transferring any work from the Benicia Arsenal to Fort Mason. A certain portion of the reserve material, after it has been made ready for issue and to be kept for arming the expanded militia and volunteers in case of war, can be stored at Fort Mason, and this would be in accordance with the policy of the War Department in having such a store at Philadelphia. But a large portion of the material which must be handled for current issues, including all of the ammunition and the supplies for seacoast and field artillery, can not be advantageously stored at Fort Mason; and I am unreservedly of the opinion that the improvements advocated in the brief submitted are necessary at the Benicia Arsenal.

Very truly, yours,

R. BIRNIE,
Colonel, Ordnance Department, United States Army,
Acting Chief of Ordnance.

It is possible to so pack all the ordnance supplies required for a regiment, a brigade, or a division, and so forth, of any of the branches of the service and to mark the boxes in such a way that if these supplies are concentrated at a point remote from the arsenals with the Quartermaster Corps supplies, an order sent to the depot of storage to ship the supplies for one regiment, one brigade, or one division to a certain point can be readily executed; and, in fact, this is substantially the scheme pursued by the Ordnance Department, except that these reserve supplies for a regiment, brigade, division, and so forth, are concentrated at the principal arsenals, each arsenal serving a specified district. So far as packing and shipping the stores in bulk are concerned, and considering these features of the case only, the ordnance war reserve might very well be concentrated with the quartermaster supplies at the five places mentioned; but, unfortunately for the efficiency of the scheme of concentration proposed, war supplies furnished by the Ordnance Department, or a great many of the most important of them, are very liable to deterioration; so that if such stores were packed and stored in 1914 and not overhauled in the meantime, they would be absolutely worthless for war purposes in 1920.

Moreover, this is an age of invention. Supplies furnished by the Ordnance Department are continually being improved. Frequently this only requires minor changes or alteration in the existing equipment and again sometimes the whole of an article is changed. Naturally, improvements consisting of small changes are made more frequently than complete changes, so that stores in reserve have constantly to be removed in order to be overhauled and altered, while in other cases an article, such as a revolver, is entirely discarded for a more improved weapon, such as the automatic pistol, firing seven shots as rapidly as the trigger can be pulled. The equipment and parts of the field artillery, the mountain artillery, and the seacoast artillery are constantly being improved, the Ordnance Department taking advantage not only of the inventions of its own officers but the inventions of Artillery officers serving with the guns and of experts in this line of work serving abroad. When an improvement is made on a gun or an article of equipment in service in most cases it should be made on similar articles kept in the reserve. In general these improvements must be made at arsenals having manufacturing plants with the required facilities. If the ordnance stores in reserve at the concentration points heretofore mentioned are to be kept up to date, they would have to be returned at intervals to an arsenal for the purpose. Probably only a few of the stores would be affected at a time, but that would require unpacking the boxes, sorting out the particular stores to be altered, and returning them to an arsenal. I venture to say there is not an officer in the Quartermaster Corps or an employee in that department capable of picking out 9 out of 10 of the stores requiring alteration, and consequently a force from the nearest arsenal would have to be sent for that purpose. What I have just said relates only to alteration. Many of the stores furnished by the Ordnance Department are subject to deterioration by age. This relates particularly to powder. A very necessary component of a war reserve is the ammunition supplied for the pistols, for the rifles, for the machine guns, and for the heavy and field artillery. The best of smokeless powder lasts only a certain length of time before beginning to deteriorate, rendering it both inefficient and dangerous. As a result, the orders are very stringent to issue to the service for target practice the oldest ammunition on hand, so that only ammunition of the latest manufacture will be carried in reserve.

All articles made of leather, such as saddles, bridles, belts, rifle scabbards, harness, pack outfits, and so forth, are subject to rapid deterioration if not constantly cleaned and regreased. This operation must be made upon the leather equipments at least once in two years, but the leather itself—large quantities of which are furnished to troops for repair work—should be inspected at least every six months to see that it is in good condition, and greased every year. This could probably be done by the Quartermaster Corps at their place of storage if they had men familiar with the work whom they probably could obtain, but in addition to keeping the leather in good condition by frequent oiling and greasing, the oldest leather and leather equipment on hand should always be issued first, since even the best kind of leather, however well cared for, will in time deteriorate to such an extent as to be worthless. Various soaps and dressings are also provided for the care of equipments, and all of these deteriorate rapidly in storage, requiring that issues to the service be always made from the oldest materials on hand. Such articles of equipment furnished by the Ordnance Department as saddle blankets, saddle pads, field belts of various kinds and other articles made of cotton material are likely to suffer deterioration from moths or other insects, and these articles should frequently be removed from the boxes and examined; and it would be preferable to issue the oldest stock on hand always so that the stock in reserve will not only be new but will be stock that is kept up to date, since even here small improvements are constantly being made.

It is evident from what has been said that it would be folly to box up a lot of Ordnance Department war supplies, store them at some place, and leave them undisturbed from 5 to 15 or 20 years, expecting when they are needed to open the boxes and find the material in first-class condition, both as to preservation and up-to-dateness, and consequently there must be arrangements made for current issues to the service at the place of storage of the war reserve, so that the old material on hand in the war reserve can be issued to the service and replaced by new material and so that material not issued can be altered and kept up to date, examined, cleaned, oiled, and otherwise cared for to prevent deterioration.

In no other way can the war reserve be properly looked after. So far as the supplies of the Quartermaster Corps are concerned, this is exactly what that department proposes to do at the five principal concentration points, which are all quartermaster establishments; and, moreover, the supplies furnished by the Quartermaster Corps are mostly purchased, and while they are liable to deterioration, they are not such as require constant alteration by a manufacturing plant to be kept up to date. At any rate, these supplies are kept, so to speak, at their homes, where any alteration or care necessary can be given them. With respect to the supplies of the Medical Department and the Signal Corps, they are not manufactured by these corps, and they can be issued to the service and replaced from time to time at one place as well as at any other.

Even if current issues of Ordnance Department supplies were made from the five principal depots in order that the oldest material in stock should always be issued to the service, the scheme would be very uneconomical, for in most cases this would require that the articles be manufactured at an arsenal, then shipped to the storage depot, and then shipped again to the service as required, making a double handling of all these supplies on their way to the service where they are used. Then when these supplies require alteration or repair it could not be done at the places of concentration, but they must be shipped back to an arsenal to be altered or repaired and again returned at considerable expense to the places of concentration. Articles in use in the service frequently get broken to a small extent or get worn to a small extent. These articles are perfectly capable of being repaired at an arsenal, but are not capable of being repaired with the facilities in the hands of the troops, because the troops have not the necessary expert knowledge. Unless there is a large, well-established repair plant at the place of concentration, which is not proposed, these articles from the service can not be sent to these places of concentration to be repaired and placed in stock for issue, but must be sent to some manufacturing arsenal to be repaired there and again shipped to the place of concentration, instead of being kept at the arsenal for issue when required, making a double handling of the stores in this case also. The placing of the ordnance war reserve at the five concentration points mentioned and the making of current issues to the service from such points in order to keep the reserve from deteriorating would necessitate the addition of five separate establishments, with full and complete personnel, to the establishments already existing in the Ordnance Department and which are now adequate for the purpose. You can not receive and issue ordnance supplies without a personnel having adequate knowledge of these supplies and without the clerks to execute the necessary papers covering the transactions and to prepare the necessary returns for administrative examination in Washington. Splitting up large establishments into a number of smaller ones does not, as a rule, conduce toward economy.

With respect to the arsenals of manufacture and supply these are fairly well distributed over the country. For example, there is one of the largest manufacturing and supply arsenals already in Philadelphia—the Frankford Arsenal—distant about 8 or 10 miles from Schuylkill Arsenal, the quartermaster establishment. It would certainly seem unwise to take the war reserve stored at Frankford Arsenal and move it 10 miles to be stored at Schuylkill Arsenal, where it can not be economically handled, and the same is true of Benicia Arsenal and San Francisco.

For all practical purposes Benicia Arsenal is in San Francisco, and it would seem very uneconomical to put the war reserve at Fort Mason, where it can not be properly handled, and remove it from Benicia Arsenal, where it can be properly handled. With regard to the other concentration points—Jeffersonville, St. Louis, and Omaha—the nearest arsenal to these three points is the Rock Island Arsenal; but as the Rock Island Arsenal is quite distant from all of them, there might be more of an argument for storing ordnance war reserve at these three places than at the Schuylkill Arsenal and at Fort Mason. However, it should be borne in mind that the scheme of the War Department for supplying volunteers and other troops when recruited at the beginning of a war is to send them to concentration camps, where they can be drilled and taught elementary principles of warfare. Before they can reach these concentration camps they will have to be recruited and organized. It is proposed to send the war supplies to the concentration camps, so that when the volunteers arrive there they will find their equipment waiting for them. In every instance the Ordnance Department could furnish the war supplies for these troops from its various principal arsenals and deliver these supplies at the concentration camps before the volunteers were ready to receive such supplies, and nothing would be gained in this respect by first concentrating the war supplies at the five principal points mentioned.

I have tried to make clear that, particularly in the case of ordnance supplies for reserve purposes, these supplies should be concentrated at the points where current issues to the service are made, so that the older material can be issued to the service from time to time, keeping what remains in reserve in good condition. It also follows that where current issues to the service are made there should be a plant for the repair of articles in a worn-out condition turned in from the service and for altering and keeping up to date the articles stored in the war reserve. If therefore the war reserve is to be taken from the Benicia Arsenal and stored at Fort Mason, all articles now issued to the service from Benicia Arsenal should be issued to the service from Fort Mason. The necessary plant should be established there for repairing the articles turned in from the service and for altering those in store. If so much of the work now conducted at Benicia Arsenal is to be taken to Fort Mason, it would seem that in the interests of economy the whole establishment should be taken there, because if two establishments are maintained—one at Benicia Arsenal and one at Fort Mason—it will require a large duplication of organization. Officers must be kept at both places to superintend the work, clerks must be provided at both places to keep the records required by the War Department and to answer the correspondence, and laborers, teamsters, and other employees must be had at both places to transport, pack, and store the materials, and workmen and mechanics must be kept at both places to make the necessary repairs and alterations. These officers, clerks, and employees must belong to the Ordnance Department, for the officers and employees of the Quartermaster Corps will have neither the time nor the training for this work. In this connection it will be noted that it is not proposed by the War Department to remove from Benicia Arsenal its manufacturing and repair shops and the modernization and repair of the seacoast, field, and mountain artillery will continue to be made at Benicia Arsenal. The storage of powder, high explosives, and ammunition for cannon will continue there, as well as the overhauling, repair, and modification of all forms of ammunition for field, siege, and seacoast cannon. The loading of cartridges for cannon will also be continued there.

Benicia Arsenal was established in 1851 and buildings and plant have been added to it from time to time until the value of the buildings and plant are now approximately $700,000. To provide the same facilities at Fort Mason would probably require at least this sum. The advantages of Benicia Arsenal in the way of transportation are very great. The main line of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railroads passes through the arsenal, which already has a siding on which cars are placed to be loaded for shipment. There is a channel not less than 30 feet deep at low water extending from the arsenal to the sea. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the Western Pacific Railroads by means of river boats deliver material shipped over their roads at the arsenal wharf, and by extending this wharf a short distance into the strait the largest transports and even war vessels could be docked there. So far as facilities for shipping material to points inland or over sea are concerned, it would seem that they could not be better. Fort Mason has no such facilities for shipment inland, and probably never will have such facilities as has Benicia Arsenal. The plant at Benicia Arsenal is already established. So far as the shop room is concerned, it is not only ample for present requirements, but space is available for the installation of a large number of additional tools. In the event of a war this plant would be of inestimable value. All the seacoast armament and the arms, cannon, and equipments in the hands of troops of Infantry, Cavalry, Field, and Mountain Artillery could be repaired there and immediately returned to the troops. A plant of this kind is absolutely necessary in case of war, and as this is the only arsenal on the Pacific coast, if it is not kept up such repairs would have to be done at the Rock Island Arsenal, which is the nearest one to the Pacific coast. To depend on the Rock Island Arsenal for repairs and supplies for troops on the Pacific coast and in Hawaii and Alaska is out of the question. It is even possible that at some future date the manufactures at Benicia Arsenal will be increased, because in time of war the Government plants and the existing private plants that can be utilized are not capable of manufacturing war material as fast as it will be required.

The arsenal already loads ammunition for all calibers of cannon, from the smallest to the largest; but it does not, however, manufacture the components of the fixed ammunition, such as the large cartridge cases, the projectiles, powder, and fuses. Without very great expenditure a plant could be installed for the manufacture of small-arms cartridges or one for the manufacture of cartridge cases, projectiles, and fuses for field and mountain artillery. The increase of the manufacturing operations in this manner would render the Pacific coast still more independent of the eastern arsenals. The arsenal would probably not manufacture powder for many years to come, but this can be obtained from the California powder works. Although a powder plant could be installed at a moderate cost, it is questionable if it would be economical to do so at the present time. Owing to the restricted space at Fort Mason it is hardly feasible to establish there a plant for manufacturing ammunition, loading shells with high explosives, storing powder, and so forth, all of which is more or less dangerous.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURRY. Will my colleague yield me a little more time?

Mr. KAHN. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 61 minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. I yield 5 minutes to my colleague.

Mr. CURRY. The proposition might be summed up as follows: Benicia Arsenal already has an organization and a plant not only capable of transacting all the work required of it in time of peace but capable of extension, with comparatively little expense, in time of war to provide for all the needs of the Pacific coast—with the exception of proper storehouses. Some such establishment as Benicia Arsenal is absolutely necessary on the Pacific coast, and if removed from Benicia it must be established elsewhere. The facilities for transportation, both by water and by rail, are of the best and rail transportation very much better than could be obtained at Fort Mason. It seems to be recognized by Congress that it would be impracticable to move the whole plant at Benicia Arsenal to Fort Mason, but some Members think it may be economical to store the war reserve at Fort Mason rather than at Benicia Arsenal. Why Members should think this, is inexplicable, for it is no more expensive to build a storehouse at Benicia than at Fort Mason, and since the storage facilities at Fort Mason are not sufficient to house the ordnance war reserve, a new storehouse must be either built at Fort Mason or at Benicia. If the reserve stores are housed at Fort Mason, the Government will either be put to considerable expense in sending employees periodically from Benicia to overhaul and keep the stores in proper preservation, to take out those stores needing alteration or modification, shipping them to Benicia Arsenal, and returning them after alteration to be again boxed and stored at Fort Mason, or else a current issue department must be maintained at Fort Mason to issue the oldest stores from the war reserve and to keep in proper state of preservation those not issued. This last would require almost a duplicate of the office force and storehouse force now maintained at Benicia Arsenal, and since the arsenal would continue to look after the armament of the seacoast and the field artillery an office force and a storehouse force nearly as large would have to be retained at Benicia, which would nearly double the expense to the Government.

There is one feature which I have not yet discussed, and that is the defense of Benicia Arsenal in case of war. This defense would be intimately bound up with that of San Francisco and the Mare Island Navy Yard. The defense from attack by warships may be considered absolute, since no ships could get through the Golden Gate, and the arsenal is consequently much better protected at Benicia than it would be at Fort Mason or somewhere in the grounds of the Presidio. The danger from attack, if any, is to be feared from the land side, and this would only occur in case our own Navy were driven from the Pacific Ocean. In such a case it might be conceivable that the enemies' forces would be landed north of San Francisco in order to proceed south and take it on the land side. It is presumed that the defense from such an attack would be established north of Benicia because of the necessity for keeping the railroads open to the east in order to replenish supplies consumed in war and to provide for transportation of additional troops. The country to the north of Benicia, moreover, is of such a character as to render its defense against attack comparatively easy. If Benicia Arsenal should fall, it would mean that San Francisco would be bottled up and remain in a state of siege. Even in such an event there would be ample opportunity to remove the war supplies from the arsenal and take them to San Francisco. With the water and railroad transportation available it is not an exaggeration to say that all the war supplies stored at Benicia could be removed and transported to San Francisco, using sufficient men and teams for loading, within 48 hours; and the same results would then be accomplished as if the stores had been concentrated at San Francisco for 10 years, but without the many disadvantages arising from such concentration as I have heretofore pointed out. It may be stated that Benicia might be exposed to small raiding parties, if not to the systematic advance of a large army, but in any event the railroad would have to be protected from such raiding parties, and there would be very little difficulty in stationing a small force at Benicia for the purpose of protecting the arsenal. Furthermore, the Government has a reservation containing 338.7 acres—239.9 at Benicia Arsenal and 98.8 at Benicia Barracks—and it is by no means inconceivable that the Government would find this reservation most convenient for the encampment of troops in case a large number of volunteers was to be raised for the defense of San Francisco from the land side.

Benicia Arsenal now manufactures all wooden targets and parts of targets used by Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Mountain Artillery, and Seacoast Artillery stationed along the Pacific coast, in Hawaii, Guam, the Philippines, Alaska, and in the States of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, part of Wyoming, California, Nevada, and Utah. It also furnishes the troops at these places with all ordnance supplies. It loads all the ammunition used by the Seacoast Artillery on the Pacific coast and Hawaii. It keeps in repair all the cannon, gun carriages, and ordnance equipment used by the Seacoast Artillery in these places, as well as the field and mountain artillery cannon and equipments used not only by the Regular troops but by the militia. It is constantly modifying and improving, under the direction of the Chief of Ordnance, the guns, gun carriages, equipment, and ammunition of the Seacoast Artillery and the Field and Mountain Artillery. The barrels of rifles used by individual soldiers are constantly wearing out, and the arsenal had made preparations for repairing all such rifles by equipping them with new barrels and making other necessary repairs. Revolvers can be and are repaired there as required, as well as machine guns and all kinds of ordnance equipments used by the soldier. Whenever such equipments become unserviceable in the hands of troops they are turned in there and repaired, if capable of repair. The reserve supplies of ammunition, powder, high explosives, and fuses are stored there and properly cared for, being issued to the service from time to time, and up to the present time all the ordnance war reserve for Regular, militia, and Volunteer troops in Hawaii and in the States mentioned has been stored there, so far as the storage facilities permitted; but owing to lack of sufficient storage facilities all war reserve supplies for the district served by Benicia Arsenal have not yet been sent there. In addition to this work, all correspondence with respect to ordnance matters in the region served by Benicia Arsenal goes to that arsenal, the commanding officer being the chief ordnance officer of the Western Department and handling all these matters for the commanding general of that department. An officer from Benicia Arsenal, under the direction of the commanding officer of the arsenal, regularly once a year inspects all the ordnance material in the hands of the Field, Mountain, and Seacoast Artillery troops, both Regular and National Guard troops, to see that it is in proper repair, and, if not, to arrange for putting it in proper repair.

The total number of boxes, bundles, and so forth, shipped from Benicia Arsenal to Alaska in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, was 404, and the weight 35,161 pounds. The number of boxes, crates, and so forth, shipped to Hawaii, 3,669; weight, 413,014 pounds. The number of boxes, crates, and so forth, shipped to the Philippine Islands, 233; weight, 130,191 pounds. And the number of boxes, crates, and so forth, shipped to points in the United States, outside of Alaska, was 25,630, and the weight 3,502,929 pounds. Grand total of boxes, bundles, crates, and so forth, shipped from Benicia Arsenal, 29,936; weight, 4,081,295 pounds (fiscal year 1912).

The fiscal year 1913 showed considerable increase of business in all lines, the total weight of stores shipped and received being doubled, but the disbursements were $11,000 less.

Referring specifically to the deficiency estimate submitted to the Sixty-second Congress for repairs and new construction, at Benicia Arsenal, these items are as follows:

(a) For an oil storehouse, $10,000.

(b) For a new storehouse to replace that destroyed by fire, $200,000.

(c) For placing the electric wiring on the arsenal reservation underground, $8,000.

(A) STOREHOUSE FOR OILS, PAINTS, AND OTHER INFLAMMABLES.

A table is appended showing the various buildings at Benicia Arsenal wholly or partially used for storage purposes. It will be noted from this table that oils, paints, and other inflammables are stored in six different places, and that none of these places is accessible to the railroad siding, requiring the oils, paints, and so forth, to be hauled to and from the buildings by wagons. When the arsenal has on hand all its oils even these storage places are overcrowded, and in any event they constitute six separate danger points at the arsenal. None of the buildings is properly adapted for the storage of oil, and none of them provides an issue room for oil, so that in the past oil was taken to the main storehouse for issue, constituting a menace to that building. Since the fire oils are being prepared for issue in a brick building, which can only be temporarily used for that purpose, because it contains the plant for repair of small arms. In the interests of efficiency and safety a proper oil storage and issue house is an absolute necessity for the arsenal.

The building proposed, if an appropriation is made, is to be of reenforced concrete construction, 120 feet long and 30 feet wide. The storage rooms will be two, each 50 feet long by 30 feet wide, and the issue room will be in the center, occupying the remaining space. Fire walls extending from the floor to the roof will separate the storage rooms from the issue room. The building will be located alongside the proposed new spur track, with a railroad platform so that oils can be unloaded from cars and trucked right into the building or trucked out of the building and placed on cars from this platform. As pointed out, it will be located at a distance of about 200 feet from the proposed new storehouse and on the same railroad siding. The oil house will be protected by a sprinkler system.

(B) PROPOSED NEW STOREHOUSE.

An examination of the appended table will show to what straits the arsenal has been put for storage in the past, every little available building being used for that purpose, and even buildings unsuitable for the purpose by reason of the fire risk involved. The old stable used as a storehouse should be pulled down. It was abandoned years ago as a stable, and only the direst necessity has continued it in use as a storehouse. So far as possible, the least valuable stores are housed in this old stable. The old lumber shed and the quartermaster storehouse and commissary storehouse at Benicia Barracks are entirely unsuitable for housing valuable material. They are all wooden structures, which are very likely to take fire. The danger to the stores therein is reduced to a minimum by a constant patrol around the buildings, but valuable stores should not be housed therein. Even before the destruction by fire of the main storehouse the Ordnance Department was not able to store all the war matériel there which it desired to do because of the lack of sufficient storage room.

Now that the main arsenal storehouse has been destroyed by fire, it is imperative that a new storehouse be built, and since this is the case it seems that the new building should be large enough to accommodate all the stores which should be concentrated at the arsenal without having to store them in any buildings unsuitable for the purpose. It is proposed to locate the new building on a spur track to be connected with the main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, the same spur track on which the proposed oil house will be located. This spur track will also be continued up to the shops, so that the oil house, the storehouse, and the shops will be served by it. The new track will reduce the cost of and the amount of wagon transportation at the arsenal to a minimum, and will much increase the rapidity with which supplies can be shipped in an emergency. Moreover, all the most valuable buildings of the arsenal will be located near each other, so that they can be efficiently guarded with a minimum number of men against fire or robbery. It is proposed to include a sprinkler system in the construction of the oil house and the new storehouse, and the cost is included in the estimates submitted.

The original estimate submitted for the storehouse was $300,000. The object in submitting so large an estimate was to put up a building which would house all the serviceable stores at the arsenal, both for current issues and for the war reserve, except powders, high explosives, ammunition for cannon, and so forth, to be stored in the magazines or in the reconstructed building, leaving only the unserviceable stores to be turned in from the service for repair or condemnation to be stored outside of this building. It was proposed to place these unserviceable stores pending repair or condemnation in the old shops storehouse. The reason for this is that it was desired to house serviceable stores only in the new building, which would be of the most modern fireproof construction, so that to the convenience of loading and unloading and storing materials in this building would be added a practical certainty that no fire therein could occur.

The old shops storehouse is a veritable fire trap; and, while a sprinkler system will very greatly reduce the fire risk therein, it can not be considered as safe as a building of fireproof construction. The importance of the Pacific coast is increasing all the time, and, with our interests in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands and with the growing population and value of the country, it is reasonable to suppose that the measures for protecting it from a military standpoint will continue to increase. Moreover, as the population on the coast increases, its quota of volunteer troops to be furnished in case of war will be increased, necessitating the storage of an extra amount of war reserve at Benicia Arsenal. It would seem, therefore, that the arsenal will gradually increase in importance and will not stand still. If a new storehouse is to be erected, it should be large enough to prevent the possibility of having to erect another storehouse in, say, 10 years.

The estimate of $300,000 for a new storehouse was reduced in the office of the Chief of Ordnance to $250,000. When the item was submitted to the Sixty-second Congress it was again reduced, to $200,000, by order of the Secretary of War. The estimate for this storehouse includes also the cost of installing the spur track and the cost of the necessary grading and roads to connect with the building and the cost of a large cistern connected with the building, and the estimate of $200,000, if allowed by Congress, will permit of the construction of a new storehouse, which, in connection with the use of the old shops storehouse, will probably afford ample accommodation for the present for stores for current issue and for the war reserve.

On page 484 of the "Hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, sundry civil bill for 1914," it is stated that it is now considered that a storehouse of sufficient size could be built for $120,000. This on the assumption that a part of the war reserve will be stored at Fort Mason. This I believe to be a great mistake, and that no building should be erected of less size than can be built for $200,000. A building no larger than can be built for $120,000 will not take care of the war reserve, and the objections to storing the war reserve at Fort Mason I have fully outlined previously.

The Sixty-second Congress provided a deficiency appropriation of $15,000 to repair the burned storehouse, and by the use of the $15,000 a first-class fireproof one-story storehouse has been obtained. This building is used for the storage of field and mountain artillery ammunition. The reconstructed building is at a considerable distance from and height above the railroad track, and necessitates a long, hard haul of all material for storage therein. If a storehouse is to be erected at a cost not exceeding $200,000, it will probably be necessary to store in the reconstructed building the small-arms ammunition, which would otherwise probably be stored in the new storehouse. In this connection it should be stated that small-arms ammunition is not considered dangerous in storage, and if stored in the new storehouse would be placed in a room of absolute fireproof construction erected in such a way that any fire starting in one room could not be communicated to another room.

(C) PLACING ELECTRIC WIRING UNDERGROUND, $8,000.

The electric current for running the various machines in the buildings at the arsenal and for lighting the various buildings is obtained from the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. It is brought into the arsenal on overhead wires supported on poles at an alternating voltage of 2,200. This current at 2,200 volts is carried all around the arsenal on overhead wires, transformers being installed near the various buildings by means of which the voltage is reduced to 220 or 110, and the current thus reduced in voltage carried on the same poles until it enters the buildings. The telephone wires connecting the various buildings also run on these same poles. In some places the high-tension wires and the low-tension wires on the same poles run through the branches of trees, and although care is taken to trim the trees at the points where the wires pass through them, this in itself is a considerable menace, yet the colonel in command at the arsenal is very reluctant to cut down ornamental shade trees, and so contents himself with keeping them trimmed at the points where the wires pass through. By reason of age the insulation on the high-tension wires is rapidly deteriorating and in many places the insulation has entirely worn off. The poles are rotting, as well as the cross arms. It will be seen from what has been stated that the whole installation is in need of extensive repair.

It is not uncommon for the power lines of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. to be blown down, short-circuiting the current and depriving the city of Benicia and the arsenal of light. It is therefore reasonable to fear that the poles in the arsenal may be blown down in a high wind. Should such an accident occur in the present condition of the wires it might lead to a great disaster by fire, with possible loss of life. As has been stated, the insulation of the high-tension wires is practically gone, and should a pole be blown down it is very likely that these high-tension wires would be crossed with the low-tension wires furnishing light and power to the various buildings. This would result in the delivery of current at 2,200 volts into any one or more of a number of buildings of the arsenal. This would be very likely to kill any person standing near the point where the low-tension wires enter the buildings and would almost certainly set fire to the building. The present overhead installation is a continual menace to the arsenal.

Since the whole installation must be extensively overhauled it is the part of wisdom to put it in the safest possible condition, and this can be done by putting the high-tension wires in conduit underground, where if a short circuit of any kind occurred it could not deliver high-tension current into any of the buildings. This is what is proposed to be done with the estimate of $8,000. For the sake of economy, the high-tension wires are to be placed in underground conduits only in the part of the arsenal containing the quarters, office, shops, and large storehouses. To carry the current over the hills to the magazines the high-tension wires will continue to be used, but they will be put in the best possible condition.

I submit that the facts I have presented as to the conditions existing at Benicia Arsenal, due, in the main, to a disastrous fire, are sufficient to warrant Congress, as a matter of economy, to appropriate the amount of money estimated by the War Department as necessary to rehabilitate the arsenal and equip it so that it may be used to its fullest capacity. Also that the storage of ordnance supplies at Fort Mason instead of at Benicia would be from a business standpoint uneconomical and from a military standpoint unwise.

In closing I again call the attention of Congress to the fact that had Col. Ruggles's estimate of $8,000 for the installation of an automatic sprinkler system of fire protection been allowed the fire at the arsenal would have done but little damage. The indiscriminate cutting out of estimates is not always true economy.

Col. Ruggles has been transferred to the Philippines and has been succeeded in command at Benicia by Col. J. W. Joyse, an able and accomplished officer. [Applause.]

Note how every available building is used for storage, even an old stable that ought to be condemned, as well as an old lumber shed and two old wooden storehouses in Benicia Barracks.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DEITRICK].

Mr. DEITRICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire at the outset to state that I favor any reasonable proposition that would make unnecessary an appropriation such as is carried by this bill.

The views on the question of an appropriation for the support of the Army and its allied subjects may be divided into three classes:

First. Peace.

Second. War.

Third. Peace with preparedness for war.

The first proposition, as generally understood, signifies a discontinuation of the Army, and is one that is advocated by some of our best and most learned citizens. They take the ground that war is a crime and that having armies merely encourages war and results not only in the expenditure of vast sums of money, but also costs untold suffering and the lives of a large percentage of those who engage in it. This view has been held for many years by some of our people. The sincerity of this class of persons is admitted, but I can only say that I doubt if they would long hold their position if only America adopted their views, because this Nation under present-day conditions would soon be overrun by the armed troops of our neighbors, and our peace friends would be found among the first to clamor for rifles with which to drive out the invaders.

Second. There is another class of persons who believe that the United States should maintain a very large Army and in time of peace be as well prepared for war as was, for example, Germany at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War. There are, however, but a few in America who hold this view, and it is difficult to understand why any advocate a large Army in time of peace, since we are so far removed from other large powers. Our position between the seas obviates the necessity of our having a large standing Army.

Third. The third and last general division of our people believe that in time of peace we should have a small, well-organized Army and a reserve with some degree of military training, so that in case of war this reserve could be mustered into service and could be quickly trained and equipped with arms to take advantage of any situation that might arise in the first few months of conflict.

I agree with this view. It is upon this principle, I take it, that this Government has maintained a small Army and has made some provision, in one way or another, for a reserve fighting force. The total number of troops now in the Regular Army is 77,000, exclusive of the Hospital Corps and the Philippine Scouts. This is less than 1,000 soldiers for every million persons under the flag, and not equal to the number of police officers in the entire country. So far as can be foreseen, a Regular Army of this size is sufficient for our Government in time of peace. The real question then comes upon how are you going to expand the Regular Army quickly and provide it with war material at the outbreak of war. The Government has adopted the plan of providing a reserve by aiding the militia of the various States and by a volunteer bill.

The number of men generally agreed upon that should constitute this reserve is about 500,000, but what use would 500,000 men be at the outbreak of a war if they did not possess proper field artillery? The Government has to-day on hand a sufficient number of small arms to equip an army of 1,000,000 men, but an army of riflemen unsupported by artillery would never get within shooting distance of an opponent which was well supplied with field artillery, for it is the field artillery that clears the way for infantrymen to perform their part in a present-day battle.

The War Department submitted total estimates to the Committee on Military Affairs for the support of the Army, aggregating $104,947,758.65. The committee cut this appropriation to $94,214,173.06, or a reduction of $10,733,585.59. I am happy to state that I approve of these reductions in all cases except that for field artillery.

We have to-day only 753 field guns on hand, in process of manufacture, or for which the money has already been appropriated. It is estimated by Gen. Crozier that the field guns per thousand men should be 3.16, which Gen. Wood states is lower than any other nation he knows of. Therefore for an army of 500,000 men it is estimated we would need about 1,600 guns.

I regret very much that the Committee on Military Affairs, in its wisdom, reduced the appropriation for field artillery $250,000 less than it was last year, giving only $750,000 in this bill. In other words, if we were compelled to place in the field an army of 500,000 men to-day it probably would not have more than one-third of the field guns which it would require.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not want to mislead the House?

Mr. DEITRICK. Not at all.

Mr. HAY. The Chief of Ordnance and the Chief of Staff testified that they had 57 per cent of guns enough to arm an army of 500,000 men, so that would be more than half.

Mr. DEITRICK. I would like the chairman to point that out in the hearings.

Mr. HAY. I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. DEITRICK. I have looked for it and I can not find it.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, we could not supply an army of 500,000 men to-day with more than one-third of the field guns necessary to give it any chance whatever of winning a battle from an opponent of equal size that was adequately supplied with field artillery.

At the Battle of Mukden the Russians numbered about 500,000 men and had more than 1,200 guns, almost twice as many as there are to-day in America. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this Congress should be stingy on this appropriation. It is a "penny-wise and pound-foolish" policy. Far better that we dispense with the service of 10,000 of our infantrymen than that we be lacking in field artillery. It can not be made in a night. It would take one year with all the factories in the United States working three shifts a day to make 500 field artillery guns. It will require at least 20 years at the rate carried in this bill to manufacture the field artillery to meet the requirements of the Army sufficient to give us a total of 1,600 guns.

The War Department, realizing the weakness of this arm of the service, asked Congress for $2,100,000, and in my judgment a great mistake has been made by the committee in reducing the item to one-third of what was asked for. These guns should even now be in reserve. It is a well settled fact that modern wars are of short duration—a matter of six months. It is therefore quite certain that any war that would trouble us would be commenced, fought, and ended before we could supply our Army with field artillery. It is hoped by us all that we will never again be engaged in war, but we must not be unmindful of the fact that war is not a lost art. Every nation that has ever existed has had its four or five wars to the century, and there is no power which will prevent one nation from overrunning another except battleships and guns. We all trust that the day may soon come when some genius will invent a plan whereby international disputes and friction may be settled without resort to arms, but until such a device is adopted and placed in operation by a large majority of the world's great powers it is utter folly and a crime for this Nation to fail to reasonably provide means for protecting the home and the Nation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. FITZGERALD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13453, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee because we know that this day we make the record of victory or defeat in the personal life of each one of us. We thank Thee for the peace that abounds, the good fellowship, the community of interest, and the inspiration that rises out of the common task that Thou hast committed to the hands of these Thy servants. But we would be sure of our inner spiritual life. May no voice of conscience be heard accusing us. May there be harmony not only between our professions and actions but between our convictions and actions. May we be sure of our own hearts before God, and we gladly leave the rest to Thee. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WATER POWERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Thursday, after the completion of the routine morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the bill (S. 4415) to aid and to regulate the development, operation, and maintenance of water powers on lands of the United States, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13612. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to make a request?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. On last Tuesday I gave notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the morning business to-day I would move to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1. It is evident that this would interfere with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, which I do not wish to do; but I send to the desk a request for a unanimous-consent agreement, and ask that it be entered into after the roll has been called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Oliver	Smoot
Bankhead	Gronna	Overman	Stephenson
Borah	Hughes	Page	Sterling
Brady	James	Perkins	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones	Pomerene	Swanson
Bristow	Kern	Reed	Thompson
Bryan	Lane	Root	Tillman
Catron	Lodge	Saulsbury	Townsend
Chamberlain	McCumber	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	McLean	Sheppard	Weeks
Colt	Martin, Va.	Shively	Works.
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Fall	Norris	Smith, Md.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] and to say that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is still detained from the Senate by illness. I am happy to say that his condition is improving. I make this announcement with reference to his necessary absence for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am requested to announce the temporary absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent, being occupied with official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has submitted a request for a unanimous-consent agreement, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, the 24th day of March, 1914, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1, joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women; and that, at not later than the hour of 3 o'clock p. m., on Saturday, the 28th day of March, 1914, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may then be pending, all amendments that may then be offered, and upon the joint resolution, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition: Provided, however, That during the debate thereon, after said hour of 3 o'clock p. m., on the 28th day of March, each Senator, if he so desires, shall be entitled to speak for 10 minutes and no longer upon said joint resolution and upon any amendment that may then be pending or that may be offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent which has just been read?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] will not fix the time for final action on this joint resolution as early as he has indicated by the proposed request for a unanimous-consent agreement, for the reason that there are a number of Senators who desire to address the Senate on the resolution, and at the time he has indicated in the request the Senate will be engaged exclusively in the consideration of the trust bills soon to be reported. This joint resolution could not, therefore, receive the consideration at that time which it demands. I suggest to the Senator that he fix the time about a month later.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I realize the deep interest the Senator from Kansas has in this joint resolution, but I personally do not feel in a position where I can consent to any change in the date for its final disposition. If the Senate wishes to change the date, of course I do not object, and could not object. This meets my view, at least, as to what we ought to do. The joint resolution has been pending since June 13, 1913.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire what is the date fixed in the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. ASHURST. That we vote upon the joint resolution on the 28th day of March.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why not vote sooner?

Mr. ASHURST. There are a number of Senators—I do not happen to have the list before me on my desk at this moment, but I had it a moment ago—who wish to speak upon the joint resolution, some in its favor and some in opposition to it; and it would seem, from the number of Senators who desire to speak, that it would not be due courtesy to Senators who wish to speak to attempt to fix the time for a vote at an earlier date.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] to the fact that I believe it would be very much better to have action upon the joint resolution on the 28th of March than allow it to go over a month later, because at that time the appropriation bills will be in the Senate and will be under consideration. Not only that, but the trust bills, to which the Senator refers, will not be disposed of by April 28, the time to which he suggested that the final vote on the joint resolution be postponed. I repeat, I think it will be very much better to dispose of the joint resolution not later than March 28, and I am of the opinion that it would be better to agree upon an earlier date for a vote than even the 28th day of March.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, there seems to be considerable difference of opinion as to the best time for the consideration and final disposition of this resolution. It is a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States on a very important question, and many people from my State and other States, who are directly interested in the passage of the resolution, have come to me and requested a later date for a final vote. I shall therefore have to object to the disposition of the joint resolution in March.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope my friend the Senator from Kansas will not object to the disposition of the joint resolution which I have suggested. It has been pending on the calendar, as I have heretofore said, since the middle of last June. We ought to make some progress with and dispose of this important measure. I do not believe, if its consideration were postponed to a later date, the joint resolution would receive one more vote than it would receive now or than it would get on March 28, and I appeal to the Senator to withdraw the objection and let us dispose of the matter. I trust he will do so.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I should like to oblige the Senator personally in every way possible, but the importance of the joint resolution and the necessity for its full consideration at the most opportune time are such that I feel obliged to object to a time being fixed for a vote earlier than that which I have indicated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, allow me to suggest to the Senator before he makes the motion——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not be better for the Senator from Arizona to ask the Senator from Kansas what day would be satisfactory to him to vote upon the joint resolution—the earliest date?

Mr. THOMPSON. Early in May.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, in May.

Mr. THOMPSON. Say, Monday, May 4. That would be entirely satisfactory to me and to others who are interested in the passage of the joint resolution, and also to those who still desire to discuss it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from Kansas, I can not perceive any reason why the consideration of or the vote upon the joint resolution should be postponed until that date. I do not believe that the joint resolution would get one more vote by reason of its being postponed; and, as has well been observed by the Senator from Utah, at that time the Senate will be engaged in the discussion of appropriation bills. I know the Senator from Kansas is a friend of the joint resolution; he desires the passage of the joint resolution; and if he wishes to give effectiveness to his favoritism in behalf of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, I ask him to withdraw his objection, because we are now trying to proceed in about the only way we can proceed. I hope the Senator will withdraw the objection.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know which Senator rose first, but I yield.

Mr. REED. I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I desire to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rose simply to say that the Senator from Arizona has been very considerate and patient in this matter. The joint resolution reported by the Senator has been on the calendar a long time, and he has given way from time to time to other matters. It does seem to me that putting the consideration of the joint resolution and the vote on it ahead practically one month ought to satisfy the demands of all Senators, no matter how they are going to vote on the joint resolution.

I will venture to add one further suggestion, which is, that if objection shall be made and the Senator can not get a day fixed—which I think ought to be freely granted him—after the present unfinished business is out of the way the Senator might well move to take up the joint resolution and proceed to its consideration. I hope the Senator will do that, if he does not get a day fixed by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand objection has already been made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Arizona that he change the date for voting on the joint resolution from March 28 to March 27.

Mr. ASHURST. I accept that suggestion, and ask that the date be changed accordingly, so that the vote may be taken on the 27th of March instead of the 28th.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can not imagine——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Has the Senator from Arizona concluded?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I want to make some remarks, but I will wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to get the request for unanimous consent straightened out.

Mr. REED. I am going to speak on that.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I renew my request that the vote on the joint resolution be taken on the 27th of March. I desire to change the date to the 27th of March, and I ask unanimous consent that the order as thus modified be entered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I can imagine——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; the Senator does not need to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona has not yielded the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be very glad to yield to my friend the Senator from Missouri, but before doing so I wish to make this observation, and then I will yield the floor: This, in my opinion, is important legislation, but it is not the only important legislation with which the Senate must deal. It has been pending on the calendar, as I repeat for the fourth time, since the middle of last June. Are Senators afraid to vote "yea" or "nay" upon it? Is an American Senator here afraid to vote? We have had an opportunity to discuss it since the middle of June last. Why not, then, let us set a date for a vote? It does not become a Senator to stand here and object to fixing a day for the vote. I think it would be only proper for Senators to give us an opportunity to vote upon it, so that we may then proceed to other important legislation. I do not wish to be placed in the attitude of criticizing those who object, but I will say this, not as a threat but as a simple statement of what I purpose doing, that if the request for unanimous consent is objected to, immediately upon the conclusion of the Post Office appropriation bill I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution and ask a roll call upon that motion. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, nothing could give me greater pain than to oppose a request of the Senator from Arizona. I know that his heart is in this joint resolution.

I suppose all sorts of dire things may happen to some of us who may not feel that this is the most important question before the Congress. The principal argument I have heard thus far has been that any man who is not for this joint resolution is to be annihilated in every way—politically, morally, intellectually, and possibly physically. That kind of argument does not appeal to me, Mr. President. I am going to object to fixing a date to vote upon this joint resolution not because I am afraid to vote upon it, not because I hesitate to answer to my name on the roll call, but because we have coming before us in the very near future legislation of the gravest importance, legislation that the country expects, legislation that the country is waiting for, bills of national importance, upon which early action is expected. The measures I refer to will demand the sober, careful consideration of both branches of Congress. The debate, in my judgment, will properly involve the consumption of very considerable time. A unanimous-consent agreement to take up any bill except one of the character I have spoken of, in my judgment, ought not to be granted. I apply that statement not only to this joint resolution, but to any bill that will involve prolonged discussion.

Unanimous-consent agreements of this character mean that at an arbitrary date every other legislative matter before the Senate must be halted, all consideration of other matters must be suspended until the bill involved in the unanimous-consent agreement is acted upon.

At the last session of Congress, while Congress was waiting for action upon the currency bill, we found that a number of unanimous-consent agreements had been entered into which in a measure blocked its consideration. It was only because some Senators, realizing the importance of keeping the legislative highway open, refused their consent to agreements with relation to other bills that we were able to keep the path measurably clear for the consideration of the currency bill.

I am perfectly willing that we shall have a vote upon this joint resolution. I am also equally willing and equally anxious that we shall have a vote upon many other measures, but, in my opinion, until these great measures that are being pressed upon Congress have been disposed of we ought not to block the legislative road by unanimous-consent agreements.

So far as this joint resolution is concerned, it is true that it was reported some time back. But, bearing upon its importance, I beg to suggest every State in this Union has the right, by legislative enactment, to grant to the people of that State all that is required in the joint resolution as a national proposition. Legislature after legislature has been passing upon this very question. In some of the States the request of these propagandists has been acquiesced in and in some it has been refused.

I see nothing in the measure which demands that all the business of the country shall be halted in order that it may be submitted to the various legislatures. In my opinion this measure is not nearly so pressing as the speedy disposition of the trust legislation which is to be soon brought forward, for, whether that legislation be wise or unwise, it will affect generally the business situation in the United States, and until it is settled and put at rest there will be to a certain extent some interference with trade manufacturing and labor.

We ought to get this important legislation speedily out of the way. We ought to proceed along the line of carrying forward those measures that are understood to be of great importance and are to be pressed upon Congress. When we have disposed of those pressing matters it will be time enough to take up the suffrage question.

Some 6,000 years, at least, of history have gone by and the ladies have succeeded in getting along this far without the right to vote, except in States where it has been especially granted. I think the dear women will continue to survive even if we should not vote upon this measure until the 1st day of June. I do not believe the world will come to an end or the price of millinery be radically altered or the homes of the land destroyed or that chaos and old night will settle down upon this country if we do not vote upon this joint resolution until even the 15th day of June. Nay, more, I apprehend the Constitution of the United States will continue to exist, the Federal Republic to maintain its dignity, and the world to move on in its accustomed way if we should not vote on this joint resolution until as late as the 20th day of next June.

I am in favor of going ahead with the business that is pressing upon us for our attention. When we have passed upon the measures embraced in what I am pleased to call the legislative program, for want of a better name, in which I include the trust bills and certain other great measures, I shall not be a mere obstructionist. I shall be perfectly willing to meet this question and discuss it and vote upon it.

I object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, inasmuch as we have nothing pressing before the Senate now, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he would consent to an earlier day than the 27th of March?

Mr. REED. I have tried to make myself plain. We have matters pressing upon the attention of the Senate. We are so busy with legislative matters that we have not been able to take two or three day adjournments so that the committees may clean up their dockets. There is enough business of importance now before the Judiciary Committee to keep the Senate busy for three months if it were reported in here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not any doubt that there are important measures before the committees; but as to measures that are pending before the Senate, I do not believe the great measures are here nor likely to be here for a considerable length of time.

The joint resolution under discussion was introduced last June; a favorable report was made upon it, and there has been a continual effort upon the part of the Senator from Arizona to get a hearing upon the matter. He has tried to secure an agreement upon various days, and it has been objected to. Upon the call of the calendar there has been objection several times to the consideration of the joint resolution.

It seems to me this is a measure that deserves consideration. In view of that fact, inasmuch as we have more time now than we are likely to have a month from now or two months from now, it seems to me the Senator from Missouri ought not to object to an earlier day than that which has been proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and that is the conclusion of the matter for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can ask my question upon some other proposition that will come before the Senate. I wanted to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to answer it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I received this morning a very urgent letter from a good constituent of mine of the Democratic faith, asking me when the trust bills were likely to come before Congress. They are incubating somewhere; I do not know where. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, representing the majority, if he can give the Senate information as to when they are likely to be presented for our consideration. I agree with the Senator that they are of such importance that they ought not to be sidetracked by any inconsequential matters.

Mr. REED. I can answer that question only in the most general way. My understanding is that a committee of the lower House has been busily engaged upon them, and from day to day the statement is made that in a few days they will be ready. I have not any accurate, first-hand information on the subject, though I can easily obtain it. I feel confident, however, that we may expect those bills to be introduced within a very few days.

It is understood—it has been a matter of public statement—that the President is interested in having bills of that character pressed. I do not mean that he is writing a bill or preparing a bill, but I mean that he is insistent upon Congress taking proper action. Indeed, that is the statement in his message.

Mr. GALLINGER. The feeling I have about the matter is that as the bills have not yet been reported to either House, and doubtless there will be a lengthy debate in another body on the bills, they are not likely to come here by the 26th of March; but perhaps they will.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire I may say that one of these bills, commonly known as the trade commission bill, is being considered by the Interstate Commerce Committee now. There was a hearing to-day of a committee representing the National Chamber of Commerce. The members of the committee have been working upon the bill, but I can not say when it will be reported out.

I make this statement in the absence of the chairman.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that as soon as the present order of business is disposed of I shall move to bring up for consideration Senate bill 120, to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes; and I shall ask to submit some remarks upon it at that time.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, it is not my desire to prolong the discussion on the joint resolution; but in view of what the Senator from Arizona has said as to desiring an indication of the attitude of those who object to the consideration of the resolution at the time proposed, in justice to myself I think I should say that I am just as anxious as he is to vote upon the resolution, and just as strongly favorable to the resolution as it is possible for him to be; but in my judgment and in the judgment of those who have requested a later date for a vote, the time I have indicated is the time that would be best for favorable consideration of the resolution.

I am reliably informed that early in the spring action will be taken on this subject in nearly every State of the Union, and that it is the desire of those who wish favorable action by the Senate upon the joint resolution to have returns from the several States before the vote is finally taken.

It was simply with a view of having a time set when the joint resolution would receive the best consideration that I objected to the time proposed. I am anxious to fix a time to vote, just as anxious as the Senator from Arizona is; but I want the matter voted on at a time when, in my judgment, from the information I have, it will receive the most favorable consideration. The time I suggested, early in May, is the most propitious, according to the views of my constituents, who honestly and sincerely desire the passage of the resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the merits of the resolution the consideration of which has just been objected to, but I trust the Senator from Arizona will move to take up the joint resolution.

There are millions of people who are anxiously awaiting the taking of some action upon this joint resolution. I know there is no Senator here who is afraid to record his vote either for or against the measure, but it is entitled to consideration. It has been upon the calendar for a long time, and I doubt if there is before the Senate any business that is of greater importance than the joint resolution submitted by the Senator from Arizona. I therefore trust he will move to take up the joint resolution for consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment? I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I understood the Senator from Arizona to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill he expected to move to take up the joint resolution reported by him. I wondered if that was correct.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct. I gave notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill I should move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

I observe that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has also given notice that he will move to proceed to the consideration of the grain-inspection bill; but I am very willing to wait until he shall have concluded with that bill, if he so desires.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I really understand the Senator to say that he will yield his notice to the notice given by the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I am very willing to do so, because, if I understood the Senator from North Dakota correctly, he simply wishes to make some remarks. At the conclusion of his remarks I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator——

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I intend to move to take up the grain-inspection bill as soon as we are through with the Post Office bill. I am not at the present time asking for a unanimous-consent agreement. That has nothing to do with the general motion to take up a bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to make the statement just now that he had already given notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill he would move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I gave that notice some 20 minutes ago.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator had made that statement. If that is the case, if it is taken up and considered and becomes the unfinished business, of course the Senator from North Dakota can still ask that his bill be considered. It would not be the unfinished business, however, if not acted upon on that day.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11338, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R.

11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the amendment which is now pending before the Senate has been discussed at such considerable length that I should not venture to take the time of the Senate to discuss it if I had not been for a good many years a member of the Post Office Committee of the House and had not been one of the conferees which had to do with the legislation which is now under discussion.

After listening to the debate with much interest, I think there have been two or three phases of the question which have not been adequately discussed which are pertinent in its consideration.

As in all such cases when some action is being taken to limit a service for what seems a proper purpose, there is a deluge of protests which comes from some central inspiration or from a lack of knowledge of the facts bearing on the case. That is quite as true of this proposition as any with which I have been familiar. For instance, I received this morning from some one a copy of a western paper which pretty severely attacks the Post Office Committee for having proposed this amendment. It gives the names of the members of the committee who voted for it and the names of the members who proposed the various parts of the amendment. It refers to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] as the proposers of the amendment. This list includes the chairman of the committee, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Three of the Senators who are reported in this editorial from the western paper as having supported the amendment in committee addressed the Senate in opposition to it yesterday. I do not know for what reason they have changed their position, if that be true, because I was not present when the vote was taken in the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator repeat the names of Senators who are mentioned in the editorial? I did not hear him distinctly.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Mississippi was mentioned in the editorial as having voted for the amendment in the committee. The editorial goes on to say that the amendment relating to weights was proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the amendment relating to rates of postage and zones was proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], and then later in the editorial it says:

> Every citizen who believes in parcel post and is opposed to rotten invisible government should telegraph or write his Senators and Representative in Congress and protest his strongest against this outrageous move to make big dividends again flow into the coffers of the express companies.

Having in the very columns which I have referred to described in detail how this legislation came to be included in the Post Office appropriation bill, it proceeds then to describe it as rotten invisible government.

Mr. President, the only purpose which the Post Office Committee have had in including this proposition in the Post Office appropriation bill is for the purpose of stopping and looking to see what this service is costing the Government. I submit to the Senate that there is not a man in the Post Office Department or anywhere else who has the faintest conception of what this service is costing the Government to-day.

I was a member of the House Committee on Post Offices at the time of its adoption, and was a member of the conference committee which reported out the bill as it now stands on the statute books. The part of the law the objection to the changing of which is now raised was not included in the House bill or the Senate bill. No Senator who was then a Member knew anything about that phase of the bill which put in the hands of the Postmaster General the right to change zones or rates or weights. It was adopted in conference, and the only reason why it was adopted was because it was recognized that Congress was not an effective rate-making body in detail, and that we might have made material errors which should be corrected when they had developed. It was never intended or supposed that the Postmaster General was going to increase the weight or change the zones or increase or lower rates until the system had been in operation long enough so that he would have the data on which to base the real cost of the service as well as the returns of the service.

This illustrates one of the methods of the growth of the public service. Fifteen or sixteen years ago, when the Rural Delivery Service was established, it was stated by the department and repeated frequently on the floor of the Senate and House that the establishment of the Rural Service in the United States would not cost more than fifteen or twenty million dollars at the outside. At that time the rural carriers were paid about $500 a year. It was not until 1907 that the pay of the rural carriers was increased above $720 a year. This year we are increasing their pay from $1,100 to $1,200 a year. Last year we increased it $100 on the supposition that the parcel post would give them a large amount of additional work to perform, and it is being increased again this year for exactly the same reason. In other words, there is an increased cost of the Rural Service, based entirely on the adoption of the Parcel Post System, amounting to $9,000,000 a year.

Everyone knows that the railway mail pay has not been adjusted to this service. We only weigh one of the four sections of the country annually, so that there are three sections where no weighing has taken place. Therefore the railroads in those sections are not receiving additional compensation for carrying their part of the 600,000,000 additional parcels which are being loaded on them by the Government.

Furthermore, even if we knew what we may have to pay for rural service and the additional pay which will have to go to the railroads later on, I submit that the facts are not before the department sufficiently yet to enable them to come to any definite conclusion as to the cost of the service. The Postmaster General in a year increased the weight from 11 pounds to 20 pounds; he increased the weight again from 20 pounds to 50 pounds; and he has consolidated the first and second zones so that we carry 150 miles for 5 cents for 1 pound, and he has reduced the rate in many sections of the country very materially. This has been done at such short intervals that there can not be any data at hand either in the department or elsewhere which will enable anyone to conclude what the cost has been.

I have been for some time a member of the commission which has been trying to determine the rate of pay which should be given the railroads for carrying the mail. That has been a mooted question for 20 years. I am satisfied after having studied it for a year that until the present commission took up the study of the question there was not a person in the United States, either in the Post Office Department or connected with the railroads, who knew what the service was costing, either the railroads or the Government, except as a lump sum. I am not yet satisfied that we have got to the bottom of that question. I hope we are arriving at a conclusion which will be just to the Government and just to the railroads; but to show how uncertain the department may be in such matters I simply want to suggest that in a document which was submitted to Congress something over a year ago, known as Document 105, the department estimated that the railroads were receiving something like $9,000,000 more than they should for the service performed, and now, within three months, the department has submitted another document in which it says that the railroads are receiving only $1,600,000 more than they should be receiving, and an expert of the Interstate Commerce Commission at the same time reports that the railroads are receiving some two or three million dollars less than they should be receiving, even without taking into consideration the parcel post.

A service which has been in operation for 50 years under such conditions as has been railway pay, where no one has had information which could determine the rate of pay which should have been given the railroads, must be an indication to Senators that this service, which has only been in operation 14 months, which has been changed in some details as many as 7 times during those 14 months, must be in such a condition that neither the department nor anyone else can give a definite value of the cost of the service.

It is for that reason that the committee has suggested to Congress that it is wise to stop and find out what this service is costing before we extend it in any way. My judgment is that there is going to be an enormous deficit as the result of the service performed as it is to-day.

We had day before yesterday, before the Post Office Committee, some local express men from Massachusetts who do an express business from Boston to the surrounding towns. In many cases they take the articles from the stores and carry them in their own wagons to the towns where the residents live who made the purchases and deliver them to the purchasers. They have charged in the past 15 cents for a 10-pound package or any weight under 10 pounds, and there is not a single instance where those doing this business themselves, frequently working 12 or 14 hours, ever succeeded in making more than a decent living.

A few years ago, two men thinking that they could consolidate a part of that service and carry it on through a clearing house in Boston, put on better teams and performed it more expeditiously, took over about 20 of those little express companies, none of them doing an interstate business, it is reported. These men succeeded in losing between two and three hundred thousand dollars in less than three years at the rates which I have named—that is, 15 cents for a 10-pound package or any weight under 10 pounds. Yet the Post Office Department is carrying within those limits a 1-pound package for 5 cents, a 2-pound package for 6 cents, a 3-pound package for 7 cents, and a 10-pound package for 14 cents. It is not getting more than 50 per cent of the price that has been charged by those local expressmen, the slightest investigation of whose affairs will show that they have just been able to make a modest living, doing the work themselves, and working from 10 to 14 hours a day.

There is an instance where, in my judgment, it can not be possible that the Government is getting a new dollar for an old one. All the interest I have in this matter is that this service shall be made as beneficial as possible to the people of the country now that it has been established, but that under no circumstances shall the Government be imposed upon so that the return shall be less than the cost of the service.

There may be a reason why first-class mail or even second-class mail should be carried for less than cost, because it has an educational and other benefits with which we are all familiar. But there can be no reason why the Government should carry freight, express matter, the parcels of any individual for less than the service is costing the Government.

Believing as I do that this service as now performed is going to produce a deficit, and that nobody knows what the service is costing, I am justified, in my mind, as I believe every Senator would be justified, in saying, "Let us stop for a year or for some definite time and find out what the real facts are before we extend the service in any way." If the service can later on be extended wisely, then, as far as I am concerned, I am in favor of doing it, but I do want to be sure where we are going to land before we take another step.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I quite agree with him as to the importance of knowing what the Government is receiving from this service. How are we to know what it receives? The distinctive stamps having been abolished, how is it possible to find out what the Government is receiving?

Mr. WEEKS. I am very glad my colleague has asked that question. One of the provisions which was made in the bill as passed in the summer of 1912 was that a distinctive stamp should be used. If a distinctive stamp had been used and no change had been made in zones or in weights or in rates, we could have determined absolutely how much parcel-post matter had been carried by the Government. By estimating the annual increase, which has been about 7 per cent for a long term of years, and adding to that the unusual increase which has taken place since the establishment of the parcel post, we could determine pretty definitely what the service was costing as well as how much we were actually doing—how much weight we were carrying.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The provision the Senator speaks of provided distinctive stamps for all fourth-class mail?

Mr. WEEKS. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Was not the distinctive stamp the Senator speaks of to be placed on all fourth-class mail, whether parcel post or not?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; it was.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then how could one distinguish from this stamp what was the cost of parcel post and what was the cost of other fourth-class matter?

Mr. WEEKS. We could distinguish pretty accurately, because the amount of fourth-class mail which the Government was handling was known definitely and the returns before the parcel post was established were known definitely. Taking those returns from the total returns from the stamps sold, we would have a pretty accurate estimate of the amount of parcel-post matter which had developed, and a similar method of estimating would have given a pretty definite idea of what the service was costing.

Now, that stamp has been abolished. I am in favor of restoring the stamp. I do not think we are going to, for a long time, find out how much this service is costing unless we have some such method as a separate and distinct stamp to be used for one year or two years or for some other definite time, during which time there shall be no change in weight, no change in rates, and no change of the zone system. I am simply solicitous, as I said before, that the Government shall be properly recompensed for this service and that the service shall be made as beneficial to the people as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment reported by the committee, inserting the proviso beginning in line 22 and ending in line 25, on page 15, in order?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, having submitted the point of order on the amendment, I desire to be heard briefly upon it. The proviso in the bill reads as follows:

And provided further That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

Paragraph 3 of Rule XVI reads in part as follows:

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The question is, What is "general legislation"? The Century Dictionary defines the term as follows:

General legislation, that legislation which is applicable throughout the State generally, as distinguished from special legislation, which affects only particular persons or localities.

Applying that definition to the proviso under consideration, will anyone be heard to say that the proviso operates only locally; that it operates only as to particular persons? It reads:

And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

Clearly it operates generally throughout the country, without restriction as to persons or locality, and is necessarily general legislation. If, therefore, the rule means anything, it means that this proviso is not in order on an appropriation bill.

I think the precedents will sustain my contention in this regard. I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to some instances where the Senate has passed upon this particular question. I read from Gilfry's Precedents:

[Fifty-first Congress, first session; Journal, pp. 382, 384; June 19–20, 1890.]

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill being under consideration, an amendment was proposed, as follows, to strike out and insert:

"For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000: One assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President," and a point of order was raised that it was not in order under clause 3, Rule XVI, because it was general legislation on a general appropriation bill (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 6250), which was decided to be in order—yeas 33, nays 14. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 6290.)

Clearly it was not general legislation, because it referred only to a particular office of the Government. Again:

[Fifty-third Congress, third session; Journal, p. 103; February 9, 1895.]

The question being on the following amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, viz, on page 9, after line 8, insert the following:

"Construction of telegraph cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands: The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government."

After debate,

Mr. Blackburn, on behalf of Mr. Mills, raised a question of order, viz: First, that the amendment added a new item of appropriation not needed to carry out any existing law or treaty stipulation and not in accord with any act or resolution passed by the Senate at this session, and not moved by direction of a standing or select committee, nor proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of a department; second, that the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill and was not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill, and hence was not in order under the first and third clauses of Rule 16.

The Vice President (Mr. Stevenson) submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order? and it was determined in the affirmative; yeas 36, nays 25. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 1978–1986.)

Certainly that provision had no general operation as to all telegraph cables throughout the country, but was restricted to one particular transaction. Again:

[Forty-seventh Congress, first session; Journal, p. 911; July 3, 1882.]

The Senate, by a vote of yeas 20, nays 19, decided that an amendment to the general deficiency bill creating a board to audit the claims growing out of the illness and burial of the late President Garfield, etc., was not general legislation to a general appropriation bill. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 5580–5582.)

Evidently the provision relating only to an individual could not have been considered general legislation. Now, turning to precedents along the other line, I find the following:

[Sixtieth Congress, second session; Journal, p. 230; February 26, 1909.]

The Agricultural appropriation bill being under consideration,

Mr. Heyburn submitted the following amendment:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to eliminate from all forest reserves all sections of public lands not timbered and to restore such public lands to location and purchase as other public lands of the same class are open to location and purchase under the land laws of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to report to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1909, the quantity of nontimbered lands within all forest reserves, showing upon a map of such forest reserves the areas timbered and nontimbered."

Mr. Flint raised a point of order that the amendment was general legislation; and

The Vice President submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order? Yeas 17, nays 35; so the Senate decided the amendment not in order. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 3247–3252.)

Evidently that amendment was general legislation, because it operated throughout the country, without qualification as to individuals and without limitation as to territory.

On another occasion the Senate decided that an amendment offered by Mr. LODGE to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill to regulate the Consular Service of the United States was general legislation on a general appropriation bill. It was clearly an effort to enact general legislation which would operate without qualification or limitation throughout the country.

Again, reading further from Gilfry's Precedents:

[Fifty-third Congress, third session; Journal, pp. 107, 110, 113, 116; February 11–14, 1895.]

An amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill: "Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars, or for special facilities on fast-mail trains."

Mr. LODGE raised a question of order that the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill, and the question of order was submitted to the Senate by the Vice President (Mr. Stevenson) and was decided not in order—yeas 17, nays 39. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 2016, 2019, 2162, 2163.)

Again:

[Fifty-fourth Congress, second session; Journal, p. 160; February 27, 1897.]

On motion by Mr. Butler to further amend the Post Office bill by inserting, after the word "dollars," in lines 8 and 9, page 6, the words: "Provided, That the Postmaster General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service."

Here we find a direction to the Postmaster General almost exactly similar to the provision now under consideration.

Mr. Allison raised a question of order, viz: That the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill and was not in order under rule 16, clause 3.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Carter in the chair) sustained the point of order. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 2407–2413.)

Wherever the Senate has really drawn the line between general legislation and special legislation, in controversies like this, it has always had in mind a clear distinction between the two kinds of legislation. On certain occasions, where political exigencies determined the vote of the Senate, the Senate has held what really was general legislation to be allowable on an appropriation bill, and has permitted it to be considered, but wherever the rule has been applied in its true significance, the Senate has always refused to consider legislation of general scope and character, legislation applicable throughout the country, legislation not restricted to a few individuals or to one individual or to a particular territory, in order as an amendment to a general appropriation bill.

Senators have stated that an amendment which is a limitation on an appropriation is in order, but a limitation that is something more than a limitation and is general legislation as well is not in order, or this rule is absolutely meaningless. Almost any general legislation that is proposed in an appropriation bill is a limitation in some sense. Take the last instance which I cited:

Provided, That the Postmaster General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service.

Clearly that is a limitation on the appropriation; and yet the Senate held it to be general legislation and not in order under Rule XVI, clause 3.

Wherever the provision in question is not only a limitation upon an appropriation contained in the bill, but goes further and attempts to enact general legislation, the Senate has always rejected it wherever it has applied this rule according to its true significance. Now let us consider the merit of the question. The Senate ought not to allow legislation on this appropriation bill which constitutes one of the unfairest attacks in the history of this body upon an officer of this Government. For the exercise of a discretion vested in him by law, for the performance of a duty required by law, the Postmaster General is held up to ridicule and condemnation. For the performance of a duty, after consulting with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as is required by law; after full investigation, as is required by law; after attempting to develop this system as best he could, he is to be censured here and to be criticized in terms, if we consider some of the speeches which have been made, which for severity are perhaps unparalleled in the records of this body.

Furthermore, the adoption of this amendment would put the Government at the absolute mercy of the express companies, because when once the Postmaster General is deprived of power to adjust rates to suit the various situations throughout the country the express companies will be in position to establish rates in such way as absolutely to defeat the proper operation of the Parcel Post System.

I trust the point of order will be sustained and that the Senate will hold that the amendment is not in order under Rule XVI, clause 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the committee in order?

Mr. SHEPPARD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ASHURST, and he voted in the negative.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the question may be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who hold that the amendment is in order will, when their names are called, vote "yea." Those who believe that it is not in order will vote "nay."

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

So the Senate decided the amendment to be not in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 22, after the numerals, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That no portion of the sum so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of a greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to say a word with reference to the amendment.

For three days the Senate has been eulogizing and criticizing the action of the Postmaster General with reference to certain regulations made by him in connection with the parcel post. There can be no doubt that the Postmaster General acted well within the authority given him by Congress when he changed the rates, the zones, and the weights; and nobody, so far as I know, has questioned that authority. I can not understand why it has been deemed necessary for three days to eulogize or criticize the action of the Postmaster General in connection with this matter. That question has not been properly before the Senate.

This amendment says to the Postmaster General and to the country, "We recognize that you have not exceeded your authority. We confirm your act in abolishing zones and changing rates. The only question presented in this amendment is whether or not it is wise, whether or not it is prudent, whether or not it is safe to extend the weight limit further, so far as it relates to the parcel post." That is all there is in this suggestion.

If the Senate of the United States shall conclude that this amendment is not in order, they will, of course, so vote. I do not see how anybody can deny, however, that it is not a proposition to limit the authority of the Postmaster General to make rates or to change zones, but it simply says to him, "In our judgment"—and we ought to be permitted to exercise some judgment in this matter—"you ought not to extend the weight limit further than you have gone until we can get some information about it. We approve your act in changing zones. We approve your act in changing rates. We approve your act in extending the weight limit to 50 pounds. We do not criticize anything you have done. That is all right. We approve that. What we are insisting upon is that the Congress of the United States ought to have some authority, they ought to have some power vested in them somewhere, to put a limitation upon appropriations made by Congress for the Post Office Department or any other department of the Government. This amendment simply says that you must not use any part of this appropriation to pay for the carriage by parcel post of packages exceeding 50 pounds in weight." Have we not authority to do that?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama pardon an inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Is not that a part of the authority to make modifications which the bill establishing the parcel post provides may be exercised upon application to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. The Interstate Commerce Commission have, then, approved the change of the zones as well as the increase of the weight limit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Then are we not seeking now by legislation to interfere with the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon a matter over which we have given them jurisdiction?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In one sense, yes; that is true. I wish to remind the Senator of one fact, however, and in doing so I have no purpose whatever to criticize the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is known to the Senate that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not make any investigation, as the law requires they should do, of this question. They admit it. They came before the Post Office Committee and said they had made no investigation of it; they took the word of the Postmaster General.

In a sense that is a compliance with the law, but it is not a strict compliance with the law. It is not such a compliance with the law as that able body have always made heretofore when charged with the investigation of a subject. I am not criticizing them; but while I do not know whether the Senate will agree with me or not—and I shall not be offended if they do not—I am simply reminding the Senate of the situation that exists, as one who has given this subject some consideration from its inception until now.

I do not criticize the Postmaster General for not being able to do an impossible thing, but it is just as impossible for the Postmaster General to tell what the revenue of the Parcel Post System is as anything possibly can be. He may estimate by the increased sale of stamps in a way, but that gives no evidence of the cost of the service whatever. I do not know whether it is going to cost more than the revenues or not. It is my judgment that it will. We do know, Mr. President, from authority high in the Post Office Department—I mean the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, who has control of the Parcel Post Service—that it is costing the Government thirty-five or forty million dollars more than the revenue derived from the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this is a business matter. It is a matter which ought to receive the serious attention of the Senate. The Rural Delivery Service now, nobody will question, I assume, is costing a vast sum of money in excess of the revenue derived from its operation under the present limit—11 pounds, then 20 pounds, and now 50 pounds. Where may we expect the cost of that service to go when the limit is raised to 100 pounds? How are they going to carry it? Can they do it with their present equipment? Certainly not. The department will be required to furnish equipment sufficient to distribute all the mail that the public tenders them. Can they do it at the price they are paying? What will become of the star-route service? The expenses have to be paid from somewhere.

I am not one of those, Mr. President, who argue that the Post-Office Department should pay all its expenses. It is the only department of the Government that reaches every class of our people and almost every individual. I am not insisting that it should pay the whole of its expenses, but what I am insisting upon is that there should be no useless and unnecessary extravagance in the administration of its affairs, at least, until we know where we are going and what the result of our action is to be. Under the present arrangement if five or ten 50-pound packages are offered to a rural carrier, what is he to do? If you increase it to 100 pounds, and 5 or 10 or 20 hundred-pound packages are offered to him, what is he to do? He can not carry them. If he refuses to carry them, the department calls him up to know why he does not carry the mail that is offered him. So it is with the star-route service.

I know, Mr. President, it has been said that it is the purpose of some members of the Post Office Committee to throttle the Parcel Post Service. I never heard of that until I saw it in the newspapers. I do not believe it. I do not believe any Member of the Senate believes it. I have no personal concern about this matter nor have I any political interest in it. All that I am trying to do is, as chairman of the committee, to present a bill here that is reasonable and just and fair and that will insure the continuance of the Rural Service and the Parcel Post and all our mail services as now organized.

If the Congress of the United States has not the right to say to the Postmaster General you can not pay any part of this appropriation on a package in the parcel post exceeding 50 pounds in weight, and that is the present regulation, it seems to me our authority and our power over legislation is practically gone. This regulation of the Post Office Department, made in pursuance of law, may be said to be a law of Congress, but I maintain that the law giving this discretion and authority was not complied with. I maintain that when these changes were submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission it was their duty under the law to investigate them as they do all other great questions that come before them. Does any Senator here deny that proposition? Will any Senator here say that they did make that investigation?

I submit, Mr. President, that this is a guess, and it seems to me that Congress ought to have power lodged in it somewhere to say to the Postmaster General, or to any other head of a department, these appropriations must be expended under our direction, and if in our wisdom and our judgment we believe that a limitation ought to be put upon one of these appropriations, we have the authority to do it.

I think the amendment is clearly in order. This is all I care to say on the amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that there is this trouble about the amendment: His amendment limits the appropriation. It can not be expended for carrying in excess of 50 pounds. In other words, the railroads can not carry in excess of 50 pounds, because the appropriation is limited to paying railroads for transportation; but still the department will have the power to carry in excess of 50 pounds on star routes and in excess of 50 pounds in the Rural Delivery Service. The great danger in connection with the impairment of the service has been in the star-route service and in the Rural Delivery Service. This provision is that no part of the appropriation shall be used to pay the railroads for carrying packages exceeding 50 pounds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May not the railroads carry a thousand 50-pound packages?

Mr. SWANSON. They can; but the point I make is that the amendment does not prohibit the Postmaster General from issuing an order in the future saying that a thousand pounds can be carried on the star routes and a thousand pounds can be carried on the rural delivery routes. The appropriation limits it entirely to 50 pounds excess to the railroads. I say it is easier for the railroads to carry 50 pounds than it is to carry 50 pounds on star routes and in the Rural Delivery Service.

The amendment provides that packages in excess of 50 pounds shall not be carried on the railroads or else they will get no part of the money which is given for railway pay. The appropriation is confined to railway-mail pay entirely. So it would not appertain at all to the Rural Delivery Service and to the Star Route Service, and it would not prohibit the Postmaster General from having any amount of mail carried in those branches of the service.

This simply shows the inadvisability of legislating generally on appropriation bills. If this amendment should carry, the Postmaster General could not pay for packages exceeding 50 pounds on railroads, but still he could require 100 pounds to be carried on star routes and 100 pounds on rural-delivery routes, which are the branches of the service regarding which the most complaint has been made.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to my friend the Senator from Virginia that it also discloses the possibility of pernicious, small mistakes creeping into a matter of this kind in legislation, and it also emphasizes the advantage which must necessarily come from leaving the settlement of these details to skilled statisticians and office men.

Mr. SWANSON. It can not be disputed that this amendment will be a limitation to the railway pay, but it is no limitation on the star routes and it is no limitation on the rural delivery routes, and, consequently, it seems to me——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would the Senator from Virginia object to adding words to the amendment so as to make it apply to all rural carriers?

Mr. SWANSON. I am opposed to any amendment until the commission reports, and then I am willing to have a limitation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is on that commission?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not on the commission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator stated yesterday that he was on the commission.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I said I was on the commission that first investigated the parcel post.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not on this commission. I think the wise thing to do is to let conditions continue as they are at present until the commission, in which I have perfect confidence, makes its report.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for a rereading of the amendment in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 22, after the numerals "$35,000," insert a colon and the following proviso:

And provided further, That no portion of the sum so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. That applies to the railway mail pay. If the amendment prevails, it will simply prohibit the railroads from transporting packages in excess of 50 pounds, and it would still be possible to carry packages in excess of 50 pounds on star routes and rural delivery routes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I was very much in favor of the committee amendment, and, while this is not as desirable as the committee amendment was, it is more desirable than no limitation at all. I think it is absolutely necessary that a limitation should be put upon the weight of the packages and upon the authority of the Postmaster General. I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if, in making that statement, he admits the conclusion reached by the Senator from Virginia to be a correct interpretation of the amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think not; but if that is a correct interpretation, it is very easily remedied by adding the same amendment to the appropriations for rural carriers and for star-route service. That puts them all on the same basis. It will be perfectly easy to remedy it, so that there can not be any doubt about the interpretation of the amendment. I do not see any necessity for it, but, to remove any doubt, it can be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is very clear that if it should not reach the rural-route packages it would not accomplish the purpose which, I take it, the Senator from Alabama had in offering the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that there will be no trouble on that point. We can offer the same amendment to the other paragraphs of the bill in order to make it sure and certain.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Virginia, if I may have his attention, that the only way a rural route or a star route would have of carrying a parcel weighing more than 50 pounds would be for the Postmaster General to increase the rate. In other words, he would have to change the present prevailing rates. I do not think, as a limitation is placed on the weight of a package that should be carried on a railroad, he would be likely to increase the weights carried by parcel post or by the star route service.

Mr. SWANSON. He could very easily do it.

Mr. WEEKS. He could, but I do not think he would.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think this amendment is subject to the same objection that was made to the amendment offered by the committee. It is a mere juggling with words. The effect is the same.

While I am not going to make a point of order against the amendment, the effect of it will be to repeal a general statute which gives the Postmaster General the authority, with the advice and consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to regulate the size of the packages and fix the rate and make the zones, and so forth.

Mr. President, a good deal has been said this morning about the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in giving its approval to the order of the Postmaster General. I was present when this matter came up before the committee, and while the chairman of the commission stated that he had made no independent investigation, my recollection is that he said he did investigate and consider the figures and the facts gathered by the Post Office Department. I am very sure that that tribunal would not give its approval to any measure that did not have merit in it. I think it was a very wise safeguard, and I can not conceive of a serious mistake being made, when the law requires that the Postmaster General shall have the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission before he takes final action.

Now, I am very much opposed to interfering with this plan at all until it has been worked out and the details developed. After the Post Office Department shall have been given ample time to eliminate the inequalities, to bring order out of the disorder which must necessarily prevail in every measure of this kind in the beginning, after the department has been given a chance, then if the Congress discovers that the power vested in the department was unwisely vested and that it has been imprudently used it will be ample time for the authority to be taken from it. Certainly, we would not be justified in breaking into the game at this time.

But I know of no measure that has more universally the approval of the American people than this great plan, which brings the people living in the interior right to the door of the great houses of merchandise and facilitates commerce between the people. I think it would be unfortunate if that work should be interfered with in any way, as is proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the merits of the proposed amendment. The Senate has just decided that the committee amendment contained in the bill at the foot of page 15 is not in order. That amendment reads as follows:

And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

A point of order was raised against that amendment that it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill. I do not think it was general legislation, but the Senate so decided. The pending amendment, offered by the Senator from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, reads as follows:

And provided further, That no portion of the sum so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package, without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress of the United States.

Whatever may have been the merits of the point of order as raised against the committee amendment as printed in the bill, it strikes me that there can be no question that the point of order raised against this amendment is absolutely without any merit whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not present when the point of order was raised. May the Chair inquire what the point of order is?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, what I state now is from memory. My recollection is that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] simply said he made the point of order, without stating what it was.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume that it was the same point of order that had been raised against the former amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken. The Senator from Virginia did not raise a point of order; he raised an objection. A point of order has not been made against the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course there is no use for the Senator from Mississippi and me to dispute about it, because it is simply a matter of recollection. I am merely stating what I thought I heard.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I only make the statement because the Senator from Virginia and I discussed it, and we determined that the point of order would not be made against it. If he made the point of order I did not hear it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not privy to the counsel the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Virginia had, and it does not appear in the debate on the floor. Of course I accept his word about it. Nevertheless, I am bound to accept the evidence of my own ears, if I heard the Senator from Virginia state that he made the point of order, and that is my recollection. I may be mistaken about it; I may have misunderstood him. Therefore I ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, whether a point of order has been made against this proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not in at the time. The Reporter will read what the Senator from Virginia said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is necessary, in order to straighten out the procedure, I assume.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a point of order was made on the amendment. No ground was stated. The point of order was made and it was not withdrawn. It was made, but no grounds were urged; it was not argued.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from New Jersey confirms my impression, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, to get the question out of the way, no reason having been given for the point of order, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is a change in existing law; that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to put a portion of a letter into the RECORD which I have received while this debate has been in progress from one of the citizens of my State, who gives a point of view of the ordinary resident in a small community toward the parcel post as it has been developed. The statemnet is from R. B. Hassell, who was formerly mayor of one of the important cities of the State of Washington. I will read only a portion of his statement:

Let me now suggest why I think the Postmaster General has done me and every citizen in the country a great favor when he changed the first zone from 50 to 150 miles. Of course, it must be admitted that if he has conferred such a universal favor, he has contributed to the public benefit, and in the last analysis it is difficult to distinguish between public benefit and a benefit to the Government itself.

Let me cite my own case first as a concrete instance of the benefit: I have an orchard near Wenatchee, Wash. Under the old 50-mile zone I could only reach the uninhabited mountains to the west or the thinly peopled prairies east. I was limited to a zone whose area was approximately 7,850 square miles and which included only a few-score post offices. The enlargement of the first zone to 150 miles brought to my door two great markets, Spokane and Seattle, and many others of considerable importance to me. Do you wonder that I am grateful?

But that is only a part of the story. My zone of accessibility as a small shipper was enlarged from less than 8,000 square miles to more than 70,000. My orchard is near the boundary lines of both the Spokane and Seattle zones, so that the Government presumably does not make much profit out of my little business.

Is mine an exceptional case and am I exceptionally favored?

Take the small shippers in the thickly settled districts of the East. Take one near New York City. Under the old rule he had one great market—New York. Under the new he has Boston and Philadelphia, possibly Buffalo, and countless intermediate points besides New York. His trading facility has been increased, judging from area covered, nearly 10 times. Ought he not to be grateful? The country is full of men grateful to the Postmaster General for the change in zones.

I desire to incorporate in the RECORD as a portion of my remarks, without reading, section 8 of the Post Office appropriation act approved August 24, 1912, containing the parcel-post law as it was enacted by Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The section referred to is as follows:

SEC. 8. That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all other matter, including farm and factory products, not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

That for the purposes of this section the United States and its several Territories and possessions, excepting the Philippine Islands, shall be divided into units of area 30 minutes square, identical with a quarter of the area formed by the intersecting parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude, represented on appropriate postal maps or plans, and such units of area shall be the basis of eight postal zones, as follows:

The first zone shall include all territory within such quadrangle, in conjunction with every contiguous quadrangle, representing an area having a mean radial distance of approximately 50 miles from the center of any given unit of area.

The second zone shall include all units of area outside the first zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 150 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The third zone shall include all units of area outside the second zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 300 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The fourth zone shall include all units of area outside the third zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 600 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The fifth zone shall include all units of area outside the fourth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,000 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The sixth zone shall include all units of area outside the fifth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,400 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The seventh zone shall include all units of area outside the sixth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,800 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The eighth zone shall include all units of area outside the seventh zone.

That the rate of postage on fourth-class matter weighing not more than 4 ounces shall be 1 cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce; and on such matter in excess of 4 ounces in weight the rate shall be by the pound, as hereinafter provided, the postage in all cases to be prepaid by distinctive postage stamps affixed.

That except as provided in the next preceding paragraph postage on matter of the fourth class shall be prepaid at the following rates:

On all matter mailed at the post office from which a rural route starts, for delivery on such route, or mailed at any point on such route for delivery at any other point thereon, or at the office from which the route starts, or on any rural route starting therefrom, and on all matter mailed at a city carrier office, or at any point within its delivery limits, for delivery by carriers from that office, or at any office for local delivery, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 1 cent for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the first zone, except as provided in the next preceding paragraph, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 3 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the second zone, 6 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 4 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the third zone, 7 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 5 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the fourth zone, 8 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 6 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the fifth zone, 9 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 7 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the sixth zone, 10 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 9 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the seventh zone, 11 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 10 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the eighth zone and between the Philippine Islands and any portion of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the several Territories and possessions, 12 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 12 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

That the Postmaster General shall provide such special equipment, maps, stamps, directories, and printed instructions as may be necessary for the administration of this section; and for the purposes of this section, and to supplement existing appropriations, including the hiring of teams and drivers, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750,000.

The classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

The Postmaster General shall make provision by regulation for the indemnification of shippers, for shipment injured or lost, by insurance or otherwise, and, when desired, for the collection on delivery of the postage and price of the article shipped, fixing such charges as may be necessary to pay the cost of such additional services.

The Postmaster General may readjust the compensation of star-route and screen-wagon contractors if it should appear that as a result of the Parcel Post System the weight of the mails handled by them has been materially increased. Before such readjustment, however, a detailed account must be kept as to the amount of business handled by such star-route or screen-wagon contractors before and after this section becomes effective for such a period as to clearly demonstrate the amount of the increase and that such increase in the weight of the mails was due to the adoption of the Parcel Post System.

That the establishment of zones and postage rates of this section shall go into effect January 1, 1913.

That this act shall not in any way affect the postage rate on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants as fixed by section 482 of the Postal Laws and Regulations.

That for the purpose of a further inquiry into the subject of the general parcel post and all related subjects a joint committee of six persons (Members of Congress), three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said committee as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The committee shall report fully to Congress at the earliest date possible.

That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I also desire to have printed as a portion of my remarks, without reading, orders which have been made by the Postmaster General modifying in certain respects the rates, weights, and zone limits of the law as passed by Congress. I send them to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection they will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all other matter, including farm and factory products (and, on and after March 16, 1914, books) not now embraced by law in either the first (or) second class, or (with the exception of books, in the) third class, not exceeding (50) pounds in weight (when mailed for delivery within the first and second zones, nor exceeding 20 pounds in weight when for delivery in any of the other zones), nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery."

A. S. BURLESON,

ORDER OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

(Order No. 7723.)

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 18, 1913.

Paragraph 1 (a), section 462, Postal Laws and Regulations, edition of 1913, is amended to read as follows, effective January 1, 1914:

Sec. 462. (a) (The limit of weight of mail matter) is hereby declared to be not exceeding 4 pounds for each package thereof, except in case of single books weighing in excess of that amount; (fourth-class mail matter * * * not exceeding 50 pounds in weight when mailed for delivery within the first and second zones, and not exceeding 20 pounds in weight when for delivery within any of the other zones), and except for books and documents published or circulated by order of Congress, or printed or written official matter emanating from any of the departments of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution, or which is not declared nonmailable under the provisions of section 3893 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of July 12, 1876, or matter appertaining to lotteries, gift concerns, or fraudulent schemes or devices. (See Secs. 479 to 482.)

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we have been told at one period of the debate of the disaster which the extension of the Parcel Post System has brought upon the star-route contractors. It seems to me that that is a matter of such secondary importance in comparison with the general principles involved in this bill that it is scarcely necessary to discuss it. That is particularly true, because it might be assumed that the officials having charge of the administration of the law would take cognizance of the effect it would have upon the star-route contractors and would take such steps as would secure justice to them. I assumed that, without investigating the matter. Nevertheless, since the statements in that connection were made, in looking over some correspondence in my office, I find that that is the attitude of the Post Office Department, and that steps have already been taken to adjust the claims of the star-route contractors, considering the increased amount of mail which they carry, upon an equitable basis in the light of the new conditions. In that connection, I will read a letter addressed to me on December 19, 1913, by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, having charge of those matters, as illustrating what they are doing to prevent injustice to the star-route contractors. He says:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 19, 1913.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR POINDEXTER: I am in receipt of your letter of the 16th instant transmitting a communication from Mr. E. E. North, of Elkpark, Wash., with regard to the burdens imposed upon the contractor on star route No. 71327, Taholah to Clearwater, because of the curtailment of his route to omit Elkpark, necessitating a pro rata deduction from his pay, and also because of the transportation of the parcel-post mail.

In reply, I beg to advise you that, in addition to the allowance of additional pay made to the contractor because of the increased weight of mail carried as a result of the Parcel Post System, such increase in pay having taken effect January 1, 1913, if it should be found, as a result of the weighing of the mails during October and November of this year that there has been a further material increase in the weight of mail carried as a result of the increase in the weight limit of parcel-post packages from 11 to 20 pounds in the first and second zones, the contractor will be made a further allowance of additional pay, to be effective August 15, 1913.

The post office at Elkpark having been reestablished, it has been decided to reextend the route to that place, and the contractor will be allowed pro rata additional pay because of such extension, which will relieve him of the burdens imposed by reason of the curtailment of the route.

Sincerely, yours,

JAS. I. BLAKSLEE,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Two main objections were urged with a great deal of force by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] against the Parcel Post System as it has been enlarged and extended by the Postmaster General. One of them was that there was a discrimination between different communities and different shippers in that a man in Kansas City, we will say, could ship his produce 150 miles for the same rate that a shipper in Salina, Kans., could ship his produce 10 miles, or approximately that. Mr. President, the greatest discriminations, if those just mentioned be considered discriminations at all—and I do not consider them so, because they are uniform within the area, no man being charged more than another—but the greatest real discriminations arise more prominently out of the law as it was passed by Congress than they do out of any changes in zones, weights, or rates made by the Postmaster General. A man living at the radial limit of a zone of 150 miles is charged a certain rate; his neighbor, who may live 100 yards from him but beyond the limitation of that zone, is charged an additional rate, not under any order made by the Postmaster General, but under the law enacted by Congress; yet the Senator from Kansas insists that Congress shall have the exclusive function of making these rates. It is impossible in any zone system, as the Senator from Kansas has admitted, to avoid that sort of discrimination.

The other great objection which the Senator urged was that the Postmaster General, in his administration of the parcel post, if he gets any business at all on the long haul, charges higher rates on these long hauls than the express companies charge, and the Senator claimed that under that condition the business goes to the express companies; but the Senator has already admitted in his argument—and, of course, it is perfectly patent to everyone—that that condition is not due to any discretion vested in the Postmaster General which is sought to be limited by this amendment.

I have in my hand a table of rates as they were fixed under the law as it passed Congress and as they have been readjusted by the Postmaster General, and I find that in every zone, without exception, on an 11-pound parcel the rates fixed by Congress were much higher than those charged by the express companies. If the system had not been improved by the Postmaster General it would have had but little business and would have been a parcel post in name only. The Postmaster General has reduced the rates in the first, second, and third zones so as to be able to compete with the express companies in the carriage of parcels of this size in those zones. He has also reduced the rates fixed by Congress in the fourth, fifth, and sixth zones, though they are still higher than the express rates, but if he pursues the same course which he has begun it is natural to suppose that he will from time to time reduce the rates in the other zones, carrying out the policy he has begun, so as to get the business which now goes to the express companies, to secure revenue for the Government, and to render service to the people. So, if he is left with the same discretion which the Senator from Kansas seeks to deprive him of, he will by the exercise of this very power remove one of the main objections the Senator from Kansas urges against such power and against the parcel-post system as it is now constituted. Unless the Postmaster General is allowed that discretion, unless he has the power to further reduce these high rates which the Senator from Kansas would now fix in a rigid act of Congress if he had his way in passing the proposed amendment, the parcel post can not possibly get any of the business in the longer hauls, because it can not compete with the express companies.

The Senator from Kansas says that under no circumstance, nor under any set of rates, can the Government compete with the express companies, because the Government has not the same equipment, that it has not the same facilities.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator, by stating a part of what I said, conveys an entirely erroneous impression.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall be very glad if the Senator from Kansas will correct me.

Mr. BRISTOW. I said competition was impossible so long as the Government paid so much more to the railroads for handling the packages, and I say that so long as the Government pays so much more to the railroads for transporting its tonnage than the express companies pay it is impossible for the Government to compete with them successfully without a loss, because its expenditure is so much more than theirs for transportation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not necessary, Mr. President, that the Government should continue to pay more. My understanding——

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator yield to me a moment more?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask the Senator to yield because I do not want him to put me in a false position. The Senator knows that I have said time and again that I think the Government is paying the railroads entirely too much for transporting its parcel-post matter. The Senator knows that that has been my position from the beginning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; but it is not necessary, Mr. President, that we should abandon the benefits of the parcel post or the effort to perfect the system because we are now paying too much to the railroads. It is within the jurisdiction of Congress to remedy that condition; and it would be a much more proper and desirable point of attack upon the difficulties and the inequalities of the system as it now exists to remedy what the Senator from Kansas now claims are the exorbitant rates paid to the railroads for carrying this business than to undertake to throttle the development and expansion of the business itself.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I call the Senator's attention to an amendment which I have offered to the bill, which is printed and lying on his desk, which seeks to accomplish exactly what he suggests; which amendment, if the Senate adopts it, will materially reduce the compensation which the department is paying to the railroads and will fix a schedule of rates which will be less than those of Mr. Burleson, and which will yield a profit because of the reduced transportation rates which the Government will have to pay under the amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] will not base any of their conclusions in regard to the parcel post on the probability of material reductions in the pay of the railroads for transporting the mail. The commission has been studying this question for two years, and will in the near future be ready to report. The experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission have testified that, even before the introduction of the parcel-post system, the amount of pay which the railroads were receiving was less than they should receive, and the railroads are claiming that, on account of the carrying of the parcel-post business, they are incurring an expenditure of nearly $15,000,000 more than they would if they were paid a suitable rate—that is, a rate which would compare with what they are receiving from the express business and from other shippers of merchandise.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendment does not seek to disturb at present the railway mail pay for carrying the mail as it has been carried heretofore; but it does propose that express matter which is freight shall be carried on a different basis, and that the railroads shall receive from the department one-half of the gross postage that is paid for the handling of parcel-post matter. They therefore will get exactly what they get from the express companies, and they will get paid for what they haul.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not at this time see any objection to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, if it should be adopted, would remove an objection which he urges against the extension of the Parcel Post System and make it possible for the Government to compete with the express companies.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator, if he will pardon me for again interrupting him, that if that amendment relating to railway mail pay be adopted I shall then propose a schedule of parcel-post rates that are lower than Mr. Burleson's estimates, and I think are organized upon an absolutely equitable basis. That schedule is found on page 4234 of the RECORD of this morning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, Mr. President, the rates of which the Senator from Kansas has complained, made by the Postmaster General, he claims are already too low in some of the zones, as to some shippers, because, he says, they are less than the cost of the service. I do not suppose that the rates which he proposes are less than those.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; the rates in the second and third zones are increased over those of Mr. Burleson; in the fifth zone they are reduced; and in one zone they are exactly the same; but the average is a very material reduction, as I shall explain when the amendment is considered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think that anything the Senator has proposed, Mr. President, indicates that the system of rates incorporated in the amendment which he has offered, even upon the information which he, with all the time that he has given to the matter, has been able to obtain, would be preferable in any way, either so far as the profit to the Government is concerned or a reasonable rate to the shippers, to rates which are worked out by experts who are permanently connected with this business and who are adapting the rates to changing conditions from time to time, if they are allowed this vital principle of discretion in readjusting rates after experience, observation, study, and a census of the parcel-post business.

The Senator from Kansas goes to the extent, if I understood him correctly on yesterday, of claiming that Congress ought to fix railroad rates. I think he said that in answer to a question asked him. Of course, if he takes that position, if he believes that a numerous legislative body, with the multitudinous interests which its members are compelled to deal with is more fitted to make schedules of rates, classifications of freight, zones of distance, and limitations of weight than a body whose entire time is occupied with the study and the administration of those special questions, there is such a radical difference between us that there is no possibility of our agreeing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire again to correct him. The Senator from Kansas never made any such statement at all as the Senator from Washington is attributing to him, or anything that approaches it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will leave the matter to be determined upon the RECORD.

Mr. BRISTOW. All right; I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was a colloquy between the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in which he made the statement to which I have referred. He may have qualified it afterwards, but I do not think he did. If he did, the RECORD will show that he did.

The argument which is made against discretion being vested in the Postmaster General in fixing these rates defeats itself. It has gone to such a great length, and so many objections are contrived against such authority, particularly by the Senator from Kansas, that one part of the argument contradicts and defeats the other, as opposite elements in an equation, which are eliminated by the balance which is struck between them.

The Senator says that the Postmaster General can not be depended upon to study this question and to fix these rates. He says in the course of his remarks that the Postmaster General does not do so, but that it is done by men in the employ of the Post Office Department. Of course, that is true; it is necessarily true; but in pursuing the same argument, in another portion, the Senator from Kansas urges that this discretion ought not to be vested in the Postmaster General because he has so many postmasters to appoint that he is distracted by political quarrels. The one statement contradicts the other. The Postmaster General is not personally making these rates. He may be exercising a close supervision over them, but he has experts, who are permanent employees in the office, and who, in the very nature of things, are better qualified to advise the administrative officer of the Government who has control of this matter than any committee of Congress or Congress itself could possibly be.

There have been a great many exchanges of compliments in the course of this debate between Senators as to the knowledge which they had on the subject and in regard to the Postmaster General as to the friendliness Senators felt toward him. Some seem to have about the same attitude toward the Postmaster General which I think the Aztecs had toward some of their sacrificial victims. They surrounded them with good treatment and kindness, showered them with attentions, fed them upon the luxuries of the land, garlanded them with flowers, and then put them upon the altar and sacrificed them in a religious ritual. So the hierarchy of the Post Office Committee of the Senate protest their regard and friendship and admiration for the Postmaster General, and then they proceed to sacrifice him to the claim that they, and not he, should determine the details of the administration of the parcel post. I imagine that the Postmaster General would rather dispense with the compliments and declarations of friendship and regard, and, interested as he must be in the service of the people and the great office which he holds, be allowed to continue in the work which he has commenced to put into operation and develop the parcel post into a working system, into a useful, practical, cheaper, and uniform transportation system for the benefit of the people of this country.

The limitation which is included in the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] as to weight involves the same principle as that contained in the amendment which has been held out of order by the Senate. A point of order against the latter amendment, it is true, has been overruled, but upon the merits of the question the principle is the same, although a great point has been gained in the defeat of the previous amendment, the pending amendment not going so far.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on yesterday said that if we were going to carry freight, we ought to carry it as freight, and not as mail, and that we ought to pay rates upon it as freight and not as first-class mail. Well, Mr. President, I do not know whether we can infer from that that the Senator from Massachusetts is opposed to or in favor of carrying what he is pleased to term "freight" by the Government. I infer that he is not in favor of it, but the argument which he makes affords no ground upon which the matter of administering the law should be fixed in Congress itself. If we are going to carry heavy packages, the question still remains as to the manner in which they are to be carried; and some tribunal, some official of the Government, must provide the cars or make arrangements with the railroad companies for the cars, determine what sort of trains they are to be carried on, whether they are to go on passenger trains or whether special trains, carrying postal express, as it is called in Europe, are to be provided. Those are mere details of administration, and the objection, instead of affording a reason for limiting either the parcel-post system itself or the administrative authority of the Post Office Department, is an argument, in my judgment, in favor of extending both.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we ought not to pay the railroad companies first-class rates for carrying fourth-class matter; but because Congress has fixed a schedule allowing first-class rates to the railroads for carrying fourth-class matter is a very poor reason why we should strike down and palsy the hands of the Postmaster General, who is proceeding to readjust and remedy that discrepancy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], on which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has demanded the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. THOMPSON. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], on which the Senator from Mississippi has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the numerals, on page 15, line 22, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That no portion of the sum so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of a greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. As I know that he would vote as I shall vote on this question, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. As he would vote the same way I shall vote, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], but by agreement that pair does not extend to votes on this bill. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I repeat my statement in regard to my pair and make the same transfer that I announced before and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. THORNTON'S name was called). The senior Senator from Louisiana is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and therefore withhold my vote. He is unavoidably absent for the day. I make this statement to stand for the day.

Mr. LIPPITT. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to my colleague [Mr. COLT] and will vote. I vote "yea."

So Mr. BANKHEAD'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to read a very few lines from page 4174 of the RECORD of February 25, in support of my quotation from the remarks of the Senator from Kansas:

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that is equitable when you get into big packages. I agree with the Senator on that point exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. The point on which I can not agree with the Senator is that he proposes now to make a law of the act of the Postmaster General which has brought about this very difficulty.

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it should be plain to anyone that Congress, the House and the Senate, as a practical proposition can not fix the rates for the payment of the transportation of merchandise.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it has got to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe that it can.

Mr. BRISTOW. It must do it. We might just as well undertake it. We have authority to do it, technically speaking. There is, perhaps, not as much reason for it, but the same theory would apply as in fixing freight rates. I think that ought to have been done in the beginning.

Mr. NORRIS. By Congress?

Mr. BRISTOW. Surely.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will continue to read. If he will read on, he will find——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said in my original statement that the Senator had qualified that statement later. I will read as the Senator suggests, however.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator does not desire to read further, if he will pass the RECORD to me I desire to read it myself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will let the Senator read it.

Mr. BRISTOW. All right; I shall be very glad to do so. [Reading:]

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, then I do not believe the Senator and myself can get together on any proposition of that kind, because I believe that it is an impracticable proposition for the House of Representatives, with over 400 Members, and the Senate, with nearly 100, to fix rates. The Senator will find, I believe, that they would never fix them and fix them right. It would be a job that they never could get through with.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator misunderstands me. I would not say that Congress ought to go through all the detailed service of the United States and fix the individual rates, but I do say that originally there should have been some law which prescribed the way in which the rates should be fixed, and not on the ipse dixit of selfish men, who seek to exploit one community to the detriment of another.

It is very clear there that the Senator from Kansas did not say that Congress should fix the detailed rates.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in my judgment, it has developed in this debate that there ought to be some corrections made of one or two of the evils that have come about in the administration of the parcel post under the law as it now exists. I wish to offer at this point an amendment that I think will meet the difficulty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that amendments are not in order until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. Was that agreement made at the beginning? I was not aware of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the rule of the Senate. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning at the top of page 16, and read to line 9, on page 18.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I find there is a marked difference in the prints of the bill. I have one print in my hand where the matter I am about to mention appears on page 18, and another where it appears on page 17.

On page 18, as the bill comes from the committee, there are stricken out, in line 9, the words "post-office clerk, or special delivery messenger." I should like to move to reinstate the words "post-office clerk, or special delivery messenger," and to add the words "or laborer."

I can see no reason why a post-office clerk or special-delivery messenger, a boy who rides on his bicycle to deliver a message, and who may be run over by an automobile or otherwise, should not be classed among those whose families shall receive recompense in case of death. I wish also to include the word "laborer." So I move to amend, in line 9, page 18, by restoring the words that are stricken out, "post-office clerk, or special-delivery messenger," and by inserting the further words "or laborer."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, for the benefit of the Senator from New Jersey, that this is the Railway Mail Service. There are no messengers riding on bicycles in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not care whether it be on bicycles or railroad trains; if he is a special-delivery messenger——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from New Jersey is out of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall have to submit to the ruling, but I think it is infinitely ungenerous and unfair to the unfortunate laborer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state to the Senator from New Jersey that the committee proposes an amendment. If the amendment is not agreed to, the words which the Senator from New Jersey wants to put in will be left in the bill. After all committee amendments are disposed of, if the amendment is agreed to, and these words are stricken out, then the Senator from New Jersey——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask the chairman of the committee to accept those words?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator from New Jersey will give his attention for a moment, I desire to say that post-office clerks are included here. We struck out this language because the department requested it, on the ground that these other people were not regular employees of the department. The amendment is one prepared by the Post Office Department.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will simply say that it is a manifest injustice to them; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 18, line 9, after the words "letter carrier," to strike out "post-office clerk, or special-delivery messenger" and insert "and assistant postmasters, supervisory officials, special clerks, clerks, and employees in post offices of the first and second classes who are appointed at a fixed salary," so as to make the paragraph read:

That hereafter the Postmaster General shall have authority to employ acting employees in place of all employees or substitutes hereinafter mentioned who are injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of the employee's salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding 12 months additional, and the Postmaster General is authorized to pay the sum of $2,000, which shall be exempt from payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives, for the benefit of wife, children, or dependent relatives, of any railway postal clerk, substitute railway postal clerk, supervisory official of the Railway Mail Service, post-office inspector, letter carrier in the City Delivery Service, rural letter carrier, and assistant postmasters, supervisory officials, special clerks, clerks, and employees in post offices of the first and second classes who are appointed at a fixed salary who shall be killed while on duty, or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence. To enable the Postmaster General to carry out the provisions of the above, $134,500.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this rule applies to other services than the Postal Service?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It seems to me there is a discrimination here in favor of the Postal Service. So far as I know, it has not been the custom of the Government or of Congress to grant compensation of this sort except in cases where the employees were engaged in hazardous service.

Where a railway mail clerk is injured or killed in the performance of his duty, I think it is quite right that some provision of this sort should be made; but if an assistant postmaster or a clerk in an ordinary post office is injured during the hours he is supposed to be on duty, probably in an accident entirely disconnected from his service, I do not know why we should fix a compensation here for injuries of that sort.

It occurs to me that we are entering upon a pretty wide field. If a clerk in a post office receives a compensation of this sort, surely there is an equal reason for including in this category a clerk in the War Department or a clerk in a land office or a clerk elsewhere performing similar duties with which no extra hazard is connected.

I think the committee ought to hesitate before extending to all parts of the service what was originally intended to cover the extra-hazardous part of the service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree with the Senator when he says that this provision of law ought to be extended to all the departments equally with the Post Office Department. Unfortunately, however, the Post Office Committee could not deal with any other department than the Post Office Department. That is the reason why the extension has been made to which the Senator alludes, including in this provision employees who heretofore have not been included.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can the Senator give the reason that impelled the Post Office Committee to say that a man who might be injured in some way entirely unconnected with his employment should receive compensation from the Government—why the Government, in other words, should become an insurer of the life or limb of an employee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the proviso at the end of this paragraph:

Provided, That no compensation shall be paid any such employee for any injury occasioned by his own negligence.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course; that goes without saying. Suppose, however, the assistant postmaster or a clerk in the post office here in Washington should be injured, not through his own negligence, but in the ordinary course of his duty, while he was behind the counter or engaged otherwise?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this provision requires that the injury must be received while on duty.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, while on duty; that is, during the hours for which he is employed; but from the time he enters upon his employment in the morning until he leaves at night the Government becomes an insurer of his life and limb.

It seems to me that is a pretty dangerous proposition to enter upon. Of course, we have the utmost sympathy for people who are injured; but this is something which I have never known before. It seems to me an entirely new departure.

If we enter upon this field, does not the committee see where we are bound to land? We become an insurer for the life, for the limb, for all the injuries of everybody connected with the public service in whatever capacity. We give no advantage at all of this insurance to the man for whom it was originally intended—that is, the man who is subject to railway accidents or the accidents peculiar to a hazardous or an extrahazardous occupation. We become an absolute insurer of the life and the limb of every employee of the Government, wherever he may be and under whatever circumstances, during the hours he devotes to the Government service. We become an insurer of every clerk in the Post Office Department, of everybody occupied in the Department of the Interior, of everybody in the War Department, and in the Navy Department, no matter what his occupation may be. We become an insurer of all of them during their office hours.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I take it that the Senator from Wyoming is in favor of payment to the employee who is injured while in the performance of his duty?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If it is a hazardous duty; yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How would the Senator make it clear to bring that about?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would strike out the names of any who were not engaged in a hazardous occupation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. He must be in the performance of his official duty when the accident occurs.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is very true, but he may be in the performance of his official duty and still have no hazard that the Government ought to protect. The Senator from Mississippi will see that there is a vast difference between the man who is in a railway mail car on a line of road where an accident is liable to happen to him at any time, as it often does happen, which can not be guarded against. It comes under the line of hazardous employment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, a man could not in the nature of things suffer an accident of that kind in the performance of his duty unless there was some hazard, and some accident occurred for which he is not responsible.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, he is not responsible for it. He might be working in a country post office and the ceiling might drop and injure him.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is a very remote contingency.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is the very contingency that is provided for in this amendment. Any accident that happens anywhere during the time that he is on duty is covered by this language.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I apprehend the Senator does not expect very much money to go out of the Treasury in cases of that kind.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator realized the time the Committee on Claims of this body has worked over bills for the relief of people who have been injured in just that way he would understand something about it. What I started to say is, of course, if we are going to enter upon a proposition of that sort I have no earthly objection to it, if that is the theory upon which we want to go, but it must follow of right that if we extend this insurance to the post-office employees we must extend it to the employees of every other branch of the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to say to the Senator from Wyoming that the main purpose of the law as it was viewed by the committee is that this provision does not apply to any except those who are engaged in hazardous employment. It does not include, as I understand, the general employees of the Post Office Department except those specified in the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why should a clerk in a first or second class post office receive the additional compensation, if you choose to call it that, which does not apply to a clerk who performs identical duties in its general effect, in any other branch of the Government service.

As this provision was originally written into the Post Office appropriation bill, it was to protect those men who could not protect themselves. It was to protect those men who go upon our steam railways and in the railway postal cars, where the whole service, so far as that train is concerned, is wiped out by an accident and where no forethought of theirs could have prevented the injury. But it never was thought until this time to extend it to ordinary civilian employees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only excuse I have to offer is that this provision, except as to the amendment, came over from the House, and the Postmaster General strongly urged that this addition be made to it. I really do not know whether it should be done or not, but it was done at his earnest solicitation. When we receive a recommendation of that kind from the department in what is rather a small matter, we are always inclined to oblige the Postmaster General.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to oblige the Postmaster General if we would not be compelled to oblige all the other Cabinet officers and heads of bureaus who desire this same matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, on page 19, the last clause read being as follows:

For rent, light, heat, fuel, telegraph, miscellaneous and office expenses, schedules of mail trains, telephone service, and badges for railway postal clerks, including rental of offices for division headquarters, and chief clerk, Railway Mail Service, in Washington, D. C., and rental of space for terminal railway post offices for the distribution of mails when the furnishing of space for such distribution can not under the Postal Laws and Regulations properly be required of railroad companies without additional compensation, and for equipment and miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to terminal railway post offices, $490,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to offer an amendment at this point. In line 11, I move to strike out "$490,000" and in lieu to insert "$770,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 8, on page 21.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 8, insert the following paragraph:

For two delegates to the International Postal Union at Madrid, fiscal year 1915, to be appointed by the Postmaster General from the Post Office Department, $5,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the chairman if the committee passed upon this amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It did not, I am sorry to say. This matter came up from the Postmaster General after the bill had been reported, and I have not had an opportunity to submit it to the committee; but I will state the facts: An appropriation has heretofore been carried for the purpose of paying the expenses of two delegates to the International Postal Union. The last appropriation we did not use, because the delegates did not go; but the Postmaster General now thinks it is decidedly important that the United States should be represented in the coming convention or else it will be dropped or excluded from the Postal Union, which has been organized with reference to postal matters in all the countries of the world.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a letter here, if the Senator desires to have it read.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire if the chairman should not wait until the committee amendments are disposed of? I would like to inquire more fully into this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I am willing to withdraw the amendment until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to think about the amendment a while.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 6, to insert:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the service of the Postal Savings System, office of the director, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 8, to strike out:

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM.

For blank books, forms, pamphlets, rubber stamps, canceling devices, and postal savings certificates for use in depository offices and banks, postal savings cards and stamps, official postage and stamped envelopes for use in lieu of penalty or franked envelopes, in the transmittal of free mail, authorized by act of June 25, 1910, including those used in the central office, $100,000.

And, on page 23, after line 6, to insert:

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM.

For blank books, forms, pamphlets, rubber stamps, canceling devices, and postal savings certificates for use in depository offices and banks, postal savings cards and stamps, official postage and stamped envelopes for use in lieu of penalty or franked envelopes, in the transmittal of free mail, authorized by act of June 25, 1910, including those used in the central office, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 14, after the word "service," to strike out "sanitary towels, brooms, mops," so as to make the clause read:

For miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second class (except labor incident to cleaning post offices, telephone rental, water rental, laundering and tower service, drayage, and miscellaneous service items), $125,000, of which $25,000 may be used for the purchase of post-office equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 4, after the word "thereto," to strike out "$463,000" and insert "$363,000," so as to read:

For mail bags, metal for mail-bag attachments, cord fasteners, label cases, and material necessary for manufacture and repairing of equipment, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto, $363,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 7 on page 27.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment to come in at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 7, insert after the word "service" the following proviso:

And provided further, That no portion of the sum so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, a word of explanation. The purpose of this amendment is simply to limit the weight of parcel-post matter carried by the star-route service to 50 pounds.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At what point in the bill is the amendment offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On page 27, line 7.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is the amendment offered by the committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have offered it. It is along the line of the amendment the committee did offer.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is along the line of the amendment that has been voted down.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; it is along that line. I am willing to withdraw it and offer it as an individual amendment if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not insist upon it at all. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, just one more word. The only purpose of the amendment, as I have stated, is to limit the weight to 50 pounds in any one package carried by the star-route service. If the Senate in their wisdom think that the men in the star-route service, who carry the mails over the mountains on horseback and otherwise, ought not to have some limitation upon the burden they are carrying, the Senate will so vote.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Or else, if the Senator will permit me, there should be some provision in the bill to compensate those men and not hold them down to the contracts that they were forced to make.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, but the committee have no means of ascertaining what the amount is. There is no estimate of the amount. We simply thought, as a matter of precaution and justice, that these star-route contractors ought not to have imposed upon them by the Government the duty of carrying an immense amount of mail that they get no pay for and that they could not carry if it was offered to them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In that I am in hearty sympathy, because people can not perform the service unless additional compensation is given them. They can not carry a 50-pound package on many star routes unless the Postmaster General has the power to fix a rate as he pleases and any weight he chooses in compensation for the service. If that is done, the star-route contractor will have no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That can not be done in this bill. This proviso only extends to the life of this particular bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the bill make provision anywhere for giving the Postmaster General discretion in the matter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the bill makes no provision for an increase of pay on a contract that has been entered into by the star-route people. There is a general law which authorizes the Postmaster General to adjust these matters, but there is no appropriation carried in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senate on two or more occasions has expressed its disapproval of an amendment of this character. I do not see any necessity for bringing it up at this time. If the department makes arrangements to give to the people living along the rural routes an opportunity to enjoy the facilities afforded by the Parcel Post System, they ought to be permitted to have it. I do not think it is fair to discriminate against them in this way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have an amendment, similar to that, which I intend to offer to the rural-carrier provision of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, I do not know what that amendment is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is exactly like this amendment, only it is applied to the appropriation for the rural service. There is no difference at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I take it that an intelligent Postmaster General, with the careful and prudent counsel he has, is not going to prescribe any rule that can not be carried out. He is not going to inaugurate a system which can not be executed without injury to the rural carriers or anybody else. He is not going to do an injustice.

I submit, Mr. President, this matter has been thrashed over here repeatedly, and I see no necessity for bringing it up at this time. I am very much opposed to it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that if the Parcel Post System is defective it ought to be remedied. I do not believe it can be done in this way. This amendment is clearly legislation. I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to say a word upon the merits of the amendment and to point out that the Postmaster General has discretion, as the law is now, to withhold the extension of the parcel post from such star routes as may be advisable. I do not know that the Parcel Post Service has been extended to all the star routes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator know that there has been any exception of the star route?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not. I have not inquired into that phase of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The parcel post, I understand, reaches from one side of the country to the other and applies to all the service of the Post Office Department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very true. The difficulties which contractors on the star routes labor under from the increase in the weight of the mail owing to the Parcel Post Service is one of the best arguments, in my judgment, for leaving with the Postmaster General a discretion to remedy that situation. It is impossible for Congress to determine where a star route needs relief and where a star route does not need relief. The Postmaster General withholds second-class mail from certain star routes. I know of star routes which carry only letters. He has discretion to withhold third-class mail from certain routes. He has discretion, as a matter of fact, to abolish a route altogether and to establish routes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He has discretion to abolish the whole system as far as that is concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Alabama has never objected to the discretion being vested in the Postmaster General which enables him to establish post offices.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no; and I do not object to the discretion vested in the Postmaster General to change rates and zones. I have said that repeatedly and emphatically. I have no complaint to make on that score at all. He has done it and we have approved it. We have said, "Well done, Mr. Postmaster General."

All I want to do here is that the Senate shall say whether they are willing to put in any sort of limitation on weights that are required to be carried on star routes. The star-route carriers are carrying the mails now, as nearly everybody knows, because of competitive bids, at a low rate. Nearly all of it is carried on horses or burros or mules or in carts or something of that sort. If the Senate wants to declare to those people that we expect them to carry everything that is tendered to them—that if a parcel post comes along with a stove or any other thing that persons may be inclined to have, they must take it on their pony and deliver it to the point of destination—the Senate has an opportunity.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would be opposed, just as much as the Senator from Alabama, to passing any such law as that. In fact, that is the very thing, if the Senator will pardon me, that I am attempting to oppose, the fixing of a hard and fast detail by statute depriving the administrative officials of the Post Office Department of discretion to remedy such matters.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This does not prevent the Postmaster General from reducing the weight of packages carried by the star routes to 20 pounds or 11 pounds, if he wants to do so in his discretion. It just simply says, "We do not think you ought to extend it beyond 50 pounds." He has discretion to say, "On the star route the weight of the parcel-post package shall be 11 pounds, or that the star-route parcel post shall be 20 pounds," or he can say it shall be 50 pounds. What I am asking the Senate to do is to say to the Postmaster General most respectfully, "Mr. Postmaster General, we do not think you ought to insist upon increasing these rates beyond the 50-pound limit." That is all there is in the amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey. The Senator from Alabama is one of the most reasonable Senators and best natured there is in this body.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He accepts with the greatest good grace and good feeling any action which the Senate takes upon matters which he proposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely. I have no quarrel with the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator a question, he being so reasonable. If the Postmaster General can be trusted with the authority and the discretion to establish star routes, determine where they shall be, what line they shall go over, to establish rural free delivery routes or to abolish them, to establish post offices or to abolish post offices, does not the Senator think he can also be trusted with the discretion of determining what star routes shall carry parcel-post matter, and what weights of parcel post shall go over star routes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not entirely prepared to agree with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not ask the Senator to agree with me, but to state his opinion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I said distinctly that I do not think the Postmaster General or anybody else ought to be permitted to increase the weights of the parcel post to be carried by the star-route service beyond 50 pounds until some provision has been made somehow, somewhere, to compensate these people and put them in a position to keep their contracts and transport the mail that is tendered to them over the star routes. There is nothing here to do that; there could not be anything in this bill to do that. Why not just drive a peg at 50 pounds and say, "This is the limit until some other arrangement is made"?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am opposed to driving pegs into this system; we do not want any pegs in it; we want a good working machine, one well oiled and easily workable. The Senator says we are not doing anything in this bill to compensate star-route contractors for the extra weight they have to carry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, if the Senator please. I want to point out that it is not necessary to do anything in this bill, but that provisions have already been made for compensating the star-route contractors for the extra weight which they have to carry.

I read a letter into the RECORD a few moments ago, which indicates that from time to time, as the weights increase on the several star routes through the establishment of the parcel post on them, the Post Office Department is keeping a careful census of it and is making an adjustment of the compensation to the contractors commensurate with the increase in the business, even so far as the current contracts are concerned. So, of course, as to future contracts, they will take into consideration the increased business. I say the Senator would be defeating his own purpose if he should succeed in his attempt to limit the discretion of the Postmaster General in adjusting these matters. There may be abuses in some instances. I know of one case where there is a post office on the international boundary line between New York and Ontario, with a Dominion post office in one end of a building and a United States post office in the other end of the building. A letter was mailed on the Canadian side, and it traveled 305 miles before it came into the American post office in the same building. Of course that is absurd; that is ridiculous.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose it had been a 50-pound package?

Mr. POINDEXTER. But because there is an instance of that kind, it has never been proposed, and even the Senator from Alabama, with all of his friendly jealousy of the discretion of the Postmaster General would not propose, to deprive the Postmaster General of the authority to fix postal routes and post offices because there may be an abuse here and there.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I can not understand the existing tender solicitude for these star-route contractors. I can recall very well in my memory when a star-route contractor was about the most unsavory thing that could be mentioned in connection with the Government service in this country. Star-route contractors then were held up to scorn as being unholy and unclean, but to-day the solicitude is for the star-route contractor. I do not hear expressed any worry or comment as to the thousands of times when they have not been burdened with mail, when they have had fat and rich contracts out of the people's pockets; there is no worry about that, but all the solicitude to-day seems to be about this handful of star-route contractors.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. One moment, sir. It may be that we have grown a better race of contractors in this year of our Lord 1914 than we had in 1863, 1865, 1867, and 1870, but I think they are very much the same kind of animals. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that I think he would withdraw those remarks if he understood the facts.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I think that I do understand the facts.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will yield to me, I will undertake to convince him that he does not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. In the days of the star-route scandals, to which the Senator from New Jersey is referring, it was the practice for one man to take contracts, say, for a thousand, or it may have been for more, star routes, and then sublet them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. During the McKinley administration that was changed, so that now any man who is a star-route contractor must live on the route. Star-route contractors are citizens of the various communities which they serve, and they are as good men as are the rural carriers or any other class of citizens.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not denying that.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know the Senator is not; but I assert they are honest men who are working for their living.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am making no charge against the contractors of to-day. I simply say that the designation "star-route contractor" was obnoxious to all fair men; and, unfortunately, the Senator's party reaped the obloquy that came with the service at that time. I believe star-route contractors are entitled to just and fair remuneration and compensation; and, as has been stated by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the department is now making all arrangements and collecting data in order that they may be fully and justly recompensed. I know the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. BANKHEAD] is as patriotic as any man in this body and is animated by the most lofty hopes, purposes, and desires to bring about the best service to our country; but, I fear, if we continually drive pegs into this system we shall cripple that which has been a blessing to the whole country and which is approved by almost everybody from one end of the land to the other.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from New Jersey know how many of these star-route contractors there are?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I can not tell the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me say to the Senator that there are several thousand of them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought there were fully that many.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are several thousand men who have taken these contracts. They are, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has stated, citizens of the particular localities in which they are engaged. They are in the main men of small means; they are not rich contractors; they have a few head of horses and, in some instances, a stage coach or a wagon or two. They are in a situation where the burden that has been already imposed upon them is quite likely to ruin them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But they are all anxious——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Wait a moment. The Senator from New Jersey says that the Postmaster General in his own time will adjust all that; but in the meantime the contractors are ruined, and they are liable on their bonds to action by the Government.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But the remarkable fact is that these men are seeking these contracts eternally, and all the time asking for renewals.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are not seeking these contracts.

Mr. LODGE. They are trying to get out of them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Who?

Mr. LODGE. Nearly all of them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That statement is very general.

Mr. LODGE. A case was cited by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] the other day, down in New Mexico.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not recall the statement of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that the star-route contractors are not seeking these contracts.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The department seems to have no trouble in placing the contracts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator bear with me until I can make my statement to him?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I repeat these men are not seeking these contracts. They have contracts of an entirely different character. They have taken contracts from the Government of the United States for certain sums of money to carry the mail that may be brought to them; but the Postmaster General by his order has imposed upon them a burden far greater than any of them contemplated in the beginning. They are compelled by that order of the Postmaster General to carry tons of ore out of mining camps at the rate of 54 cents for 50 pounds, carrying it sometimes for 50 or 75 miles, when it would be an utter impossibility to get an ordinary freight wagon to carry the ore for that sum of money. Does the Senator from New Jersey think it is fair to these contractors to compel them to do that? If the Government shall finally compensate them for it, does the Senator from New Jersey think it a wise policy upon the part of the Government to compel the carrying of ore out of mining camps, the carrying of bedding, and the carrying of stoves, everything of that kind, at a rate of about a cent a pound, when it costs by ordinary freight 4 or 5 cents a pound?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, in answer to that question, I will say as to the carrying of bedding, yes; but as to the more aggravated instance, as was suggested by the Senator from Kansas yesterday, of carrying steam shovels, I should say no. I do say, however, that we have the assurance of the department that they are studying this matter and that recompense will be given. The general answer, I think, to the Senators who are pressing this matter is, when you say the contractors can not carry these articles, "How can you demonstrate what they can do until they shall have had an opportunity to do it?" We propose to give them a fair and liberal opportunity. It will bring better results to the people and add to the popularity of this system.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The difficulty is that the study of the department seems to come after their action.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would have no objection to the department studying the question and then acting after their study; but they have proceeded to put into operation this order bringing the size of the packages up to 50 pounds and compelling the star-route contractors to carry such packages and compelling the rural free delivery carriers to carry such packages. They should have had their study in advance of making any such order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. How could they study what the requirements would be until they had an absolute situation presented to them? There would be no way to judge.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would have required very little study for anybody to have ascertained that no star-route contractor could carry parcels of that character out in that mountain country at the rate of a cent a pound.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say generally, in answer to that, that we have the assurance of the Postmaster General, who was before our committee, that he had given much study and consideration to this proposition and had no doubt as to the wisdom of it. I am quite willing to trust that great administrative arm of our administration at this particular time. I believe that we will be better satisfied and the public will be better satisfied. There may be some little inequalities; I will not say that the system is perfect, but I believe it will be worked out as nearly perfect as human judgment can make it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a moment ago I made a point of order against the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee. The Chair overruled the point, and I submit to the judgment of the Chair. The amendment is offered to a provision in the bill which sets forth that where service is given on a rural route no money——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not a rural route; it refers to a star route.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand, if the Senator will permit me to finish my statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right.

Mr. GRONNA. The amendment proposes a limitation or, in other words, seeks to change existing law. The pending bill contains a provision to the effect that where the public is served on a star route none of the money appropriated by the bill can be used for Rural Free Delivery Service. It seems to me, Mr. President, it would be most unfortunate to permit the shipment, under the system of parcel post, of packages exceeding the weight of 50 pounds on railroads and then to prohibit such shipment on a rural free-delivery route.

I am well aware, Mr. President, that the pending amendment only affects star routes, but the chairman of the committee has stated that he proposes to offer a similar amendment which will affect rural free-delivery routes. For that reason I say that it would, in my judgment, be unfair to the rural communities to say that those who live on rural routes shall not have the advantage of shipping or sending a package weighing more than 50 pounds, although we will permit the shipment of such packages over the railroads. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that if the Postmaster General can be trusted to deal with this question in other branches than the rural service, he certainly can be trusted here. I think it is an unfair discrimination against the man who lives upon the rural routes. The effort has been made from the beginning of the consideration of this bill to limit the power of the Postmaster General; to take from him the authority and discretion which are given him by general law. Now, Senators are perfectly willing that 50 pounds shall go through the mails. A great deal has been said about the shipping of 50 pounds of ore. The same objections could be urged to shipping 25 pounds of ore. There would be just a little bit more trouble in making up the package, but the same amount of ore, the same weight could be shipped through the mails. I do not think it will be prudent for the Congress to interfere with the development of this great plan, and I sincerely hope that the Senate will vote down the amendment. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Norris	Sherman
Bankhead	Gronna	Oliver	Shively
Brady	James	Page	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Jones	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Kern	Poindexter	Smoot
Bryan	Lane	Pomerene	Stephenson
Catron	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Lodge	Reed	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	McCumber	Robinson	Thompson
Cummins	McLean	Root	Townsend
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
du Pont	Nelson	Sheppard	Warren

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. Under the paragraph providing "For inland transportation by star routes," on page 27, line 7, after the words "Rural Delivery Service," it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That no portion of the sums so above appropriated shall be spent by the Postmaster General for carrying fourth-class mail matter of greater weight than 50 pounds in any one package without authority therefor first obtained from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say in relation to the amendment that there is an injustice being placed upon a number of star-route contractors. That injustice should be remedied, and they should be allowed compensation for the work they do; yet, on the other hand, this amendment is a sweeping one and would hit all down the line at the parcel-post system. I do not think the pending amendment should be adopted, but another amendment which will fit the case should go into this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I for one do not believe that there should be any discrimination in the mail service of the United States. I believe that so long as we have a mail service it should be uniform in its operation, and that the same benefits should be received from the mail service by the man who lives 50 miles from a railroad, if he is on a regular mail route, as by the man who lives directly upon the railroad. I believe, as indicated in the discussion some time ago, that there is danger of the parcel post breaking down if the weight limit is increased; but so long as we have determined that there shall be no limit upon the Post Office Department as to the amount of matter which may be sent by parcel post to one man, I believe we would depart from the general equity of our mail system if we should say that another man living elsewhere shall not receive the same benefits from the same service, and at the same price. It seems to me that would be rank injustice; and yet there is such a discrimination created by the amendment proposed by the committee. So long as we have the system, it should be uniform in its operation and should "play no favorites" either as to localities or as to individuals.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that we should then revise our mail laws as to Alaska. The Senator knows that letter mail is forwarded in Alaska, but that carriers are not required to take the heavy packages. Such provision has been made there because it is necessary, and the Senator must admit that it is absolutely impossible to turn the Post Office Department into a freight-carrying establishment in the mountains at a cent a pound.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I say there ought to be a difference, and freight ought not be carried into the mountains nor ought it to go elsewhere at a cent a pound. There ought to be a difference in the system, but the Senate has already voted to make no change in the system. If you are going to discriminate between those who live upon a railroad and those who live off from a railroad, then it is time we did revise the whole system. Of course, Alaska is unique; it occupies a place in our legislation that no other section in the United States occupies. We build railroads in Alaska when we build them nowhere else; our land laws are different in Alaska from what they are anywhere else; the courts of justice are different in Alaska from what they are anywhere else; civil government is different in Alaska from what it is anywhere else. We do not consider Alaska in our general legislation at all.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it would not be a better plan to classify this matter and let the freight go by freight trains rather than to deny to a certain class of people the use of the mail through the parcel-post system and say to others that they shall enjoy the use of it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no question of it, I think. I believe everybody will admit that there must be a readjustment of our mail service, and if we are going into the freight business, it must be conducted on a different basis.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Reference has just been made to Alaska. My information is that there is a flat rate of 12 cents on all parcel-post matter in Alaska and that there is no zone limitation in Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. GRONNA. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and its transfer and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. As he would vote the same as I on this question, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. As he would vote on this matter as I vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). Because of my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], which I transfer to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT. On account of my pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. BANKHEAD's amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 27, line 8.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, was, on page 27, line 10, after the words "Rural Delivery Service," to strike out "$48,650,000" and insert "$53,000,000," so as to read:

For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, $53,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 13, after the word "substations," to insert:

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1914, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what increase that amendment makes in the rural carrier service?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Four million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. JONES. I mean, in the annual salary of the carriers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just about $100.

Mr. JONES. About $100 to each one?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; not to each one. It makes an increase of $100 for a standard route, making the total salary $1,200.

Mr. JONES. I see; it is an average of $100 each.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are some routes above 24 miles that the carriers get nothing extra for carrying, and there are some below where they get less.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think this increase is adequate to take care of the increased business that the rural carriers will have to take care of?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why, no; I do not think so; but it is the best we could do. I do not think twice that amount is going to take care of them in a little while.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think that if we require the rural carriers to render increased service we ought to give them just compensation for it?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he apprehends that there is any danger of any of them resigning?

Mr. BANKHEAD. A good many of them have done so recently.

Mr. KERN. There have been very strong efforts made to put a good many of them out of their positions, without any success. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I am glad to see there is an increase made, but I do not think the increase is as large as it ought to be. I recognize the fact that if we require either the star-route carriers or the rural-delivery carriers or the city carriers to do a largely increased amount of work we are going to have to pay for it, first or last.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the trouble the committee had—and I apprehend the same trouble will confront the Senate—was that we had no means of knowing what the increase was going to be. We are simply providing as best we can for the present.

Mr. JONES. I am not criticizing the committee. I feel that the committee has done the very best it could possibly do in the matter. I know the chairman of the committee recognizes the large burden we are putting on these people.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. JONES. Of course he has tried to keep it down, and, from his standpoint, properly so. While I voted against the committee with reference to these amendments I have not closed my eyes to the fact that if the Government requires of these officers these great burdens, we shall have to pay for them.

I have always thought the salaries of the rural delivery carriers were less than they ought to be. I think they have been the poorest paid class of employees we have in the Government service.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a statement I have here, from a rural carrier, as indicating the expenses to which the carriers are put and the sort of compensation they get. I know the committee is familiar with this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. While I am on my feet I desire to say that it is a fact that the salaries of the rural carriers have been increased decidedly more rapidly than those of any other employees of the Government. The truth is that from the beginning of the service their salaries have been increased 300 per cent.

Mr. JONES. I know that. The trouble was that they started too low.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not mean by that to say that their salaries are now entirely adequate.

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But it seemed to me that when we made this increase of $100 a year it was about as far as we could safely go at this time. When we have a little more information, and when we get a little better knowledge of what the conditions are and what increase is to be made in the burdens imposed, perhaps we shall be able to do more adequate justice than we are now.

Mr. JONES. I understand that. I do not think Congress can be criticized for not treating these employees fairly, because, as the chairman of the committee says, since the service was organized there have been numerous increases in the salaries of the carriers. I have always thought the salaries started very much too low, and that for the service these people have to perform and the expense to which they are put their real compensation is very low.

I have here a statement from a carrier in my State, going into detail with reference to his expenses. I wish to call it to the attention of the Senate. This is a carrier on a standard route, as I understand. The length of his route is 26 miles. His salary is $1,100. The number of boxes on the route he serves is 216. The number of families served is 280. The number of patrons served is 1,400. This route is on the west side of the mountains; the country is a little bit hilly, and the roads are not generally very good, or, at least, not at this time of the year.

The carrier states that it requires 9 hours and 15 minutes every day to cover his route. Sometimes the time required is greater than that, and sometimes a little bit less, but the average is 9 hours and 15 minutes, instead of 8 hours, to which we limit other post-office employees. My recollection is that by mandatory legislation we prohibited them from working more than eight hours a day, but this carrier has to work on an average over nine hours every day.

The following is an inventory of the necessary articles for handling the route, and the cost of them:

Three horses, at a cost of $325. That, I think, is a very reasonable valuation for the horses he would have to have.

Two vehicles, $80.

Harness, $32.

That makes a total investment of $437 for the actual implements he has to use in order to perform the service the Government requires of him, in addition to his own labor.

The cost of operation he gives as follows:

Annual interest on the investment—which he computes at 8 per cent—$34.96.

Depreciation, $70.

Feed for horses, $325.

Horseshoeing and veterinary expenses, $80.

Repairs to vehicles and harness, $70.

Barn rent, $60.

Making a total of $639.96.

That is the actual expense this man has to pay out in taking care of the work on his route independently of his own labor. For his labor and for his expenditure he receives a salary of $1,100. In other words, he receives for his own services an actual compensation of $460.04, or a little over $30 a month.

It seems to me that is a very, very small compensation, and much smaller than we pay to most of the other Government employees.

I do not know that I shall propose an amendment to increase the amount at this time. I feel, as the chairman has said, that the committee has done the best it felt it could possibly do in the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator might well add that this man is likely to lose a horse or have his vehicle destroyed by accident at any moment.

Mr. JONES. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That happens from time to time.

Mr. JONES. It happens very frequently, and when it does the carrier gets no reimbursement at all for it. He takes all of that risk.

I introduced and had referred to the committee an amendment to the bill, making an increase of 20 per cent on the salaries for the various routes. It seemed to me that was a fair increase, especially considering the greatly increased business that must come to the rural carriers by reason of the parcel post that we have put into operation. I feel that this salary ought to be raised to about $1,320. Feeling, however, that the committee has done the best it could do, I do not think I shall propose an increase at this time. I wanted, however, to call these facts to the attention of the committee.

I have here a statement showing the average salaries of the rural carriers in various parts of the country. They are all down to about five or six hundred dollars, and some of them a little bit higher than this gentleman gives here.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I understand that the standard rural route is 24 miles in length. Many of the routes are in excess of that amount. For this excess the carriers have not heretofore received any extra compensation and will not under the provisions of this bill. For every 2 miles below the standard route a reduction is made from the $1,100 salary heretofore allowed.

It seems to me that as these routes vary in length, and as the standard route is 24 miles, there ought to be some increase for the mileage in excess of 24 miles, and some reduction for the mileage below that amount.

I am advised that there are 10,037 of these carriers who receive standard pay.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am exceedingly anxious to get the bill into the Senate to-night, and this is the only amendment remaining to be considered. The Senator can offer his amendment when the bill gets into the Senate, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to offer it as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator can do that when the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no objection to doing it now, is there, from a parliamentary standpoint?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, I do not make an objection. I simply wanted to get the bill into the Senate to-night, if possible.

Mr. POMERENE. My judgment is that it might as well be disposed of now as later. If there is no objection on that score, I shall submit the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I made no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no parliamentary objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator let the amendment be read?

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to send it to the desk. I will send it to the desk now, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 16, after the words "per annum," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That for each mile above the standard rural delivery route of 24 miles there shall be added $30 per year, and a deduction of a like amount for every mile below the standard; major fractions of a mile to be considered a full mile: And provided further,

That the maximum salary for routes of any length shall be $1,320 per annum.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, we are providing here for the salaries of these men.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A point of order is raised by the Senator from Kansas. The Chair is not conversant with the orginal law establishing the Rural Free Delivery System, and the Chair would like to be informed as to what the law is.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Ohio desires to be heard first on the merits of the amendment, I will withhold the point of order for the present.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to occupy only a moment further.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then I will withhold the point of order for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. POMERENE. As I am advised, there are 10,037 of these carriers with standard routes of 24 miles. They receive standard pay. There are 20,354 of these carriers with more than the standard routes, and they receive no allowance for excess mileage. There are 12,447 with less than the standard route, and for these carriers there is a reduction made.

It does seem to me that if 24 miles is to be regarded as the standard route for which the Government is going to give compensation, common justice would suggest that where the length of the route is in excess of that amount there should be some increased pay; and particularly should this be so in view of the fact that the Government has seen fit to make a reduction where the mileage falls below the standard route.

For that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator pleases, is $30 the deduction that is now made by the Government when the route falls below the standard?

Mr. POMERENE. I am not advised as to the amount of the reduction. I am advised that there is a reduction for every 2 miles which it falls below the standard, but what the amount is I have not now in mind.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator fixes it at $30, does he?

Mr. POMERENE. That was the purpose of the amendment—to fix both the increase and the reduction at $30 per mile per annum.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I trust a point of order will not be made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

In the State which I have the honor in part to represent a great many of the rural routes are 30 miles in length, and some of them are 35 miles in length. The maximum amount paid to the carrier is $1,100 per year. Under the amendment proposed by the committee the carrier would receive $1,200 per year. I believe in justice to these men, however. I believe there should be additional pay for every mile above the standard route, which is 24 miles.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not a fact, Mr. President, that the carriers traveling 35 miles get only the standard rate?

Mr. GRONNA. That is a fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. They get the same compensation as a man who travels 24 miles?

Mr. GRONNA. That is a fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is manifestly unjust.

Mr. GRONNA. It is unjust; and for that reason I hope no one will make a point of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The Postmaster General has authority now to reduce the pay of the carrier where the route is less than 24 miles in length. I believe the deduction made is $30 for every 2 miles. Where the carrier has to travel from 5 to 10 miles more than the standard route it seems to me we should make some provision for it and allow the carrier at least a small compensation for this additional work.

I sincerely hope the Senator from Kansas will not make the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio what is the method by which the reduction is made below the standard under the present rule?

Mr. POMERENE. There is a reduction made, I am advised, for every 2 miles which it falls below the standard; but the amount of the reduction I have not in mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the amendment which the Senator from Ohio recommends makes a reduction of $30 for each mile?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can the Senator give me the smallest number of miles that are being covered in any of these routes? I think the Senator will find that by making a reduction of $30 for every mile he will strike a great many cases in which the reduction will be too great. Even though a carrier did not have more than 6 or 8 or 10 miles to go, he would have to keep up the same equipment; and while he would not have to give the same number of hours to the work, he would have to give the major portion of each day to that particular service.

I think the Senator's amendment would do an injustice unless he fixes a limit, as we have fixed a limit in some other amendments, namely, that in no instance should the amount fall below $600 or $800. In other words, I am very positive that the Senator's amendment would do an injustice to a great many carriers who have less than the standard route and perhaps not more than 8 or 10 miles of rural routes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator whether he has any suggestion to make as to what the minimum should be.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think there should be any salary of less than $800.

Mr. POMERENE. I am willing that the amendment shall be modified to that extent, so as to provide that there shall be no salary below $800, and I will amend it in that particular.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that the fixing of the standard route and the graduations down was made some years ago, and that has been recognized as the legal arrangement for the compensation of the carriers. Every time we have increased the pay of the carriers we have increased the pay so much for the standard route, and then the Postmaster General has adjusted the shorter routes according to the amount fixed by Congress for the standard route.

In regard to the Senator's complaint of the long routes, we must remember that this country is a country of great diversity, and there is nothing more diverse in it than the condition of the roads. In my own State there are routes 24 miles long or 20 miles long where the burden of delivering the mail is just as great as on other routes of 30 miles, it depending upon the condition of the roads.

The department in establishing a rural route takes into consideration all the elements that enter into the situation at that particular place. I think it has fixed the maximum at 30 miles. Years ago the maximum was 35 miles. If the department believed that the condition of the roads was such and the amount of mail to be delivered was of such a quantity that the carrier could make a trip of 35 miles without an excessive burden, the route was put in. If the route proposed was too long for the number of people served, then the route was declined and it was not established and the people were not given the service.

Take star routes in any State, the State of Ohio, where a carrier may travel 30 miles, as the Senator says. If he has fine roads he has an easier job than other carriers in other sections of the State, where the roads are bad, where they get muddy in the wintertime, and where the country is hilly. You can not with absolute equity fix a rigid requirement. The department and Congress in the 15 years the service has been in operation have fixed 24 miles as the standard route, and all the appropriations have been made with that in view. I think it would be very unfortunate to change that standard. I do not believe the department is establishing routes of more than 25 miles, unless the conditions existing on a particular route are such that the extension can be made without a great burden to the carrier.

I make the point of order because the amendment is manifestly legislation. I think that will be admitted by the Senator from Ohio. It is changing the existing law, beyond any question, and it is not limiting any appropriation, but increasing the appropriation.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator for information? Has the standard been established by a statute or by an order of the department?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is 24 miles. It was originally established by order of the department. It has been afterwards recognized in the statute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the rule now is that $1,100 is paid to a carrier on a standard route of 24 miles. There is nothing additional paid if the route is 25 or 26 or 30 miles; the carrier simply gets $1,100. But when it falls below the standard there is a reduction in the price.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to say that there is a statutory law providing that a rural route shall be 24 miles?

Mr. BRISTOW. Twenty-four miles is the standard route.

Mr. ROOT. By statute?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is a statute in the appropriation act. Eleven hundred dollars for a standard route of 24 miles is the appropriation. This simply adds additional legislation, and that is the point of order I make.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a statute confined to a particular set of men, and it does not apply generally. It seems to me that the amendment is not general legislation.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I can not understand the argument of the Senator from Texas that this is not general legislation when it is incorporating into the statute a law which does not exist and never has existed. If that is not legislation, what is?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is legislation, but it is special legislation. Special legislation on an appropriation bill is permitted under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has knowledge of certain decisions of courts of last resort in this country to the effect that changing the salary of an official in an appropriation act is not general legislation. The officer takes the office not only with its burden but also with the right on the part of the legislature to alter the salary in an appropriation act. The Chair is impressed with the view that that is the only reason why the proviso put in the bill by the committee is not general legislation. It proposes to change the salary from $1,100 to $1,200 per annum. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is simply changing the salary upon another theory.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to state that the amendment is subject, in my opinion, to the point of order. This amendment was stricken out in the House on the point of order that it was legislation, but I do not think that any Senator here will make a point of order against the amendment which the committee recommends. I do not think there is a Senator here who does not recognize that it is a just amendment and that a point of order should not be made against it.

I desire to say, further, that Rule XVI, beginning with the fourth line from the bottom, reads:

> To the Post Office bills to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which shall be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

This manifestly increases the appropriation—> or to add any item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Kansas makes the point of order on that clause of Rule XVI, the Chair will sustain it, but not on the ground that it is general legislation.

Mr. BRISTOW. The point of order is made against the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, but not against the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not believe that changing the salary is general legislation at all. It has nothing to do with the duties of the office.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident, I think, that we can not finish the bill this evening. Several Senators advise me that they wish to transact some other business. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection that will be done.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

FISHERIES REGULATIONS.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4437, to give effect to the treaty concerning fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada. The bill is Calendar No. 244 under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know that I have any objection to interpose to the consideration of the bill at the present time, but I have a telegram here from my colleague received within an hour. I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, February 27, 1914.

Senator POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:
Please hold fisheries bill, recently reported, until my return.
T. E. BURTON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before that is decided I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. The request he has just submitted pertains to this bill?

Mr. POMERENE. It relates to this bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator from Ohio, who sent the telegram, a member of the committee from which the bill comes?

Mr. POMERENE. He is a member of that committee, the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know enough about the measure to raise an objection until I am advised a little. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if, in view of the telegram just read, he presses his request for unanimous consent? It is evident the Senator from Ohio wishes to be present when the bill is considered. Does the Senator wish to consider it during his absence?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not think if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] were here that he would object. The bill which the Senator from Indiana has now brought up is a bill to put into effect a treaty made nearly six years ago. Under the treaty it was agreed that regulations should be prepared by a commission appointed by Canada and by the United States. The commissioners have agreed upon the regulations, and the treaty provided that the two Governments would put them in force.

The regulations were agreed upon more than four years ago. The Canadian Parliament passed a law putting them into effect. There were some objections at that time to some of the regulations. There was a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations which took them into consideration, heard the objections, reported upon them, and the matter has been sent back to the commissioners to deal with it. But the whole thing has dragged along now for five years without the Government of the United States complying with its obligation to put those regulations into effect.

Finally, after acting with the greatest consideration and patience, the Canadian Government has given notice that they must fix some limit beyond which they could not be bound without our being bound, and they fixed the 1st of March next. Upon that the President brought the matter to the special attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and this bill, to which nobody has any objection, to which no one has made any objection after all these years of opportunity, is now ready for action.

It seems to me that the situation is such that no one has any right to say that we should not proceed to perform our duty.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from New York inform the Senate as to how and by whom the limitation of March 1 next was placed?

Mr. ROOT. I understand it was a notice from the Canadian Government to our Government.

Mr. POMERENE. When was this notice given to our Government?

Mr. ROOT. I do not know. It was communicated by the executive department.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, this is emergent legislation in the sense that the purposes of the treaty may fail because of delay in ratifying the regulations proposed and submitted to give effect to the treaty. Senators will note that in the report accompanying the bill is a communication from the President urging early action on the measure. This communication concludes as follows:

> Similar legislation was adopted and was put into effect on the part of Canada three years ago, and we are informed that unless this Government shall be in a position on the 1st of March reciprocally to perform its obligations the object of the treaty, which is of manifest importance to the permanent interests of both countries, will be defeated.

There is urgency, and for manifestly good reasons. The treaty was made over five years ago. The commissioners reported the regulations over four years ago. The Dominion of Canada promptly enacted suitable legislation to carry the treaty into effect. The subject was before the Committee on Foreign Relations three years ago. Objections were raised to certain regulations. These objections have been obviated. The regulations in the proposed form are agreeable to the Canadian Government. They are agreeable to the fisheries authorities of the United States. They are agreeable to the fisheries authorities of the State of Michigan, from which certain objections came when the regulations were first submitted. They seem to be agreeable to all interests concerned in them.

It would gratify me to be able to accommodate the senior Senator from Ohio. But I can not believe that under the peculiar circumstances of the case, action at this time will prove disagreeable to him. Moreover, by the terms of the bill the regulations do not go into effect until the 1st of January. Meanwhile, by the text of the bill, immediately on its enactment the United States International Fisheries Commission is instructed to "begin inquiries with a view to determining what modifications in the regulations are required by existing conditions," and to report the same to Congress at the opening of its next session with recommendations for whatever changes the commission may deem proper and necessary. The bill signalizes now our intention to put the treaty into effect. The postponement of the going into effect of the regulations until next January allows ample opportunity to cure any defect that may develop in the meantime.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, my attention was not called to this matter until within very recent days. It was brought up and briefly considered in the Committee on Foreign Relations. I knew of no objection to the bill; in fact I knew nothing about it until this morning I received protests from some of the fishing interests of the State of Ohio, and later the telegram came from my colleague.

I realize that this measure seems to have had very full consideration by the committee and by the commissions representing both Governments, and while I would be very much gratified if it could be delayed so as to give my colleague an opportunity to be heard, as he requests in the telegram, at the same time, under the information which is given here by the acting chairman of the committee, I do not feel justified in taking the responsibility of asking for further delay.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the fishery interests of the State of Washington are very deeply interested in this bill. When the treaty was first made the fishermen of Washington, especially those interested along the international border, were opposed to its ratification. But as time has gone on the need of such regulations as have been agreed upon under the treaty has become manifest, and the great fishery interests there are now very anxious that action should be taken toward carrying out the provisions of the treaty.

Very recently there was a gathering of some of the most important interests connected with fishing in the Pacific Northwest at a great convention of cannery men held in Baltimore, which was addressed by the Secretary of Commerce. I saw a number of those men as they went and came from the city of Baltimore. They represented that some early action, the quicker the better, for carrying out the terms of the treaty was necessary to prevent the extinction of some of the most important fisheries in the Pacific Northwest, particularly with reference to the great salmon fisheries of the Fraser River. Salmon coming in through the Strait of Juan de Fuca going to the spawning ground in the Fraser River pass through the waters of the San Juan Islands and travel during the greater part of the entire journey, along the international boundary line, and experience has demonstrated that it is impossible to properly restrain and regulate the fishing for salmon, as that great silver horde goes to the spawning ground, without carrying out the terms of this treaty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I know nothing about the merits of this legislation. It appears that the bill was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] on the 10th of February and reported by the acting chairman of the committee on the 26th, which was yesterday. It is not on my file. I have sent for a copy of the bill. It appears that it has just come from the printer. Of course I have had no opportunity to see what the bill is and my position upon it is not taken in any respect with relation to the merits of the bill. I know nothing about it. I assume that it is a meritorious bill from what the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and the President have said. I did state, however, that the Senator from Ohio, as he is a member of the committee and has requested an opportunity to be here, under ordinary circumstances ought to have it. He will be here on Monday. I understand from the Senator from Indiana that this legislation ought to be in effect, if possible, by the 1st of March, which will be Sunday. I do not want to do anything unreasonable about this, but since I addressed the Chair the secretary of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has told me that the Senator has asked him to request a Senator to object to unanimous consent being now given. I shall make that objection, but I have no objection whatever to the Senator moving to proceed to the consideration of the bill. If the Senate wants to do it, action can be had in that way. I shall not oppose it in any way; but I do think when a Senator asks to have an objection entered and says he will be here within two days that I ought to object, and that is my sole reason for doing so.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I appreciate the question of courtesy raised by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. The secretary to the senior Senator from Ohio spoke to me this afternoon about the matter. I explained to him the situation. The urgency of this legislation has only very recently come to the attention of the Senate, and I feel certain that the Senator is not aware of this urgency. Under the circumstances, I feel that I can not refrain from pressing the bill to a conclusion. True, the bill was reported only yesterday. But the bill in substantially the same form was before the Committee on Foreign Relations three years ago and two years ago. Three years ago it was the subject of special hearings before a subcommittee. By an amendment to the regulations which I shall offer certain objections then advanced will be removed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have said that I should not oppose any motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4437.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4437) to give effect to the provisions of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on April 1, 1908, and ratified by the United States Senate April 13, 1908.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the text of the bill and to proceed with the consideration of the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 5, in the first paragraph of the schedule, in line 14, before the words "Georgian Bay," I move to insert the words "Saginaw Bay and."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Indiana would briefly explain what that amendment means, in order that I may direct a very few remarks to that particular point.

Mr. SHIVELY. By reference to the first paragraph of the schedule, it will be observed that Georgian Bay, in Canada, is excluded from the operation of these regulations. This was because this bay is situated clearly and exclusively within Canadian territory. Saginaw Bay lies quite as completely within the United States as does Georgian Bay within Canada. There is no part of the waters of Saginaw Bay that touches Canadian land, nor the Canadian line in Lake Huron; these waters are entirely within the United States. The mouth of the bay is southward many miles from the boundary line between the United States and Canada. The commissioners of the respective countries have agreed that these waters should be exempt from the operation of these regulations, and in this they are in full agreement with the fisheries authorities of the State of Michigan, whose jurisdiction covers all these waters.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is correct.

Mr. SHIVELY. All are in agreement as to the wisdom and policy of excluding the waters of Saginaw Bay from the scope of these regulations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, are they agreed as to the wisdom of the policy of excluding Saginaw Bay from the regulations as much as they are agreed that they had better do that than to have no agreement at all?

Mr. SHIVELY. No; it is not that, Mr. President; though, of course, excluding what should not be in the regulations would facilitate their ratification. The waters of Saginaw Bay, I repeat, do not touch Canadian soil nor the Canadian line at any point. They are entirely within the United States, just as Georgian Bay, which is expressly excluded, is within the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if each one of the two nations were going to do whatever they saw fit in their own waters up to the line dividing the two countries, then there need be no regulations whatever. The very purpose of the regulations is to protect the fish in those lakes, and the fish will not themselves recognize the boundary line in going from one portion of a lake to another.

Mr. SHIVELY. But, Mr. President, this does not involve excluding anything that goes to the boundary line. This piece of water does not touch the boundary line; it lies back a great distance and is all within United States territory. Its northern limits are at least 50 miles south of the Canadian boundary.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, Mr. President, let us go back a little in this matter. A commission was appointed on the part of the Canadian Government, represented by Great Britain, and on the part of the American Government to provide regulations governing the fisheries of the Lakes so that the fishing industry in the waters lying between Canada and the United States would not be entirely annihilated. That was the original purpose of the agreement, and it was intended to cover not only Saginaw Bay, but any other body of water constituting practically a portion of the Lakes, including Georgian Bay and Lake Michigan. At that time our commissioners, if I understand the history of this matter correctly, did not want to include Lake Michigan in the agreement, because practically all of Lake Michigan is within the United States, and we did not want to recognize that lake as a part of the water to be considered in the agreement. As I understand, no objection was made to that, provided we would also agree to exclude Georgian Bay, which is also a land-locked bay. So Lake Michigan, which is purely, clearly, and wholly within the United States, was taken out on one side, and Georgian Bay, which is purely and clearly within Canada and is really a land-locked bay, was taken out on the other side, so that one would offset the other.

When you come to Georgian Bay, I admit that it is agreed that it shall be excluded, and the Canadian as well as the American commissioners are also perfectly willing that Saginaw Bay shall be excluded, but I confess I can not see the reason for excluding Saginaw Bay, which is a V-shaped bay, on one side of Lake Huron, with its wide end toward the lake, and which is as much a portion of that lake as one end of it. Saginaw Bay is just as much a portion of Lake Huron as the end of Lake Superior is a part of that body of water. Unless it be that the fish in the particular locality of Saginaw Bay remain there, that they are different from other fish and need a different character of treatment, I can not see why the same rule that is to govern all over the Lakes should not govern upon one side of Lake Huron.

For my part, I think that even Lake Michigan and the Georgian Bay should have been included, but the commissioners saw fit in the treaty—and I am speaking now of the treaty and not of the regulations—to balance the one as against the other. Now, in reality, we are changing the treaty by this bill by excluding another open bay which is not land-locked, but which is a part of Lake Huron.

There ought to be some reason outside of the agreement why we should make a rule as to one side of the same lake different from that applying generally. I admit if Saginaw Bay were not a part of Lake Huron you might frame a different rule, the same as you do in the case of Lake Michigan, and the same as you do in the case of Georgian Bay, but Saginaw Bay is a part of Lake Huron.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the question of Saginaw Bay came up when the regulations were first presented to Congress some years ago. I was a member of the subcommittee at that time, with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. We had a full hearing on the question, and we were all convinced that Saginaw Bay ought to be excluded. Canada now withdraws any objection to our excluding Saginaw Bay, and, if Canada does not object, certainly there can be no other good ground for objection.

It was understood when the committee reported the bill favorably that this amendment would be offered, because the senior Senator from Michigan was pressing it very strongly, and I think it ought to be made as a matter of good faith to the senior Senator from Michigan, who is a member of the committee. I will say also that it met with the approval of the entire committee.

Mr. President, the matter of the regulation of fisheries under this treaty has been delayed some six years, and we are likely to lose the benefit of the treaty and likely to lose all control of the fisheries, which I believe would result in the destruction of the lake and northwestern fisheries, if this bill is not enacted promptly. I earnestly hope that the Senator from North Dakota will allow the bill to pass as reported from the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator one question right there. He says that if Canada has no objection there can be no ground for not excluding Saginaw Bay. I had supposed it to be the purpose of the treaty and the regulations to protect the fish in the Lakes. If the fish do not go from Saginaw Bay into the center of Lake Huron, then I can see that if the Canadians make no objection we should not; but if the fish in Saginaw Bay do leave that bay, if they are the same kind of fish as others in the Lakes, if they need the same kind of protection, then how can the Senator say that the whole thing depends upon whether Canada wants it or does not want it?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the object was to protect the fisheries where action by the two Governments was necessary. So far as the protection of the fisheries is concerned, the fisheries in Saginaw Bay are entirely under the protection of the State of Michigan; and the Michigan Fish Commission, as I know, having examined the question, has the most elaborate and ample regulations for the protection of the fisheries. The question of protecting the fisheries in Saginaw Bay is not involved at all; they are protected now.

Mr. McCUMBER. If they are protected in another way, that might be a reason for the exclusion of Saginaw Bay.

Mr. LODGE. They are thoroughly protected. I know that from personal examination when I was on the subcommittee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there can be no question, I will say to the Senator, that they are protected. There is no question that this subject was considered by the commission when the matter was brought up. Saginaw Bay is, as the Senator says, not a landlocked bay, but it would have been a landlocked bay if it had not been for the improvements which have been put upon it. So far as fishing is concerned, however, it is quite as much landlocked as is Georgian Bay. The fish can pass from Georgian Bay into Lake Huron quite as readily as they can from Saginaw Bay.

I repeat what the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, namely, that the Canadian commissioners are satisfied with the exclusion of Saginaw Bay; they have investigated the question as to the protection of the fish under the Michigan laws, and are satisfied with those laws.

It has been agreed in the committee that this provision shall apply to Saginaw Bay the same as it does to Georgian Bay; and it seems to me that, with due protection provided, the United States Government at least ought not to raise any objection to the proposed regulations. For myself, I know from the history of the controversy and from the examination which has been conducted, that the fish in Saginaw Bay will be as fully protected under the laws of Michigan as they will be under the joint regulations which will be made. Therefore, Mr. President, inasmuch also as the House committee has unanimously agreed to this provision and there will be no objection to it, as I understand, in the House, I hope that the Senate will raise no objection to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator's statement that under the laws of Michigan the fish will be protected in that particular bay just as fully as they would be under the joint regulations proposed to be established would be sufficient to allay any suspicion I might have that the exclusion of Saginaw Bay would be detrimental to the fisheries.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think it would be a great misfortune to have this long-continued attempt at the preservation of a great food supply fail because of a question about this particular bay. If the Government of Canada is content that Saginaw Bay be left out of the regulations which are now to be put in force by the acts of Congress, rather than imperil the whole undertaking I should assent to that bay being left out. If it shall appear hereafter, however, that the good faith of the treaty and the interests of the preservation of the fish supply require that the regulations shall be extended over Saginaw Bay, I consider that Congress retains the power to extend them.

We are not changing the treaty. We are not violating any provision of the treaty, nor are we repealing or denouncing any provision of it. We are simply refraining from extending the regulations over this particular bay at this time, with the understanding that the Government of Canada is satisfied that we should refrain at this time making the regulations apply to all the other waters mentioned in the treaty. For that reason I am content to remain silent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, where did the amendment come in? Will the Senator repeat that?

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question before that is done?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I withdraw what I said.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not want the Senator to withdraw it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator from Utah wants to ask a question before that is done; so I withdraw my request to give the Senator that opportunity.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that this is a Senate bill. Has the House had this matter under consideration?

Mr. SHIVELY. The House committee has had it under consideration. I think it has been reported and is on the House Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. They have reported it. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. So if we pass this bill to-night the House no doubt will substitute the Senate bill for the House bill to-morrow?

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; and with these amendments it will conform in all respects to the House bill as reported.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, I renew my inquiry, Mr. President, as to where the amendment comes in?

Mr SHIVELY. On page 5, in the first paragraph of the schedule, down on line 14. The lines are not numbered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I wanted to know.

The VICE PRESIDENT. How can the Senate amend a schedule?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why not?

Mr. SHIVELY. In line 14, after the word "excluding," it is proposed to insert the words "Saginaw Bay and."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wanted to be sure that the Secretary got it in the right place, as the lines are not numbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary does not know just how to journalize this matter. A bill is not being amended. It seems to be a schedule that is being amended.

Mr. SHIVELY. I stated in my motion an amendment to the first paragraph of the schedule. I named line 14, not because the lines of the schedule are numbered, but because the amendment is to be inserted in what, on count, is line 14. I do this for the purpose of distinguishing the exact place of the amendment to any one who should have occasion to look the matter up in the text of the schedule before us.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in the schedule, to amend by inserting, before "Georgian Bay," the words "Saginaw Bay and."

Mr. SHIVELY. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. There is another place where the same amendment should come in.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; but let us first dispose of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There does not seem to be any objection to it, but——

Mr SHIVELY Then, if that amendment is declared adopted, I wish to suggest another amendment on page 10.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana whether he considers the schedule as being any part of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; it is an integral part of the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is a part of the bill. It is a part of the thing that is being put in force by the bill; that is being given force and effect; and it is competent for us to amend it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 10, under the title "The Great Lakes System," in line 5, before the words "Georgian Bay," I move to insert the words "Saginaw Bay and."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10 of the schedule, under the heading "The Great Lakes System" and before the words "Georgian Bay," it is proposed to insert the words "Saginaw Bay and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to give effect to the provisions of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on April 11, 1908."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask, simply for my own information, if it is necessary for this to be in operation on the 1st day of March, whether it could be signed by the Vice President on Monday and still accomplish its purpose?

Mr. SHIVELY. I believe so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I wish to place in the RECORD copies of two telegrams bearing on the subject of the bill just passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1914.

Prof. EDWARD E. PRINCE,
Commissioner of Fisheries, Ottawa, Canada:

Are you willing and in position to agree that for present Saginaw Bay be exempted till further investigation?

H. M. SMITH, Commissioner.

FEBRUARY 13, 1914.

Mr. HUGH W. SMITH,
Commissioner, Fisheries Bureau, Washington, D. C.:

Yes. Understanding still holds regarding Saginaw Bay exemption.

E. E. PRINCE.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, when I made the motion a while ago that the Senate when it adjourns to-day should stand adjourned until Monday next, I did so after a pretty full consultation with Members on both sides. Since that time, however, I have been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that it is highly important that progress be made on the Post Office appropriation bill to-morrow. On account of the urgency of his request to that effect, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 28, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of the Lord our God, whose blessings are without number, whose patience is unceasing, whose love is beyond compare. Help us, we beseech Thee, to summon up all that is purest, noblest, best in us, that we may render unto Thee faithful service in the work Thou hast called us to do, and reap the fruits of peace, joy, and righteousness in the Holy Ghost. And songs of praises we will ever give to Thee. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KITCHIN, for an indefinite period of time, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GORDON, for three days, on account of important business.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR—PENSIONS.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, this being private pension day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ascertain from gentlemen on the opposite side if we can agree upon some time for general debate on the private pension bill H. R. 13542, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. DIES. I do not know if I am one of the persons whom the gentleman from Wisconsin is addressing, but I have some remarks that I want to submit on this pension matter. I do not know whether I can submit them in the time that might be allotted to me in general debate. I do not think I could do it satisfactorily under the five-minute rule, under the rules governing the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear the discussion over here.

Mr. DIES. I say it will take me about an hour to say what I want to say, and I do not think I can say what I want to under the five-minute rule. An hour is all that I want.

The SPEAKER. Let us see who controls this other time. The leading Republican on the committee is Mr. LANGHAM; then Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska, Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. PARKER, and Mr Moss of West Virginia.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I understand that they are all in favor of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, what was the request?

The SPEAKER. No request has yet been made. Gentlemen are trying to find out how much time shall be devoted to general debate.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I think it has been verbally agreed by the only person who represents any opposition and myself that we shall be satisfied with an hour and ten minutes of general debate, one hour to be used by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and ten minutes to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent, pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House, that the general debate be limited to an hour and ten minutes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to have one hour and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] ten minutes.

Mr MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that that is to cover general debate on all the pension bills that will be called up?

Mr RUSSELL. Just this one bill.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Only this one bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not heard from anyone on this side who desires to speak on this bill, and therefore I shall not object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for a moment, I would like to ask the gentleman if that time could not be extended by 20 minutes more? I had hoped and expected to get in for that length of time on the Army appropriation bill, but I have a number of constituents here who have some business that requires attention, and everybody recognizes the importance of constituents, and, if it is possible to do so, I would like to have this time extended by 20 minutes, so that I can get in now and get through and get out.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin says that is satisfactory to him.

The SPEAKER. The request is changed so as to make it one hour and a half—20 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], 1 hour by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE]. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is rather an unusual request to have the entire time consumed on that side; but I have had no requests on this side for time, and I shall not object to this amended request, providing 15 minutes' time is added to it that we may use on this side if we desire.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. That is satisfactory to me, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The request is again modified to make it one hour and three-quarters—an hour to be given to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE], and 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LANGHAM]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13542) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, with Mr. ANSBERRY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13542, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13542) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration (H. R. 13542) contains 137 pension items, consisting of 90 pension items for ex-Union soldiers, 37 pension items for the widows of Union soldiers, and 8 items for dependent children of such soldiers.

The total carried by the bill is $43,464 per year. Of this amount, only the sum of $17,658 per year is an increase. The committee has tried to be very careful in the consideration of the items included in this bill, and we do not believe that any of them is open to any serious objection. We hope that, after due consideration, the bill with all of the items contained in it will be duly passed.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very greatly obliged to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] and to the House for the courtesy extended to me.

Mr. Chairman, we heard yesterday afternoon from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] a very interesting speech on certain military conditions in this country; or, to speak more accurately, on certain alleged military conditions. He referred with a considerable degree of vigor, and with propriety, to those declarations which come from time to time from high officials of our military establishment to the effect that the Army of the United States is incapable of the discharge of its duties in the event that we are confronted by even a minor crisis. If one can put confidence in the declarations of these spokesmen for the American Army, it is the merest travesty of a military force.

It has been charged recently that we did not have material of war sufficient to conduct a battle of 30 minutes' duration. It has been alleged that the Army is inefficient, because we do not appropriate money enough for its training; that we have not officers enough; and that, altogether, speaking from the military point of view, the country is in a most deplorable condition. Why, sir, we have had our apprehensions excited until some of us have lain awake at night, fearful that some great military power like Haiti or Santo Domingo or northern Mexico, perhaps, would invade us, destroy all of our property, and imperil the lives of ourselves and of our families. It has been hinted—in fact, I have seen it stated in the public press—that if that peripatetic and vehement type of pure democracy, Pancho Villa, should for the moment put aside his gentle and cultivated inclination to rape, murder, and arson, and suppress for the time being his devotion to the Mexican constitution and cross into Texas, the Army of the United States would be incapable of repelling the invader. Mr. Chairman, let me say for the comfort of those gentlemen that should Mr. Villa turn aside from his ordinary amusements and undertake to invade the United States through Texas, Texas herself will guarantee the defense of the soil of this country, the territory of that great State, and, if necessary, protect the Army of the United States. [Applause and laughter.]

However, Mr. Chairman, that is not what I took the floor to talk about. The usual annual suggestions from the administrative departments in connection with appropriations for the naval and military services of the Government have taken a rather new form this year. Usually we are terrified by the Germans or by the Japs, and, alternating, they are our favorite enemies for the time being, as one or the other is conceived to be more potential in securing appropriations. This year the absurdity of that argument having possibly dawned on the minds of these gentlemen, the appeal has been made to us that there should be additional rank given to naval officers. Why? Because when they go across the ocean on social victories bent, at reviews and in the vicinity of the courts and royalties, if it happens that a foreign naval officer of a shade higher rank should turn up at the same time, they would have to go into the anteroom to greet his majesty a moment later than the man with the superior rank. Therefore it has been proposed that we create, I believe, six vice admirals.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. If that was done, would it involve the creation of six lieutenant generals?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am coming to that. I think my argument must have been so clear that the gentleman apprehended it. I am coming to the lieutenant generals presently.

Mr. MADDEN. Knowing that the gentleman represented the Army, I thought that subject would naturally occur to his mind.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No more. I have been removed from that sphere of activity, and I speak now as a rank outsider.

Yes; it has been suggested that we should have six vice admirals in addition to the present naval rank. The only reason given is the possible social advantage, or the fact that if they assembled for some joint operation we might have a man in command of our fleet who would be a little bit less important officially than the representative of China, or Japan, or Germany, or France, or England, or whatever country we happened for the moment to be cooperating with.

The Secretary of War, jealous of the rights of the branch of the service with which he is associated, promptly came to the front with the suggestion that if there were to be six vice admirals created in order to give additional rank and higher pay to some of the officers of the Navy there should also be a corresponding promotion in the military grades, and that we should revive the rank of lieutenant general, which was abolished in 1909 by an act of this Congress, with a full knowledge of what it was doing and why it was doing it. The Secretary of War suggested that we should correspondingly increase the military rank and provide for six lieutenant generals. Even a soldier may be embarrassed under some circumstances just like a sailor.

Mr. Chairman, that is a feature of legislation for these two branches of the public service which has always attracted my attention. Whatever is done this year for the Army must be more than done next year for the Navy; and then in the following year, or possibly in the same year, if they are as alert and active and jealous of their interests as the present Secretary of War is, the same thing must be done for the branch of the service which has for the moment been overshadowed, and always in the way of increasing the cost to the people, always in the way of increased rank.

Mr. Chairman, be it understood that I am not making a plea for lieutenant generals. I am opposed to the suggestion of the Secretary of War. I am not making a plea for increased rank or increased numbers in the military service, because I do not believe in this Cassandra-like cry which has gone up from the officials in the departments; but I do object to statements which have gone out that the Navy is unfairly treated in comparison with the Army. It is a peculiar fact that under our law officers of the Navy are paid an additional 10 per cent under certain rather absurd conditions. Now, what do you suppose those conditions are? They are paid 10 per cent additional for going to sea, the very purpose for which they were created and commissioned. The reason for that was, of course, that the officers of the United States Army are given an increase of 10 per cent in pay for certain foreign service.

The officers of the Army when traveling receive 7 cents per mile mileage. The officers of the Navy when traveling receive 8 cents per mile mileage. Mr. PADGETT always sees to it that the sailor man gets a little the better of the soldier man.

As to the proportion of officers in each branch of the service in the higher ranks, the figures are illuminating. I probably shall not have time to go into it now, but I will print the figures in the RECORD.

Indeed I will insert the table which was prepared by Maj. Gen. Bell right here. They will fit as well here as elsewhere:

[Extract from statement of Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, Chief of Staff, before the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, Monday, Mar. 7, 1910.]

I am appending hereto a table which has been computed, showing the comparison between the line of the Army and the line of the Navy in the matter of distribution of rank among the commissioned grades. First, I have given the actual number in the several grades on October 1, 1909; second, the percentage in each of the several grades; and third, a comparison of these percentages. By examining the last two columns it will be seen that the Navy has, proportionately, five times as many rear admirals, senior grade, as the Army has major generals; two and one-half times as many rear admirals, junior grade, as the Army has brigadier generals; three times as many captains as the Army has colonels; four times as many commanders as the Army has lieutenant colonels; and twice as many lieutenant commanders as the Army has majors.

When an officer of the Navy is at sea and getting 10 per cent additional pay for the discharge of his particular duties he not only gets that additional pay, but he also gets certain other allowances of value. He gets mess and room steward service free, which officers of the Army do not get. His opportunities for expenditure are restricted more than is the case at any military post on land. Therefore he has an opportunity to accumulate, even on the same rate of pay, where an officer of the Army can not possibly make an accumulation.

Mr. Chairman, the view of the outside world as to the suggestion of creating officers of this very high rank in the Navy is reflected in a communication published in the New York Evening Post about February 17, signed by Park Benjamin, who I have learned is a graduate of the Naval Academy, but has devoted his life to other than naval work. He says:

VICE ADMIRALS AND SECOND FIDDLES.

To the EDITOR OF THE EVENING POST.

SIR: One of those perennial bills to create vice admirals in the Navy is now before Congress—the appointees to receive $11,000 per year, payable presumably out of the income tax. The aged and venerable argument in support of it is that in event of joint action between fleets of different nationalities the senior admiral would take direction of affairs, and inasmuch as the highest grade in our Navy is that of rear admiral the American commander might have to play second fiddle to a Haitian (for example) admiral, vice admiral, or even rear admiral if of longer service than himself. We have been talking about this now for over a century—ever since one David Porter, sometime of the U. S. S. Essex, insisted throughout the length and breadth of the Mediterranean that an American naval captain—the highest grade we then had—was the peer of any of the starred and gartered admirals of the K. C. B. variety that ever ran a press gang and a shipful of jailbirds, and thereupon proceeded somewhat ostentatiously to flout the "conventions" which had moved some of those gentry to try to boss him.

When a powerful strategic outgiving to the effect that if the canal were fortified we could get along with a smaller Navy changes itself spontaneously into an argument that because the canal is fortified the Navy ought to be increased, one gets distrustful of the lesser ratiocinations of the naval mind. One might perhaps advocate vice admirals on the analogy of archbishops, but in the latter case there is no danger of consequent spontaneous evolution of a demand for more battleships "to stop this absurdity, sir, of sending a vice admiral to sea with the paltry force of a rear admiral." And if the same arguments in favor of vice admirals should hereafter be applied to the creation of full admirals, more spontaneous evolution of the same sort might help along the present suspicion that an "adequate" navy means an inadequate income tax.

Like roses, all fleet commanders by any other names perform like functions. If the mere title is what we are bothered about, why not call them anything we please? Why not pass an act declaring that all rear admirals shall henceforward be named vice admirals, or, better yet, admirals, or, still better, exalted admirals? As there is no rank of exalted admiral in any foreign navy, it would then follow that every American commander would outrank every foreign commander, and at no expense at all we should find ourselves always and inevitably at the very apex of the masthead, and, in that assured superiority, indifferent to the mutual salaams of other people's warriors on the lower level of the crosstrees. Why deplete the income tax for what we can get in this simple way for nothing?

Besides, what is this turveydrop convention anyhow? Politeness is as admirable in its way among sea fighters as among plumbers; but when did good manners change to international naval subordination of such force and effect as to warrant its recognition by Congress as a hampering clog upon our naval doings? To hoist colors in the morning, to strike eight bells at noon, following the lead of a foreign flagship, may be deep-seated in the heart of courtesy, but if anything happened in Mexico which made trouble, and it were officially explained as due to Rear Admiral Fletcher being outranked by a British, German, or Japanese vice admiral, would we patiently accept that excuse?

Or would the Hon. Josephus Daniels be told that this country don't take orders from foreigners?

PARK BENJAMIN.

NEW YORK, February 16.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to certain difficulties that may be encountered even if we grant the request of the Navy Department for increased rank. This may not make them happy; it is conceivable that they may be embarrassed yet. I had compiled for the purpose of this discussion a list of the officers of various grades in the Army and Navy of the United States and of the high grades in other countries of the world. I find, Mr. Chairman, that in England there are 9 field marshals, a high military rank. Then there are 17 generals. The general is a rank that we have given to only four men in the history of the Government—Washington, Grant, Sheridan, and Sherman. It is reserved for men of unusual distinction and service. Now, in a joint operation the field marshal would certainly have ranking precedence over a vice admiral, and the feelings of the vice admiral might be hurt. It is an awful contingency, which we should provide against.

In the navy of Great Britain there are 3 admirals of the fleet, a sort of exalted or glorified admiral. They are followed by 12 admirals, while we have 1, and 22 vice admirals. Here is a chance for tremendous and continuing embarrassment. To circumvent it we must have a rank higher than admiral of the fleet.

In the army of Germany there are 19 field marshals, 60 generals, 119 lieutenant generals, and 243 major generals—abundant room for social embarrassment.

In the navy of Germany there are two high admirals. What would a mere American vice admiral do if he happened to be invited to a function at the royal or executive palace and ran into a German high admiral? Why, Mr. Chairman, I doubt if he would be permitted to come into the room until the high admiral had taken his seat. [Laughter.]

So if we are to create vice admirals to relieve this embarrassment when our people come in contact with naval officers abroad, why should we stop short of legislating until we make it impossible for this embarrassment to come to our officials? Why not devise some title superior to the German high admiral? Why not declare that this great Republic plays second fiddle to none, and have officers of a rank which can not possibly be equaled by that of any other Government?

Even Japan has admirals of the fleet and 11 admirals. It is not suggested that we should create more than the one admiral that we have; certainly admirals of the fleet have the same opening for embarrassment that confronts us now. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] does not know it, for it is certainly a better reason for war than any he has yet advanced.

And so on through, Mr. Chairman, and, with the permission of the House, I shall incorporate this table in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert the table in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 24, 1914.

Hon. JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SLAYDEN: I am sending herewith the data you requested, showing the relative proportion of grades in the United States and foreign armies and navies.

Very sincerely,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

[Subject: Relative proportion of grades in United States and foreign armies and navies.]

FEBRUARY 24, 1914.

H. LIGGETT,
Brigadier General, United States Army:

1. In accordance with instructions, tables are herewith appended giving—

First. Relative number of officers in various grades in United States Army and Navy.

Second. Relative number of officers in various grades of certain foreign armies and navies.

2. The instructions from the Chief of Staff also included investigations as to different occasions of joint military operations of the United States where Army and Navy took part with study as to whether these operations were hampered by questions of relative rank.

3. The study is not quite completed. In almost all cases where these joint operations have taken place the Army commander has been senior, and the few instances of lack of proper cooperation have been due to other causes.

4. On the other hand, there have been instances of perfect cooperation when the naval officer happened to be senior, even when the main operation was a land one and the Navy only auxiliary.

5. It can be definitely stated, however, that, generally speaking, in combined operations the rôle of the Navy, while of great importance, is auxiliary to that of the Army, and it is very desirable that the commanding officer of the Army be of equal grade, if not senior to the naval commander.

JOHN BIDDLE,
Colonel, General Staff,
Chief of War College Division.

It also shows that the Navy has 447 officers of field and general rank as compared with 384 for the Army.

NOTE.—The preceding table shows the line officers authorized by law for the line of the Army.

In addition to these there are the following line officers detailed in the staff departments These details create vacancies in the line which are filled by promotions:

NOTE.—It is believed the numbers given in the above tables are about as accurate as can be obtained from the sources at hand. Authorities were found to differ in some instances as to the strengths of the various armies and navies.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this proposed legislation has not been satisfactory even to the officers in the Navy. I read in the military summary, which appears once a week in the New York Evening Post, a statement to the effect that the bill recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, who had conferred with the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, was not regarded with favor by the officers of the Navy because, while it proposed to create six vice admirals, which means an additional rank, it proposed as a sop to the people to reduce the number of rear admirals.

Mr. Chairman, a few years ago we abolished by legislation—and most unwisely, I think—that good old title of commodore, which in the Navy corresponds to the rank of brigadier general in the Army. We did it in order to give the naval officer who had attained the rank of commodore the rank equivalent to that of major general in the Army. And in order to meet the cry of foolish people who oppose unnecessary expenses we divided the rear admirals into two classes, put half in the second class and half in the upper class.

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. For a brief question.

Mr. LEVY. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to restore the time-honored rank of commodore?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I believe the rank of commodore should be restored.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. How does the grade of rear admiral rank with that of officers of the Army?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It ranks with major general.

Now, it is proposed that if the grade of vice admiral is to be revived the bill prepared by the Navy Department ought to be amended in several respects. The article I refer to says that the amendment which meets with the least favor is that which changed the retirement age from 62 years to 65.

Well, I see no reason why they should not. Our Army and Navy retired lists are shamefully crowded to-day. The cost runs into an important number of millions of dollars each year.

The article says:

There is also a tendency among naval officers to criticize the provision of the Senate bill which, while authorizing 6 vice admirals, reduces the number of rear admirals from 18 to 12.

They want the increases, but bar all compensating reductions. They are like Commodore Vanderbilt, who said, "The people be damned."

Increase of rank means increase of pay, increase of expense to the public, but when it is proposed in order to provide for the demand for greater social status abroad that we should reduce a certain number, then objection is at once raised.

I understand the bill which the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the House [Mr. PADGETT], who is always more solicitous for the Navy than for the people who support it, proposed did not contemplate these reductions. I am advised—and bound to assume it is true, because he did offer such a bill—that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs sympathizes with this proposition of creating vice admirals. It is just like him. He seems impressed with the idea that he is charged with the duty of meeting the demands of the Navy Department and he does his duty, as he sees it, like a man. I am inclined to believe from an examination of his record during the last 12 or 14 years in the making up of naval appropriation bills, that he would still be for it, even though it involves the necessity of creating an additional number of lieutenant generals, which we do not need, which Congress said 4 or 5 years ago we should no longer have, but which he would gladly accept if it brought him an equal number of vice admirals.

How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I not only want to call attention on this occasion to some of the items in this omnibus private pension bill, but I have it in my mind to call attention to other pensions and to other forms of Government gratuities, and if I thought it was necessary to assure the committee that I am thoroughly sincere and in deep earnest I should certainly give the committee that assurance. What I am saying I am saying for this committee and not for any person or persons outside of this committee. If I am a demagogue, I am an honest demagogue, and I am not using the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or abusing your patience for the purpose of making any sort or semblance of political capital. In fact, none can be made by challenging the abuses of Government. They are so universal and so respectable that to assail them is to bring one's self into bad odor, and the man who wants to be on the front pages of the newspapers and in the good graces of the Government through its powers and potentialities should pursue a course directly contrary to that which I am pursuing, because we live here in Washington in the center of favoritism. Our temporary residence here is in the Capital of the Nation, itself the greatest pensioner on the pay roll of the Government. We begin by pensioning the taxpayers of this city with a pension of $7,000,000 a year, and then we slowly wind the descending scale down to Gen. SHERWOOD'S battle-scarred heroes of the Civil War. I shall not devote all of this hour to a discussion of these private pension bills, although I shall give them some little consideration as I pass, nor shall I give a lion's share of my remarks to the Government clerks, whose case I treated on a former occasion, but I wish to speak somewhat of another class of pensioners.

Before I do that, however, lest I may forget it, I desire to call attention to some of the things in this bill under discussion in order that members of the committee may look them up in time to vote upon them, if a vote should be had. If you will turn to page 54 of the report you will find the bill H. R. 2040, being the case of Charles N. Ashford, alias William Kenney, aged about 70 years, who served as a private in Company K, Ninety-seventh Regiment New York Infantry, from August 21, 1863, to October 19, 1864, and as a private in Company D, One hundred and fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, from February 20, 1862, to August 20, 1862.

I shall not now take the time to read all of this record, but I ask unanimous consent at this time that I may place all of his record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert the record referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The record referred to is as follows:

H. R. 2040. Charles N. Ashford, alias William Kenney, aged about 70 years, served as a private in Company K, Ninety-seventh Regiment New York Infantry, from August 21, 1863, to October 19, 1864, and as a private in Company D, One hundred and fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, from February 20, 1862, to August 20, 1862. From both services claimant was discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability. Claimant is now pensioned under the act of May 11, 1912, at $16.50 per month, and the face brief bears the following notation: "Recover from this amount not yet refunded provided for in issue of December 24, 1912, under general law."

Address, Grand Marais, Minn.

Board of surgeons, February 3, 1900, found hernia and evidence of bullet wound.

The following is quoted from the files of the Pension Bureau covering this case:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, September 9, 1912.

Mr. CHARLES N. ASHFORD,
Grand Marais, Cook County, Minn.

SIR: It appears from the records of this bureau that you were pensioned September 17, 1866, under the name of William Kenney, by certificate No. 71305, at the rate of $6 per month from March 20, 1866, for gunshot wound through right shoulder, based on your service as private, Company K, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry.

You were last paid to June 4, 1875, when your pension was terminated on the ground that your disability had ceased to exist.

On June 22, 1888, you were pensioned under the name of Charles N. Ashford by certificate No. 401091, at the rate of $4 per month from August 21, 1862, and $8 per month from April 3, 1884, for left inguinal hernia, based on your service as private, Company D, One hundred and fifth New York Volunteer Infantry. On July 20, 1895, your rate was increased to $10 per month from December 4, 1891, for left inguinal hernia, complete. On January 6, 1908, your certificate was reissued under the act of February 6, 1907, at the rate of $12 per month from May 14, 1907, and your pension under the general law was terminated.

You are informed that the allowance to you of pension by certificate No. 401091 was obtained through your fraudulent concealment of the fact that you and the former pensioner, William Kenney, were one and the same person.

It thus appears that you were paid during the period covered by your second term of military service, viz, from August 21, 1863, to October 19, 1864, which was in direct violation of the law; that from March 20, 1866, to June 4, 1875, you received two pensions covering the same period, also in direct violation of law, as section 4715, Revised Statutes of the United States, prohibits the payment to any person of more than one pension covering the same period. You are informed that your two certificates have been consolidated under certificate No. 71305, by which number it is now proposed to reissue under the act of February 6, 1907, at the rate of $12 per month as Charles N. Ashford, alias William Kenney, based on your service as private of Company K, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, One hundred and fifth New York Volunteer Infantry.

It further appears upon an inspection of all the papers in the consolidated claims that the allowance to you of pension for left inguinal hernia was obtained through misrepresentation, fraud, and false testimony, inasmuch as when your claim therefor was filed under the name of Charles N. Ashford you concealed your subsequent service as William Kenney in Company K, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, in which you had previously alleged the origin of the same hernia with evident intent to defraud, and further that the witnesses as to origin of the said disability in Company D, One hundred and fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, had no personal knowledge thereof, as shown by special examination, and, in addition thereto, it is shown by competent evidence that you were ruptured on one side (at least) prior to your first enlistment.

You are hereby notified that your certificate will reissue under the act of February 6, 1907, at the rate of $12 per month as hereinbefore set forth, and payments will be withheld until a sum accrues sufficient to reimburse the Government for the amount fraudulently obtained by you for left inguinal hernia, viz, $4 per month from August 21, 1862, $8 per month from April 3, 1884, and $10 per month from December 4, 1891, to January 19, 1900, inclusive.

You are informed that no recovery will be made of payments subsequent to the said date, as your claim under the act of June 27, 1890, filed on January 20, 1900, stands approved for allowance from the said date at $10 per month, no issue having been made thereunder, you having elected to remain a pensioner under the general law at the same rate for hernia for which through fraud on your part the bureau was led to believe you were legally entitled.

You are also informed that you are entitled to arrears of pension at the rate of $6 per month, for gunshot wound through right shoulder, from October 19, 1864, the date of your discharge from Company K, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, to March 20, 1866, the date your pension by certificate No. 71305 was made to commence, and in making provision for the proposed refundment the full amount thus accruing will be credited to you.

Under the provisions of the act of Congress of December 21, 1893, you will be allowed a period of 30 days from receipt hereof in which to make such answer as you deem proper and to show cause why the action above indicated should not be taken.

This letter should be returned with your reply, and the evidence, which must be duly sworn to before some officer authorized to administer oaths, should be inclosed in an envelope addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions and marked in the lower left-hand corner, "Board of review."

Very respectfully,

L. STILLWELL, Acting Commissioner.

It does not appear from the files of the Bureau of Pensions that any answer was interposed by the claimant to the foregoing decision of the Bureau of Pensions.

It is noted further in the files of the Pension Bureau on a slip from the chief of the law division to the chief of the board of review, May 16, 1912, that:

"The statute of limitations bars prosecution proceedings against pensioner, and no further action is deemed necessary in this division."

Dr. Frank B. Hicks describes the claimant to be afflicted with double inguinal hernia, large on both sides, and imperfectly retained by a truss, a crippled shoulder resulting from a gunshot wound, a leakage of one of the valves of the heart accompanied by unsteadiness of action and enlargement of heart, enlarged joints resulting from rheumatism. On account of the conditions described the claimant is wholly unfit for labor.

It appears that claimant is without means to support himself.

February 13, 1914. The Member introducing the bill has on this date submitted a statement, which follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1914.

COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIRS: In further reference to the bill I have introduced to grant a pension to Charles N. Ashford, I beg to state somewhat more fully the circumstances in his previous pension matters which the department interpreted as fraud. I spent a great deal of time on this matter, extending over a period of nearly three years, and I am thoroughly convinced there is not a symptom of fraud anywhere. I wish especially to emphasize the character, habits, and isolation of the man. For a great many years he has been living in Cook County, Minn., on the north shore of Lake Superior, not far from Canada. This place is 110 miles from the nearest railroad, has no telephone, no telegraph, and is completely isolated, excepting as boats stop at Grand Marais. He has been living a quiet, simple life. He has almost no education. He is a simple-minded, ignorant man.

The case was brought to my attention by the sheriff of the county, who informed me of the destitute condition of Mr. Ashford and his wife and of the fact that Mr. Ashford was receiving a ridiculously small pension. I communicated with other neighbors of Mr. Ashford and subsequently saw him. I went over all details and features of the case, and it was very apparent that he never had imagined he was guilty of any fraud or deceit. It must be borne in mind he never applied for two pensions at the same time. He never drew two pensions at the same time. The only way it happened that the difficulty of the two pensions arose was that when the department estimated his back pension the second time he applied they extended it back over a period in which he had received a pension from the former application. It will be noticed that even these two pensions added together only gave him $10 a month.

"He informs me that he never stated to anybody that he had never had any other service at either time he made the application. It appears that the application papers were made out in the usual form, which he signed, and doubtless in this application was a statement, not brought to his attention, that he had had no other service. He was shy about only one feature of his service. That one feature was the fact that he had enlisted under an assumed name, the name of his mother. He tells me that when he went to enlist he showed his discharge and was told by the recruiting sergeant that he could not reenlist under his right name because of the disability in the discharge, but that he could enlist under another name, and to do it. He accordingly did it.

"He has received no pension now for some time. He is in an extremely destitute condition, in a rigorous climate, and has dependent upon him an aged wife, who is in not much better health than he. He rendered the very best kind of service as a soldier. He met with two severe injuries on account of that service. He has not long to live, and certainly it seems to me that in these last few months of his life, or possibly two or three years, in which he most needs assistance, he should be treated in a spirit of fairness and equity by the Government to which he gave so much.

"Sincerely, yours,

C. B. MILLER."

It is recommended by this committee that the claimant be granted a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving, provided that no part of the pension herein granted shall be withheld by the United States or claimed by the United States on account of any pension heretofore received from the said United States by said Charles N. Ashford.

Mr. DIES. I wish now to refer to some remarks of Acting Commissioner L. Stillwell, of the Bureau of Pensions, and to call attention particularly to one or two extracts found in the above letter dated Washington, September 9, 1912. The letter is addressed to Mr. Charles N. Ashford at Grand Marais, Cook County, Minn. He says:

You are informed that the allowance to you of pension by certificate No. 401091 was obtained through your fraudulent concealment of the fact that you and the former pensioner, William Kenney, were one and the same person.

It thus appears that you were paid during the period covered by your second term of military service, viz, from August 21, 1863, to October 19, 1864, which was in direct violation of the law; that from March 20, 1866, to June 4, 1875, you received two pensions covering the same period, also in direct violation of law, as section 4715, Revised Statutes of the United States, prohibits the payment to any person of more than one pension covering the same period.

A little further in the report I find it stated in this letter to Mr. Ashford, as follows:

It further appears upon an inspection of all the papers in the consolidated claims that the allowance to you of pension for left inguinal hernia was obtained through misrepresentation, fraud, and false testimony, inasmuch as when your claim therefor was filed under the name of Charles N. Ashford you concealed your subsequent service as William Kenney in Company K, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, in which you had previously alleged the origin of the same hernia with evident intent to defraud, and further that the witnesses as to origin of the said disability in Company D, One hundred and fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, had no personal knowledge thereof, as shown by special examination, and, in addition thereto, it is shown by competent evidence that you were ruptured on one side (at least) prior to your first enlistment.

Then, further:

You are hereby notified that your certificate will reissue under the act of February 6, 1907, at the rate of $12 per month as hereinbefore set forth, and payments will be withheld until a sum accrues sufficient to reimburse the Government for the amount fraudulently obtained by you for left inguinal hernia, viz, $4 per month from August 21, 1862, $8 per month from April 3, 1884, and $10 per month from December 4, 1891, to January 19, 1900, inclusive.

Passing along from the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, I read from the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

It does not appear from the files of the Bureau of Pensions that any answer was interposed by the claimant to the foregoing decision of the Bureau of Pensions.

It is noted further in the files of the Pension Bureau, on a slip from the chief of the law division to the chief of the board of review, May 16, 1912, that—

"The statute of limitations bars prosecution proceedings against pensioner, and no further action is deemed necessary in this division."

In other words, in order that the committee may clearly understand the situation of this case, here is a man who has drawn from the Government illegally at least, and the Commissioner of Pensions says fraudulently, the sum of $4,196 to which he was not entitled. For having done that he could have been prosecuted under the criminal laws of the the United States, but no prosecution was sought or had, and under our liberal pension laws, liberally interpreted by the Bureau of Pensions, this man was not only forgiven for the criminal offense, but he was continued on the pension roll at $16.50 a month, provided, however, that that $16.50 a month should not be paid to him until there was sufficient to cover back into the Treasury the sum of $4,196, which he had fraudulently and illegally withdrawn from the funds of the United States. That is the situation. Here is your man who, according to the Pension Bureau, has defrauded the Government out of more than $4,000, and the recommendation of the Pension Committee is:

It is recommended by this committee that the claimant be granted a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving, provided that no part of the pension herein granted shall be withheld by the United States or claimed by the United States on account of any pension heretofore received from the said United States by said Charles N. Ashford.

Now, let us see just what this means. This man owes the Government of the United States more than $4,000 on account of a fraudulent abstraction from the Treasury of that amount. The Committee on Pensions wipes that out, overrules the Pension Bureau—in fact, it administers a rebuke to the Commissioner of Pensions for having enforced the law—and grants a pension of $30 a month to the malefactor, a pension annuity which is worth at least between $4,000 and $5,000. So here is the reward in a lump sum—first, in a defalcation of over $4,000, which is wiped out, and, second, of a pension annuity worth more than $4,000, making a total of about $8,000 to $10,000—a gracious gift of this Government in a private pension bill to a man who successfully defrauded the Government of the United States. It is worth while for the members of the committee to also bear in mind that when you pass one of these omnibus private pension bills you are passing it for a very large amount of money. It is true the gentleman from Wisconsin in charge of the bill says that the annual payment under this private pension bill is only $43,000 a year, but the actuarial value of $43,000 would be between $400,000 and $500,000, and this is but one of the bimonthly pension bills passed. I believe they say it is the smallest one that we have passed. This very small one will cost the Government, according to the actuarial tables, from $400,000 to $500,000 a year, and the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill that it carries only $43,000 a year should always be coupled with the other fact that it is an actuarial debit against the Government of half a million dollars.

I want to invite the attention of the committee to a statement made by the chairman of one of the great committees of this House the other day. If that statement had been made by some irresponsible person, I doubt if I would have called your attention to it, but having been made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the great supply committee of the House, I feel that it is worthy of more than passing attention. Mr. FITZGERALD stated on the 24th of February as follows:

At that time a request was made by the Department of Labor to authorize the Secretary of Labor to purchase three automobiles—a seven-passenger touring car for himself, at $4,500; an electric runabout for the use of himself and others, for $2,500; and an automobile truck. The committee declined to include that authority in the bill, based upon the fact authority had never been given to any of the departments to purchase automobiles for the Secretary or others connected with the department. In some way or other the information got noised abroad that such a request had been made, and innumerable Members of this House served notice upon the committee that they would not tolerate such a situation. The authority was not given, and yet it appears that during this session of Congress an automobile has been purchased for the personal use of the Secretary of Labor.

I would be ashamed of myself if I called the attention of this committee to the attempted raid upon the Treasury of $8,000 by a poor 70-year-old soldier out in Minnesota if I did not call their attention to the abstraction of $7,000 from the contingent fund of one of the departments of the Government in violation of the laws of this country by a Cabinet minister.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman understand there has been $7,000 abstracted from the appropriations for the purchase of an automobile by the Secretary of the Department of Labor?

Mr. DIES. Well, in that statement I had reference to his application for the use of $7,000. I do not know what he actually paid for the automobile. What did he pay for it, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Sixteen hundred dollars for a second-hand automobile. It was not a limousine, and, of course, I do not know whether it was even worth that much or not. I wish to state to the gentleman the Secretary did not have any rig, the same as other Cabinet officers. He did not have the money to expend for his department that is actually expended for rigs and vehicles by the Cabinet officers.

Mr. DIES. I am glad my friend from Illinois calls attention to this. I do not wish to say $7,000 when $1,600 is the truth; all I know is what the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations has placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not want to do an injustice to this Cabinet minister. I can say with some pride that I served in this House for a number of years with that gentleman. I think he is an honest man, I think he was a good legislator, and I think probably he is making a good Cabinet minister, but no man in this Government is great enough—no man should ever become great enough—to violate the laws of this country and usurp the functions of this body to appropriate the revenues of the Government for its maintenance.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to state further my information is that the Secretary of Labor was given from some other department a pair of crippled-up horses and rig that could not be used, but he did manage to trade them in, and that all the money that was expended was about some $800. That is my information.

Mr. DIES. I am glad to have my friend from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] put that in the RECORD also. The Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor did not have any right or any business, in the first instance, to have a crippled-up team to drive around at the public expense. They got it in tacit violation of the laws of the country, and they ought not to have used the money of the people for that purpose.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield further?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman contend that they got these horses and rigs in violation of the law?

Mr. DIES. Whenever they use them for something else than the public business of this Government, when they use them to attend social functions, when they use them to go around the city of Washington, they are misappropriating the funds of the people of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not want to say anything in reply to the gentleman to-day, but I will probably have something to say in regard to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has said and in regard to what others have said at a later date.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman will find nothing more forcible to say than what the House of Representatives said in 1910 when we took the automobile away from the Speaker, and we voted to take it away from the Vice President of the United States, when the gentleman who is now the present Secretary of Labor voted with me and with the present Speaker of this House to take the automobiles away from the Republican Speaker and the then Vice President of the United States. Our opponents said then it was peanut politics. I do not believe it was peanut politics then and I do not believe it is peanut politics now. I believe what the then minority leader, the present Speaker of this House, said upon that occasion, and I want to call your attention to his words:

I will tell you what I am in favor of, and I do not think I am demagogic. I am in favor of taking these conveyances, paid for at public expense, away from every Government official in the city of Washington—I do not care who he is. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let them pay their own traveling expenses, like Representatives do. They are no better than we are. If they are not drawing salaries enough, let us honestly and courageously raise these salaries. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am just this kind of a Democrat. I believe if the thing is wrong when a Republican Speaker of the House does it and a Republican Vice President does it, and the Republican Cabinet officers do it, it is wrong for a Democratic Speaker and a Democratic Vice President and Democratic Cabinet ministers to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. DIES. For a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is the statement that the gentleman read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. DIES. The statement I read is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 11, 1910.

Mr. DONOVAN. I mean the statement in regard to the automobile—the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DIES. You will find that on page 4123 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. DONOVAN. Of February 24?

Mr. DIES. Of February 24.

Mr. DONOVAN. And it says there it is $7,500?

Mr. DIES. A request for $7,000 worth.

Mr. DONOVAN. And at that time it was not contradicted? The statement went without contradiction at the time it was made? Is that true?

Mr. DIES. Oh, yes; as I understand it. And if gentlemen care to become reminiscent and get the full historical value out of this vote had in this House four years ago when we stripped the Speaker of an automobile and tried to strip the Vice President of such a vehicle, he will find, if I mistake not, that every Democrat then in Congress voted to take the automobile away from the Speaker and Vice President.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me, in connection with the question asked by the gentleman from Connecticut, to say that, so far as I am concerned, I know nothing about what the request was that was made.

Mr. DIES. I think I can answer the gentleman's question quickly. He made application for three automobiles—a seven-passenger touring car, a $2,500 electric runabout, and an automobile truck—and Congress refused to give them to him. And then, according to the statement of my friend from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], on his own account he purchased an automobile for $1,600. That is the whole thing.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, another question, if the gentleman will allow.

Mr. DIES. I yield just for a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. Why should he ask Congress for an appropriation for those different automobiles when, according to the gentleman from Illinois, he was already buying them without authority?

Mr. DIES. My friend can get that information from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] when he occupies the floor, as he says he will do, hereafter.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that this is a Republic. I am one of those who fervently hope and pray that the time will come when it will be the simple, honest, unostentatious Republic of our fathers. I am one of those who believe that all of our efforts made extravagantly at the expense of the people of this country to imitate the courts of Europe and the palaces of princes and kings are the sure and never-failing signs of decay in this Republic. If that which I have read from the pages of history is to be believed, if all of the experience of mankind in all ages of the world is worth a cent, then when a republic becomes extravagant, when it begins to try to put on the togs of royalty, extravagance, pomp, and ceremony, it is tottering to its fall.

I was glad that my colleague from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] called attention to a bill that recently passed another body at the other end of the Capitol, and will shortly be in this body, and will pass, of course, as all such measures toadying and imitating the princes and potentates of Europe always pass—a bill to create 6 vice admirals. Do you know that we have 18 rear admirals on the active list? We have 18 jobs that a rear admiral is comfortable in.

Mr. TRIBBLE. How many on the retired list?

Mr. DIES. I find from the last examination made 210 rear admirals are on a pension of $5,000 a year, I believe, although I would not undertake to state the figures accurately. But I think they are on a pension of $5,000 to $6,000 a year; that is to say, here you have 18 jobs known as rear-admiral jobs, and you have 210 ex-rear admirals on the pension roll of the Government at from $5,000 to $6,000 a year.

Now, it is apparent to every man that we have used the office of rear admiral through which to push men who are ready to retire, or ready for retirement by the plucking board, in order that their rate of pension might be greater. I understand that men no older than 38 years of age have been pushed through this rear admiralty into the fat pension which rear admirals on the retired list receive. There are 18 rear admirals.

I understand that they take the liberty, too, to buy horses and carriages, to be charged up to your unsophisticated constituents. I understand that at times there is danger of insurrection and mutiny in the ranks of rear admirals and generals as to whose wives and daughters shall drive the bays or drive the grays, paid for by your unsuspecting constituents. [Laughter.]

Now, we are to have six vice admirals, whose pay is to be increased from about $9,000 to, I believe, about $11,000, and when that comes to pass you will be pushing captains and commodores and rear admirals through this vice admiralty gate on into retirement at a larger and a fatter pension than ever before.

It was with a great deal of interest, Mr. Chairman, that I read the discussion of this momentous measure in the other body. I found there that we were in a very sad dilemma, indeed, because we had no vice admirals in this country; that actually our rear admirals and our captains when visiting abroad, entertaining princes and other captains at the expense of your unsuspecting constituents and breaking champagne bottles for their delectation and entertainment—we were in a sad dilemma because we did not have any vice admirals to get around ahead of other functionaries abroad when the punchbowl was opened. [Laughter.] Therefore it was necessary that we should also have vice admirals, in order that when tea was being served our admirals and captains would not have to follow behind the admirals and captains of Haiti and Santo Domingo and Colombia and Germany and France, and so on.

There is one difficulty, Mr. Chairman, that our vice admirals will find when we create the office for them. I understand from what seems to be very good information, a part of it personal, that down in Santo Domingo and in Haiti and Colombia and those other little pee-wee republics they have little tubs called gunboats, with little guns on them about as long as your arm, and they are manned by full admirals. [Laughter.] Now, what will become of those vice admirals that we may create when they come in contact with the full admirals of Haiti and Santo Domingo and Colombia, with their little tubs sailing around? Why, as soon as we have gone to the expense that we shall be subject to in dignifying our vice admirals, those vice admirals, with their gold lace, will have to get behind the admiral of Haiti as that distinguished Senegambian goes up to get his part of the punch or his part of the tea. [Laughter.] So, after all, in our endeavors to imitate the Imperial Governments of Europe, past and present, in our mighty haste to get away from the glories of the simple Republic of our fathers, we may be creating vice admirals, only to be outranked by the admirals from those little Republics.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. TRIBBLE. When we went down there and shot the Spaniards all to pieces, did we have any vice admirals?

Mr. DIES. Oh, no. You do not need vice admirals and lace and champagne when you come to a contest upon the field or upon the sea in behalf of your flag and the liberties of the country. They do not need any vice admirals for that. They do not contend that. A man can fight as well being a captain of a ship as if he were four hundred times an admiral of a vessel. What they are anxious to get it for is in order that they themselves and their families may take social rank in the courts and capitals of Europe.

Do you know I feel sorry for my friend the Secretary of Labor in his ambition to have a seven-seated touring car and a $2,500 electric? Because we are setting a mad pace in this simple republican capital. Not long ago I heard it said that the reason why we had to put the clerks on the pension roll was that Congressmen, who get $7,500 a year, were setting such a pace, and the clerks were trying to keep up with them, that they could not live on the modest salary the Government gave them and they had to get a pension. No doubt many of the Congressmen are having a good deal of trouble in keeping up with the Cabinet ministers, and no doubt the Cabinet ministers are having a great deal of trouble in keeping up with the ambassadors from foreign countries, and no doubt the ambassadors from foreign countries are having a great deal of trouble in keeping up with our multimillionaires all over this country. [Laughter.]

No; when a man undertakes to indulge one of these limousine, or "limozeen"—which is it [laughter]—one of these limousine habits with a Ford salary [laughter] he has either got to come to Congress for more money or else he has got to take it out of the contingent fund in defiance of the edict of Congress. [Laughter.] And then when it gets down a little lower in the scale and the fellow with the Ford disposition and the wheelbarrow salary [laughter] gets into trouble he wants the Government to give him a pension, to be paid by all the taxpayers of the country.

You know we have gotten into the habit in the last day or two—and I am afraid the mania is going to grow—of crying, "Let slip the dogs of war in Mexico!" I warn you, my friends, if you go into Mexico, you write pensions, two billions or three billions in pensions, as soon as you get out of Mexico. If there is anything in this world that ought to make a man who loves the common people of this country stop and consider before he talks war with Mexico, or war with anybody, it ought to be the pension roll that is to follow, and the admirals and the vice admirals and the commodores and the generals and the lieutenant generals that follow in the wake of war.

Another thing you want to consider when you think about war with Mexico is that when you unfurl the American flag in Mexico it will stay there until doomsday book is opened. There will not be any Cubanizing of Mexico when the Army of the United States goes down there, if unfortunately it ever goes, but it will become a State or a number of States of this Union, because it is contiguous territory.

I am awfully sorry, Mr. Chairman, that we did not have statesmanship enough to confine our activities and ambitions to this hemisphere. Do you know that this Government that we live in, this continental United States, bounded on the east by the Atlantic, on the west by the Pacific, on the north by the snows of Canada, and on the south by tropical South America, was and is about the only spot on God's good earth where a real, democratic Republic could be established and maintained? We had no neighbors to distress us. There was no need for us to have a large standing Army, such as France, Germany, Russia, and England have. There was no need that we should blacken the ocean with a great galaxy of portentous warships.

If we had done as the Father of his Country admonished us, if we had followed the simple teachings of the old democratic fathers and stayed at home and attended to our own business upon this hemisphere, we could have lived in a free government, in a Republic, as long as we live, and we could have bequeathed this immortal legacy to our children when we were here no more. We were not satisfied to do that. We had to sail away over 8,000 miles into the Pacific and take a white elephant by the tail over there, and we have never been able to turn it loose. We are over in Hawaii and we are down in South America, and the reason we are there and the reason for all these activities can be traced back to your admirals and your generals, who, from the day of the creation of civil government to this hour, have been anxious to magnify the importance of their trade in order that they might wax glorious out of war. I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, if our generals and would-be generals, if our vice admirals and would-be vice admirals, would cease this eternal talk of war, if they would cease this eternal meddling and intermingling with the politics of Europe, there never would be any necessity for this free Republic to endanger her liberty and happiness with wars, great armies, or great navies.

But that is not what they are going to do. The great generals live by war. Great admirals can only shine when they level the brown guns of destruction at enemies. And you notice every time one of these bills comes up to appropriate for more powder, more lead, more armor plate, and more battleships these restless Napoleons and Nelsons get busy, and they cloud the horizon with prospects of war. They have made us believe that the little men over in Japan, that little bit of an island, with a few acres, half the time starving for the rice with which to feed their children—Japan, with annual agricultural wealth less than one-tenth of that of the United States—is going to declare war against us. They have taken this little Japanese soldier and hero and shaken him at us to make us buy more battleships, to make us believe we are in imminent danger of having a yellow peril come over here and drive us into the sea. I remember one time a Member of Congress said that in 12 months the United States would be flat on its back and Japan would have its yellow hands upon our white throats. He wanted two battleships, or was it six?

Mr. HOWARD. Four.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, what a beautiful chance we have to maintain a Republic in this country. Do you tell me that we ought to forget all the advantages of our geographical situation? Do you tell me that we ought to have a great Army and to build a great fleet for the protection of the liberty of this hemisphere? Why, if we would just stay at home and attend to our own domestic affairs, we would not be in danger of trouble from any power in the world. I will tell you. Do you remember a short while ago we almost had an insurrection in this country as to whether Senators or members of the Cabinet should give the glad hand to the President first? Senators said, "I want to shake his hand first"; and Cabinet ministers said, "It is our right to shake his hand first"; and for the time being clouds lowered upon our peaceful country, lest there might be war between a branch of the Government and functionaries created in the Government. [Laughter.] A little later we got that all cooled down, and we had no necessity for battleships on that account; and then a serious question arose as to whether the wives of certain dignitaries should call upon the wives of certain Congressmen, and we nearly came to war about that. [Laughter.] Happily, my friends, this awful specter of social conflict has vanished from the horizon; but now some little dignitary down in some country is taking tea and getting to the punch bowl ahead of our rear admirals, and we have got to have a law to raise our rear admirals up to vice admirals in order that they may better perform their social functions. You know we ride around here in these limousines and in these seven-seated touring cars, paid for out of the taxes wrung from toil in this country, and we run over the fellow with the little Ford car; and the man walking on foot, the pedestrian, he has just simply got to hear one honk of the honk-honk and run for his life; and the most ridiculous feature of it all is that when one of these Cabinet ministers alights from his vehicle, paid for by the people, drawn by two snorting bay horses, or alights from his limousine, paid for by the people of this country, he dusts himself and says, "Let the people rule." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, this patient will either get better or get worse. If a man to-day, in defiance of Congress, can take $1,600 out of the contingent fund appropriated by Congress for the legitimate functions of government to carry on the government of the people, to-morrow he can take $10,000 as well; and if the Secretary of Labor can buy himself an automobile, then the Fish Commissioner can buy himself an automobile. If one of the dignitaries of this Government can take the funds of the people taken from their taxes to buy an automobile, he can buy a yacht upon the same principle. And if any of our Cabinet ministers or Fish Commissioners or the Commissioner of Education wants to do it he can use this precedent to buy himself an airship.

Oh I wish, Mr. Chairman, that we might return to the simple democracy under which this Government grew so great and so grand. I wish it might be that no man would feel embarrassed in this country if he took his foot in his hand and walked up the Avenue, as I myself do and many of you do. I wish a man could just simply go along and live within his income, without a brass band and a panoply of glory and peacock feathers, without having his wife or his daughters or his children constantly pointing to some other man who is setting a breakneck pace. And of all the people on this earth that ought not to do it, the servants of the taxpayers of this country ought not. If a man has $100,000,000, it is bad enough that he should live so extravagantly as to drive his poor neighbor to despair, but it is too bad, indeed, when the meek and lowly servants of the people drive poor folks to despair with the splendor of their equipages. I would not be ashamed to see our Secretary of Labor walk up and down the streets of Washington. Why, do you know just a few months ago, on account of the terrible pace that somebody has been setting here in Washington, we heard another Cabinet officer, the great Secretary of State, exclaim in anguish that he could not live on a thousand dollars a month. I am sure he told the truth when he said it. I have great faith in our commoner.

Somebody has made the pace so high in this Capital of our Republic, somebody has set the gauge at so exalted an altitude in this citadel, that one of our servants, the great commoner of the Republic, can not live in this city in befitting style for $12,000 a year. It looks to me, Mr. Chairman, like it is a good time for Cabinet ministers, Senators, and Congressmen to set for the people in this city and Nation the example of old-time simplicity and democracy. [Applause.] If a Cabinet minister can take a given sum of money in defiance of Congress and buy himself an automobile, what example and what lesson does that teach to the smaller officer, the clerk, and dignitaries around this city? What is the example to a little $1,500 or $2,000 clerk who handles funds and papers and affairs of the Government? Is it not saying to him, "Mr. Clerk, you are authorized to pad your expense bills when traveling for the Government; you are authorized to put in $2 where you spend $1 on the affairs of the Nation, because our Cabinet ministers are settling their accounts by taking money out of the contingent fund for the purchase of automobiles"? If this is peanut politics, make the most of it. In my humble judgment it is simply old-fashioned democracy, simply old-time honest dealing with our constituents, to say that we will not allow this thing to continue.

If ever my cheeks were mantled with the blushes of shame, it was when I read in the RECORD that every Democrat voted for the taking of an automobile from a Republican Speaker and a Republican Vice President, and that we have not raised our voice against the same things when Democrats occupy these powerful positions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began reading the bill, and read as follows:

The name of William C. Barnes, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many private bills are included in this omnibus bill?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. One hundred and thirty-seven items of pension are contained in this omnibus bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman know how much of an increase is involved?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Seventeen thousand six hundred and fifty-eight dollars only. The bill carries $43,464.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Seventeen thousand and odd dollars per year?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary A. Elderkin, widow of William H. Elderkin, late of Battery L, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, between lines 6 and 7, add a new paragraph, as follows:
"The name of Mary Van Duyne Evans, widow of Henry W. Evans, late of Company E, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would not offer this amendment but for the circumstances surrounding it. This bill was introduced last fall to grant a pension to this very aged woman. The subcommittee before the last bill passed agreed to it, and then the committee agreed to it, and the clerk inadvertently left it out of the bill. The woman is almost 80 years of age, poor, has no property, and as some of these other bills may not get through both Houses, in view of these facts, I offer it as a matter of justice to this poor old woman. The committee has dealt with it and agreed to it, and, as I say, it was left out by the clerk through inadvertence. It does not violate any wholesome rule as to the matter of granting pensions.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, as is well known by Members of this House, the Committee on Invalid Pensions has invariably opposed all amendments to different items contained in the omnibus private pension bills. To allow amendments to be adopted to the bill promiscuously would be establishing a dangerous precedent. We feel, however, that in this case, in view of the facts stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma, which are exactly correct, that the bill was passed upon by the special examiner and also by the full committee favorably, and was only omitted from the bill by inadvertence or oversight of the clerk. We are willing under these circumstances and conditions to insert this amendment. If it had been under other conditions we certainly would have opposed it.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. PALMER. Is this the last omnibus pension bill for this session?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I do not think so, but I am speaking only for myself.

Mr. PALMER. Is it not true that there are a large number of other cases which have been passed upon by the examiner and the subcommittee; and if this amendment goes into this bill, why should not the others?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. This case has been passed upon favorably by the full committee, and it was only omitted from this bill through the oversight of the clerk. Perhaps there are some bills ready for the committee and passed upon by the examiner which are to go into the next bill.

Mr. PALMER. Is this the only case passed upon by the full committee that is not in this omnibus bill?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Yes; and the clerk was directed to put it in, but through an oversight it was omitted.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, of course I have no objection to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma being added to the number of pensions included in this bill. But I have a case that is in a better status than the case of my good friend from Oklahoma.

I have in Atlanta a very dear old friend 76 years of age. He followed the gallant and distinguished Gen. Sherwood four long years, and in the last Congress there was a bill passed through the House allowing him $40 a month. He is in want, he is suffering excruciating agony from wounds received in the war. The House in the last Congress acted on the bill. The other day I received a notice from the clerk after we had furnished additional evidence for this Congress when he was in a worse condition than he was last year, because he is more helpless and his diseased body has grown weaker—I got a notice from the clerk the other day, a very nice notice, a notice that he was turned down, that the committee had decided that they would not give old Capt. Aleck Mattison, who followed the flag four long years under the gallant Gen. Sherwood, a pension.

The old man can hardly walk a step, and I am going to say, if this amendment goes in, and I give notice to the committee now, then this old man's amendment is going in also. I am going to put everybody on notice of that because that is a bill that has passed this House without any objection. It went over to the Senate and some Senator took it out of the bill to favor some other man, probably from his State or his section of the country, and he probably said:

Here is old Capt. Mattison, who can not walk a step, who is absolutely in want, but he is from the State of Georgia, and as there are not many pensioners down there we will give this pension that belongs to him by virtue of the opinion of the House of Representatives to somebody else.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. GOULDEN. What reasons were assigned for the adverse action by the committee?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know of any reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. There ought to have been some mighty good reason.

Mr. HOWARD. Except to say that they did not act upon it favorably.

Mr. GOULDEN. There ought to be some better reason than that.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, of course. I will ask the gentleman from New York to move to strike out the last word, so that I may continue with the explanation.

Mr. GOULDEN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I will state to the gentleman from New York that his old soldier is now drawing $30 a month, but he has to have an attendant. He is helpless, and I will say to his credit—I do not care where he came from, I do not care from what State, though he hails from the State of Ohio—that there is not a better citizen in the State of Georgia than Alexander Mattison, and there never was a braver soldier in the Union Army than he, and he bears the scars of the battles on his body. He is in need, and it is not right for this committee or any other committee that is dealing with these pension bills that expects to deal with them justly, as I know you gentlemen have tried to do, to deprive this old man of that to which he is entitled—and this House has once said he was entitled to it—simply because some pension examiner says "no."

Mr. GOULDEN. I agree with what my friend says, and I should like to ask the members of the committee present for an explanation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes. I would like to ask some member of the committee for an explanation upon this subject.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the gentleman refer to this bill referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, as one member of that committee, I do not have any recollection of this bill ever coming before the committee, and I suppose it has in fact not yet come before the committee. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] understands, of course, that there is an examiner sent here by the Pension Bureau, whose duty it is to examine all of these bills before they come to the committee, and he makes a report upon each bill. He often turns down bills, and writes the notes to the Members interested, such, I presume, as the gentleman from Georgia received, indicating that he has rejected the bills. Such bills may, however, go to the whole committee if the members interested so desire, and the gentleman from Georgia, if he desires, may have his bill considered by the committee and can appear before the committee, and I assure him that the committee tries in all such cases to do justice.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in the last session of Congress the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] were both very courteous to me about this bill for this old gentleman, and I went so far as to have photographs taken of this old man's body in order that you could see for yourselves, and when this evidence was presented it was overwhelming. The committee readily acceded to the request of giving him this extra sum. I will say we passed the bill through this House without any dissenting voice. There was no question about it. It went to the Senate, and for some unaccountable reason it was eliminated from the bill in the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. I remember that bill at the last session. I remember very well the gentleman from Georgia talking to me about it.

Mr. HOWARD. In this session not only did I supplement the evidence that was adduced before the committee at the last session with a certificate of the attending physician that this old man was in much more precarious condition now than he was then, but I introduced affidavits of reputable and high-toned citizens saying that he was in absolute want. If he does not get a pension at this time in this Congress, he will not need any pension, because he will soon answer the last roll and go hence to reap the reward of the faithful.

Mr. GOULDEN. Did the gentleman's bill this year carry the same amount it did in the last Congress?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then there is a good reason somewhere for its being overlooked; otherwise it is open to criticism, and as a comrade of Capt. Mattison I am ready to join hands with my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to remedy it.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not want to deprive my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] of getting this old woman this pension.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. This woman is not getting anything and the gentleman's pensioner is getting $30 a month.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand. I do not want to put the gentleman's bill in the same category as mine, but if anyone ever introduced a pension claim on the floor of this House that has merit in it this is one of them; and now if you deprive this old man of this money for two or three months longer or four or five months longer, then he will not need it. It ought to be put in as an amendment to this bill, and I do not care whether you have any ironclad rule or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. As I stated a moment ago, the committee will be glad to have the bill referred to by my friend from Georgia presented to the committee, and it will be glad to have him appear for the purpose of presenting the facts in the case.

I think it is practically an impossibility for this House to undertake to pass upon these individual pension bills, and if we ever go into that at all it will mean that it will defeat nearly all pension bills or else it will take all of the time of the House. The committee is for the purpose of trying to relieve the House from this onerous work that is necessary in going into an investigation of each of these pension bills.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will yield.

Mr. HOWARD. I would not have made this statement had it not been that practically the same Committee on Invalid Pensions that exists now existed when it heard all of the evidence before and the committee has passed on it.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are seven or eight new men on the committee at this time.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I do not think that makes much difference with a meritorious case; but, as a matter of fact, the Committee on Invalid Pensions passed on it, and, as I understand from my good friend from Indiana, it was a unanimous report of the subcommittee that had it in charge.

Mr. RUSSELL. I remember it.

Mr. HOWARD. For that reason I can see no harm that could be done in putting it in.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is just this: There must be something in the facts of the case that the Senate did not understand or else the Senate would not have stricken it out or the examiner would not have turned it down. I do not know what the trouble is, but from the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia this is a first-class case, and the committee would unhesitatingly allow the man an increase of his pension.

Mr. HOWARD. If that is true, I hope the gentleman will not object to my offering this amendment. I am quite ready to say that if he does not get it now it will not do him any good.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the committee ought to pass upon the evidence. There must be something in the case we do not now understand or else why did the Senate turn it down or the examiner turn it down?

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask my friend from Missouri if he does not think the Senate turned it down because he is now pensioned at the rate of $30 a month on a special bill? Perhaps some rule prevails in the body at the other end of the Capitol on this subject that might justify its action.

Mr. RUSSELL. They would do that unless they thought his condition was such that that amount was not sufficient for him.

Mr. HOWARD. That is why the examiner did not send it up. That is what he said in his stereotyped answer, that he is drawing $30 a month.

Mr. RUSSELL. They thought probably from the statement made that is all he is entitled to under the rules.

Mr. HOWARD. I see right here in the bill which the committee reported one item paying a man $40 a month and another $50 a month, and the facts in every one of those cases are not any worse, so far as physical disability and suffering are concerned and absolute need of care.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman what the financial situation is in this case? Is the man in destitute circumstances?

Mr. HOWARD. Absolutely. That is all shown here in the report. Had he not been destitute, I am frank to say to the gentleman, I have so little patience with private pensions I would not have introduced the bill. If he had not been one of the fighting soldiers of the Union Army, one who really served his country from a patriotic standpoint, and if he had not been in want I would not have introduced the bill.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that this matter involves a principle; it is an entirely different proposition from a matter of facts. Now, the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions are placed at a disadvantage in these cases when they are not in possession of the papers.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I am satisfied that if this House is going to amend these bills on the floor of this House, that the day of private legislation is at an end, and I want to say I do not believe this House is ready to turn down the men who have given up all their time in investigating these claims, and the men who are detailed from the Pension Office who are learned in the pension law and who go over these cases——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for just a minute? Since this is based on the proposition of $30 against nothing, and that we ought not to amend these bills, I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, that ends the whole situation.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Margaret McGrath, widow of Jeremiah McGrath, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want to say that I shall never present a claim, whether meritorious or not, while I am in this House, based upon the granting of another meritorious claim. It is a spirit of retaliation that ought not to go in any class of legislation. I would not have offered this amendment awhile ago but for the facts as they occurred. I realized the situation, because I am on the Pension Committee. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to one thing. I have on the subcommittee some Southern States and some Northern States. I notice that every Northern State had their evidence in. The Southern States had filed only a haphazard kind of evidence. The facts are that in the South a great many of the public men teach the people that anybody can get a pension, and I am busy telling my people that it requires evidence to get a pension. The northern people have understood that. I believe if some of these fellows would get better evidence they would get their bills through.

Now, I get pretty nearly all the applications for pensions from my State, because I am the most open in advocating pensions of any man in the Democratic Party in my State. I am telling them every day that they have got to get evidence, and I am willing to grant anybody a pension who is poor and worthy, who was a soldier, and did not desert.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes; if my time is not out.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will except the "gentleman from the tenth district of Kentucky" from his reflection on southern Members for their failure to properly prepare their cases.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I said "some of the Southern States."

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; I know; but I want to make it clear that it does not apply to me, and to say to the gentleman that I have already had passed all of the special bills the committee would allow me up to date and a good many more cases, complete and approved by the examiner, and on the waiting list, ready for the action of the committee, as several of my colleagues on the committee who are present will bear me witness.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will say that from a State close to Kentucky we know of a claim brought in, and there is absolutely no proof that the woman ever married the soldier.

Mr. LANGLEY. O, well, for that matter there are a good many things close to Kentucky that I do not approve of myself. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Alice Randall, widow of Clark Randall, late of Company G, Nineteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would not say anything more about this case if it had not been for the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY]. I did not mention the case of this old man for the purpose of defeating his amendment.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In just a moment I will. I introduced this amendment because of the fact that the case that I had was on all fours with the case that he had, and that I thought if the House was acquainted with the facts in that case they would readily accede to my wishes and allow my case, too. The gentleman from Oklahoma says that he notices the men from the Southern States do not have their pension cases in the same well-prepared condition as do the gentlemen from the Northern States.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is my experience on the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. The reason for that is this: The people in the South have not had the experience in preparing pension claims that the people in the North have had.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I am located south of the Mason and Dixon line myself.

Mr. HOWARD. And we people in the South have not gone to the extent that some people have gone in the North to pad the evidence and obtain a pension. That is the reason we do not know as much about how to prepare a pension case in the South as you do in the North.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I never made the statement that the gentleman refers to. I live south of the Mason and Dixon line, and have lived there all my life. I can show him the cases in the Pension Committee and let him judge for himself. Certainly there is no excuse for bringing in a pension for a widow with no evidence to show that she ever married the man.

Mr. HOWARD. I am not responsible, Mr. Chairman, for somebody's ignorance about how to obtain a pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming object to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have had a good deal of discussion, and a good deal of it is rather irrelevant, in connection with this pension bill. I am inclined to say that if we are going to have a continuation of this——

Mr. HOWARD. I will promise the gentleman I will not bother him any more.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not bothering me at all. I am anxious to get on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care much, although I do to a certain extent, where the gentleman from Oklahoma lives. But I am not responsible for some man who is located down near the line of the good old State of Kentucky, over in some other State, and did not know how to file his claim.

But I venture this assertion—and I think the members of this committee will bear me out in it when they get the papers in this case—that this particular claim for the concomitant of my good old friend from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, there, who followed him for four years, and who knows him personally, was as well prepared as any other pension claim that was ever presented to this House.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman will turn to page 10 of the report, he will find these words in it:

> The records of the War Department fail to show that he ever rendered service in the United States Army or that the Seventy-first Enrolled Missouri Militia was ever sworn into the United States service.

Still they granted him a pension. Could not my friend use that as a precedent and example by which to draw his papers? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. I could, Mr. Chairman; but, as I say, there is no excuse on that line, and I do not like to have the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] say that I was captious about this matter and that I was greedy. I hope that he will reintroduce his amendment. Capt. Alex Mattison has not got to die in want and misery because he can not get a pension, after this House has acted on it once favorably, sufficient to sustain his body. He shall not die in want, because he lives in Georgia, and Georgians will see that he does not suffer in want. We will take care of him, if the great Government he served for four years thinks more of precedent than it does of justice. In a rule that has been adopted here it is monstrous to say that because I have not done a certain thing you will let him die in want, because it breaks a precedent.

Who passes on these bills finally? Why, you gentlemen have come into this House and you say that because the Committee on Pensions, in its wisdom, which it has delegated to itself, without any rhyme or reason, says to a good, old, honest Union soldier: "You shall not have a pension; you can not get it."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that the House committee approved this bill in the last Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. They did.

Mr. RUSSELL. And they have had no chance to consider it in this Congress, and since it was rejected by the Senate in the last Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. They passed it, and they were unanimous in it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I submit that the gentleman from Georgia ought not to lecture the House committee when they approved the bill he refers to in the last Congress and he has not presented it to the committee in this Congress, since it was turned down by the Senate.

Mr. HOWARD. It has been presented, so far as I know how to present anything.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was not presented to us in this Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. I presented it to the man who is the "examiner," who said he directed such affairs of the Pension Committee; the man who had plenary power to act; the man who furnished all the muscle and sinew and brain power, as I understood he claimed, of the Pension Committee. [Laughter.] You have got to go over there; you have got to go through him; and you can not get it. He has got to write it up, no matter what the facts are, and you can not get it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the gentleman from Georgia understand that the man he is speaking of, the examiner, the man who is sent here by the Pension Bureau, does all the work for the Pension Committee? If so, does not the gentleman think that he ought to direct his criticism to him?

Mr. HOWARD. That is what I am doing. Did the gentleman hear me say that I thought you had delegated to him all the power? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of giving consolation and encouragement to my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. I say that he need not be discouraged in his first attempt to get a private pension through; that there is reason yet to hope, in view of the holding of the committee with reference to the bill H. R. 5196, which is as follows:

> H. R. 5196. Julius Vogt, aged 80 years. The claimant is now a pensioner under special act of Congress at $12 per month since May 15, 1900.
> Address, Concordia, Lafayette County, Mo.
> He alleges service in Company C, Seventy-first Enrolled Missouri Militia; date of enlistment and discharge and length of service not disclosed. The records of the War Department fail to show that he ever rendered service in the United States Army or that the Seventy-first Enrolled Missouri Militia was ever sworn into the United States service. He therefore has no pensionable status under existing laws.

Yet he is to get a second special pension bill through Congress in a few moments without ever having rendered any service as a soldier of the country. I only want to call my friend's attention to it in order to buoy him up. If this man, who never rendered any service, can get two special bills through, certainly the gentleman's old friend, who rendered valiant service, can get one through.

Mr. HOWARD. I will say to the gentleman that I have more hope now than I ever had before. The only reason why I am insistent at this time upon having the pension granted is that this poor old man is in dire distress and he needs this now. I hope to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I want to say only a word in connection with the work of this committee, and in doing so I do not want to reflect on any Member of the House. My own personal opinion is that it would be much better, and results would be secured much more quickly, if Members of the House would come to the committee and present their claims and their complaints, if they have any, rather than make them here on the floor of the House.

It is a well-known fact to everyone here who is familiar with the work of this committee that a man from the Pension Bureau is detailed to "write up," as we call it, these claims. The man detailed from the Pension Bureau makes recommendations to the committee, but the power of accepting or rejecting such recommendations rests with the committee. The committee does not always abide by the recommendations of the gentleman assigned by the Pension Bureau who writes up these claims, but we take into consideration all the facts in connection with each and every case and govern ourselves accordingly.

I have always maintained that no Pension Committee can have a hard-and-fast rule. The examiner who writes up these claims undertakes as nearly as he can to adhere to a hard-and-fast rule, but when these claims come before the committee the committee has the power to set aside his recommendations or to make such an allowance as they see fit.

I would therefore suggest to the Members of the House, who apparently every two weeks, on Friday, fill the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD full of statements regarding certain claims of theirs, that it would be much better for them, and would be much fairer to the committee, and better all around, if they would come before the committee and present the facts in the cases in which they are interested, and give the committee a chance to hear what they have to say about them before final action is taken.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Invalid Pensions Committee have a rule that no second bill granting an increase of pension will be allowed, where the pension in the first instance was granted by a special act.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the Invalid Pensions Committee has no such rule adopted by the committee. The committee in the Senate did have a rule of that kind——

Mr. ALEXANDER. You have such a rule as that, or at least it has been promulgated with your authority, and I have a copy of it in my office; and the attention of the committee was called to that rule in the last Congress.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman that notwithstanding the fact that he may have a copy of such a rule, the records of the Invalid Pensions Committee will show that no such rule was ever adopted by that committee in the history of the country.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Then why do you permit it to be promulgated?

Mr. ADAIR. I do not know who published or circulated any such rule, but I know it was not passed by the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have in my district a great many members of the enrolled Missouri Militia, some of whose cases are quite as worthy as these, and I have written not less than a hundred letters to those old men, calling attention to the fact that under the rules of the Committee on Invalid Pensions there was no relief for them. I insist that the committee ought to have some rule, and then they ought to live up to it.

Mr. ADAIR. Does the gentleman refer to the rule providing that a soldier shall not be pensioned twice by special act?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Have the soldiers the gentleman refers to been pensioned by special act?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They have never been pensioned at all.

Mr. ADAIR. Then they do not come under this rule?

Mr. ALEXANDER. You have persistently refused to recognize that class of cases at all.

Mr. ADAIR. The rule of which the gentleman speaks has nothing whatever to do with the cases that he refers to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; it has.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I understood it was the rule, both of the Invalid Pensions Committee and of the Pensions Committee, not to place a name on the roll by special act of Congress where the records of the War Department did not show that the man had rendered service. If that is not the rule, there ought to be a statement made of that fact, because there are a number of cases of men who have sufficient evidence to show that they have served to convince their own Congressmen that they have rendered service; yet the records of the War Department do not show it. In this case your own report shows that the man did not render service and was never enrolled in the American Army.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman that I have been a member of this committee now for about three years. During the time I have been a member of the committee no such rule as the one of which the gentleman speaks has been adopted. What took place before I became a member of the committee I do not know; but I only want to suggest that we would be glad if Members of the House would come before the committee and present their claims, notwithstanding the fact that the gentleman who writes up these bills may not make a favorable report. Give us a chance first to do what you think ought to be done, instead of coming in here and criticizing the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman demands the regular order. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. The gentleman who preceded the gentleman from Illinois made that motion.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that motion has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] moves to strike out the last word, and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I think it is due to this committee that somebody who is not a member of the committee should make a statement as to the method whereby that committee conducts its hearings and passes upon the claims of soldiers who are asking relief by private bill. I know I had some trouble the first year I was here in getting my cases before the committee, but it was largely because of my inexperience. Since that time I have had some trouble, of course, in getting every case I have presented properly rated by the examiner, but on each occasion when I have gone before the Committee on Invalid Pensions I have received the most courteous consideration of my claim, and I never have been turned down on any claim where I could show there was merit. And I want to say for this committee that I believe it is composed of men of the very highest order, men bent on the discharge of high, noble, worthy, and conscientious duty. I want to say for them that I believe they are trying to discharge that duty as fully as circumstances will permit. I do not believe that any worthy soldier will be turned down by that committee. I know that none of my cases have ever been turned down since I learned how to get them before the committee. When I learned that it was my fault, I censured the committee no longer; and I give them my hand of fellowship, and bid them Godspeed in their noble work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of James H. Sickles, late of Company E, Twenty-ninth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] to say that the rules of which we are given copies at the office of the Invalid Pensions Committee and which we—or at least I—send broadcast to the Grand Army posts in my district are incorrect and do not represent the practice of his committee?

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I do not know what rules or copies of rules he has been sending out or what copies of rules he has been procuring at the Invalid Pensions Committee room. I will say this: That at the beginning of this session a committee was appointed by the Invalid Pensions Committee of the House and the Pensions Committee of the Senate for the purpose of adopting rules governing our action. Senator SHIVELY, who is chairman of the committee in the Senate, has been very busy with other matters and up to this time has not called a meeting of that committee, so that during this session of Congress there have been no rules adopted by either of the two committees governing their action. I do not know anything about the rules that were adopted prior to the time I came on the committee.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The gentleman means that a committee was appointed to adopt uniform rules?

Mr. ADAIR. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, this discloses a very unfortunate state of affairs. I have been in this House a good many years. For a long time I have been sending out to the Grand Army posts and to individuals in my district copies of these printed rules, on the supposition that they were the rules on which the Invalid Pensions Committee acted.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that if the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] is correct, the situation is a very peculiar one. I have received a number of notices from the committee stating that such and such a claim had been rejected by the committee under Rule II or Rule X or Rule XII of the committee, as the case might be, indicating that the committee must act upon some rule.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is the situation. For a great many years the printed rules of the Invalid Pensions Committee have refused consideration to bills which propose to pension any person who is already drawing pension under a special act. I did not realize until this morning that these rules were not adhered to.

But there is something worse than that. When I first came to Congress, a good many years ago, we used to be told by the Invalid Pensions Committee as it was then constituted that each one of us was entitled to not more than three bills in a short session and four bills in a long session. That rule was relaxed and relaxed, and the first thing we knew the members of the committee were getting more special acts than other Members of the House. Then pretty soon we were told that we could only have one bill on the stocks at the same time, and we find that that rule has been relaxed, and now we do not know where we are on this question.

I have had occasion over and over and over again to refuse to introduce special pension bills for my constituents on the ground that I had already exhausted my quota, or because their cases might conflict with the printed rules of the committee. I submit to the gentleman from Indiana that if it be true, as I have heard it said, that this committee allows itself far more special acts every year than it allows other Members of the House, and if it be true that the Invalid Pensions Committee is not acting on the rules which we have been given to understand that it is acting upon, they are doing a great injustice to their fellow Members. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If it is a fact that the Pensions Committee had rules by which they allowed these claims, why distribute just so many to each Congressman during each session, or so many per week, or so many during a Congress? Why require that a man can not prosecute his claim under the rules and then have the committee pass upon it, instead of requiring a Congressman to introduce bills, take the thing up with the board and push it through, and they be distributed to different Congressmen throughout the country, so many to each one?

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is arguing for another general act. Inasmuch as I felt obliged to vote against the Sherwood Act, I hope the House will continue to pass special acts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Catherine T. Keating, helpless and dependent child of Edward Keating, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] a moment ago seemed not to understand me when I referred to the lax methods of getting up pension papers from Southern States. My sympathy was in favor of them, and I hope in the future they will be a little more careful, because if they will they can succeed with their pension bills better. Quit teaching the people that pensions are granted through fraud or political pull. Tell them to get evidence back of their bills. He further tried to put me in the attitude of attacking the South, where I have lived all my life; but I shall not let that go unchallenged. I had two relatives, commanders in the Confederate Army, and one who was in the Confederate Congress. I am as thoroughly a sympathetic Southerner as ever descended from the loins of a Confederate soldier. But I was reared for the most part by a foster father who followed Old Glory, and he taught me that there was patriotism and bravery on that side. I have never known of a civil conflict and, God being my helper, I never will. I live in a State that lies across Mason and Dixon's line, and I am proud that that State never seceded from this Union nor did it ever fire on citizens of any other State.

I have tried to be as broad as this Republic. I believe in the patriotism not only of the Confederate soldier but of the Union soldier. I hope I see the patriotism and the prejudices of both. I excuse it in the two soldiers of the Confederate and the Union Armies, but I condemn it in the sons of either who did not know anything about those hardships. [Applause.]

I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I see prejudice on the part of the South that ought not to exist, and I see prejudice on the part of the North that ought not to exist. I think the North is narrow when it fails to pay back to the South the cotton-tax money illegally collected from it, and I think the South is narrow when it criticizes pensions to the soldiers of this Republic. [Applause.]

That is the position I occupy at home, and I am going to occupy it here. The strongest ties of friendship exist between me and both the Confederate and the Union soldiers of my State, and I am going to stay with both, as I have stayed with them in my public career in my adopted State. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Peter Banks, late of Company G, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I think my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] does what he calls the North a great injustice. Of course there is no North, no South, no East, no West.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman preceding me said that the northern men reflected on the South.

Mr. DIES. I want to say a word about pensions for northern people. I do not think they entertain prejudice against the old Confederate soldier. I have a well-authenticated case which, if necessary, I can procure at my desk, where this Congress, not this session, passed a private pension bill placing a man upon the pension rolls at $50 a month who, when 11 years old, the son of a Confederate soldier, was shot while holding the horses of Confederate soldiers. If anything is needed to show that there was no prejudice by the North against the old Confederate soldier, that is the case. That case is perfectly well authenticated and should satisfy my friend from Oklahoma. They gave him a pension by a private act. He was not a soldier in the Confederacy, but he was the son of a Confederate soldier, doing service for Confederates by holding the horses of the soldiers.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I never referred to that. I referred to the cotton tax. Is the gentleman for the cotton tax?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Not for a moment. In view of that liberality, I assure my friend from Oklahoma, even though his ancestors were Confederate soldiers, that if they are still living they may yet be pensioned by a special act of Congress. There is no prejudice about this pension business now. Anybody can get a pension passed by Congress if he can get it through the Pension Committee. I want to defend the Pension Committee, headed by my gallant old friend, Gen. SHERWOOD, whom I love very much. If the members of that committee take a little more pork out of the barrel for themselves than they allow to others who are not members of the committee, they are but following the illustrious example of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which admitted here in a former session of Congress that they gave twice the number of items to themselves that they allowed to others.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I want to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of paying the cotton tax to the South?

Mr. DIES. I am in favor of anybody paying that which he owes. If this Government owes it, whether it owes it to the North, the South, the East, or the West, or to Jericho, it ought to pay it, but I am not in favor of paying bogus claims from the South because they come under the name of the Southern Confederacy. I am in favor of the Government doing its duty by all of its citizens, North and South, and I would vote for a good claim from the South as I would vote for a good claim from the North, and I hope that I shall always vote against a bad claim, no matter from what section of the country it comes.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 13920) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Harry E. Low, late of Company G, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio, in charge of the bill, whether the Pension Committee has any printed rules to which it adheres?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Chairman, that the committee follows its rules, and I do not believe that it has ever varied from the rules.

Mr. GARDNER. Has it printed rules?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. It has.

Mr. GARDNER. And does it adhere to those rules?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. It does.

Mr. GARDNER. Therefore, at all events, so far as the Committee on Pensions is concerned, I am safe to send those rules to my constituents and to say to them that they must come within the conditions of the rules or they can not get special pensions.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to state this to the gentleman: Of late the committee has been besieged with a great number of requests that it take up and consider a second private pension bill, and the committee so far has refused to violate the rule in respect to that. The chairman took the matter up with the committee at the last meeting, but owing to the fact that there was so much importance attached to the breaking of the rule, and owing to the further fact that there was only a bare quorum of the committee present, it was decided to put the matter over until the next regular meeting of the committee, when same would be fully discussed; but so far the Committee on Pensions has not violated one rule, to my knowledge.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to suggest that if the committee decides to violate the rule, it ought to repeal it and give the Members of the House notification of the fact that it has done so? I am very glad to hear what the gentleman says that, for the present, at all events, we can feel safe in sending out the rules of his committee to our constituents. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that his committee has not fallen into the practice of violating its printed rules, and I hope that if the committee decides to change any rule he will have a new set of rules printed, so that we may all know where we stand.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was just going to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that I had addressed a letter to him this morning upon that very question. I have a bill pending before his committee providing for a second increase, and have been advised by the examiner for the committee that it would not be allowed. I wrote the gentleman a letter to know whether the committee has violated that rule.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. We have not as yet, but that matter will be taken up and discussed before the full committee at the next meeting, and in the event the committee decides to change that rule, a new rule will be printed and distributed to the various Members.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That seems to be fair.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Committee for a moment to a part of the bill recently passed—that part mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]—granting a pension to Charles N. Ashford. In fairness to the Committee on Pensions, a statement should be made following that which has been submitted. Charles N. Ashford was a boy in the State of New York who enlisted early in the war in the One hundred and fifth New York Volunteers. His regiment was attached to the Army of the Potomac, and he participated in its engagements up to the time of the second Battle of Bull Run, at which time he was with others guarding a baggage train. A bridge gave way and he was precipitated to the bottom of the chasm and severely injured. Consequent upon his injuries he was taken to the hospital, treated for several months, and discharged from the hospital and from the Army, with the statement on the discharge that he was not eligible for reenlistment by reason of the disability incurred in line of duty. However, in the following year he had recovered, as he thought, to a greater degree than he had at first anticipated, and when the State of New York was combing the highways and byways to get volunteers he responded again. He went to the recruiting sergeant and told him of his discharge and of the disability therefrom, whereupon the recruiting sergeant told him he could not reenlist under his real name, but he could reenlist, like many others did, under another name, and thereupon he took the name of his mother. He reenlisted without a bounty, without a cent, merely that he might again fight for his country. This reenlistment was in the Ninety-seventh New York. He was again attached to the Army of the Potomac, again participated in the battles of that Army up to and including the Battle of the Wilderness. Amid the carnage of this awful battle he stuck to his post and was shot to pieces.

Yet he was not killed. Severely, desperately wounded, he was taken to a hospital in this city, where he languished for seven months. He was then discharged, completely disabled, and his honorable discharge from the Army so stated. I do not know just how he got out into Minnesota, but somehow or other he wandered there. He went into a remote section of the State way up near the Canadian border, up along that narrow strip between Lake Superior and Canada, 110 miles from a railroad, without the telegraph, without the telephone, and he tried to make a little home for himself and wife up in that remote region. He applied for a pension in 1875 under the name of Charles N. Ashford. He was granted a pension on account of his disability secured in the second, or last, service. Nothing was said apparently about his other disability and no pension was granted for that. He drew this pension from 1866 to 1875, when the department stopped the pension, claiming disability had ceased from the gunshot wounds. He had been drawing only $4 per month. The condition of his health was such that he was in desperate need, so in 1884 he again applied for a pension, alleging as disability only the injuries he received in the first service. This pension was granted, and the department in figuring up his back pay allowed him from the date of his injury. It was by reason of this back pay that the lapping of pension occurred. It must be borne in mind that this man never applied for two pensions at the same time; that he never drew two pensions at the same time; that the only lapping occurred by reason of the method employed by the department in ascertaining his back pay. It must also be noted that when the two pensions are added he drew only $10 per month, really less than he was at all times entitled to.

This case got into the hands of a clerk in the Pension Office, who read superficially, could not see a foot ahead, and spoke glibly of fraud. I made a most careful investigation of this case extending over three years, and I know there is not a semblance of fraud to be found anywhere. The claim of fraud is based solely upon the fact that in the application for pension Mr. Ashford stated he had no other service. Mr. Ashford says he never made any such statement. Truth is, that part is regular form matter, printed, and when the blanks were filled out by Ashford's attorney in those olden days this printed item was not brought to the soldier's attention. Thus fades away every suggestion of fraud. There is some language made by the clerk that might be construed as suggesting fraud in connection with the evidence submitted to establish claimant's pension for hernia; but an inspection of the records shows not a thing to base any such suggestion upon.

It must be borne in mind that this is a simple, ignorant man. He can scarcely read and write. He has lived in that isolated region, has had almost no contact with the world, and had no business experience.

The figures given by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] as to the amount of pension this man has received are immediately disproven by actually computing the items. A simple mathematical computation will disclose that pensioner has not received one-half nor one-fourth the amounts suggested. Truth is, this man has received far less than he has been entitled to receive. Could he have had his rights looked after years ago he would have drawn a much larger pension than he ever has drawn.

The statement by the department that Mr. Ashford did not file an answer to the matters set forth in his case is decidedly incorrect, because Mr. Ashford made a most complete and detailed answer, covering many pages of typewritten matter, and I filed the statement myself.

The department in final review of the case allowed him a pension, and considers him worthy of a pension by reason thereof.

This man was one of the bravest of soldiers, and one who suffered all but death in his country's defense. He was no tin soldier. He faced the bullets and he fell in the ranks. His patriotic spirit was not destroyed by his first injuries, severe as they were. In spite of his injuries, his disability, when our Nation was begging, beseeching, praying for soldiers he again bore a musket, again marched under the flag, and fell in the full shock of battle. Do not talk to me that such noble spirit could think of fraud upon the country he gave his all to defend.

He is in desperate need. He is now practically bedridden, and his pension has been stopped. His aged wife is well-nigh an invalid. He can work no more. He is living and his wife is living on the charity of those rugged neighbors who live in that region. He will soon be dead. He needs help now, and I feel sure his country will not, in this his hour of need, forget either him or the heroic sacrifices he made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more in order to complete my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret I shall be compelled——

Mr. MILLER. I should like to finish this statement.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not discussing the bill before us at this moment, but is discussing a matter that has been before us and discussed for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Charman, I am very much interested in the question of the rule which has been discussed governing the Committee on Pensions with reference to a second pension by private bill. I feel quite sure that the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions had their origin in the necessity of conditions. There are many cases of merit and of high worth which can not be reached under a general pension law, and a private act for such relief stands, in my opinion, on a very high plane of honor. Now, I have a case pending before the Committee on Pensions, the widow of a Mexican soldier. She is more than 80 years old, is drawing a small pension by virtue of a private act. She has worked all her life, and for 40 years as a widow she has maintained herself by virtue of keeping a hotel. She had one daughter who assisted her in this work. That daughter sickened and died some years ago. Now, this old lady over 80 years old is absolutely helpless, confined to her bed all the time, unable to maintain her former business, and absolutely dependent upon the charity of friends and relatives. I visited her during the holidays, and I found that good woman, who has been so true to her husband's memory, her soldier Mexican War husband, that she has never married since—I found that good woman absolutely helpless and confined to her room, unable to get out of bed. I made application by private bill for the purpose of relieving her, and I have been recently told by the gentleman who has charge of the examinations and the passing upon such bills that my bill is barred by a rule of the committee, and that there is no help for this Mexican soldier's widow.

Now, I appeal to that committee that, in the name of justice and honor, they relieve this House of that hard and fast rule so that these deserving people; these people who had service in the Mexican War and the War with Spain; these widows who stayed at home and cared for the children may have the proper relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to hear these encomiums——

Mr. FOWLER. I want only one minute more.

Mr. WILSON of Florida (continuing). As they have nothing to do with the bill. And, therefore, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Boaz Adkins, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, while we are beginning the consideration of this new crop of private pension bills, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of the bill if the same practice prevails in the Pension Committee as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] pointed out as prevailing in the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to wit, that members of the committee could get more items in the bill than persons who were not members of the committee?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Texas that this is the second bill this committee has considered so far, and there are only some 26 items in this bill, and I believe the other bill had something like 44 items.

Mr. DIES. Do you have any such rule that forbids members of the committee from taking a greater number of items than are given to other Members of Congress not on the committee?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I do not think there is any rule governing matters of that kind. I do not think members of the committee would abuse the rule. I do not think they would take advantage of their membership on the committee to secure more bills. I presume they would probably get their full quota, but I do not believe they would take bills at the expense of other Members.

Mr. DIES. Of course, I have always contended, Mr. Chairman, that these private pension bills were wholly unjustifiable, because of the liberality of our general pension laws. And it has always been my belief, although I have never stated so on the floor of the House, that the same rule either applied to these committees, or would soon become in vogue with these committees, as prevails in other committees which are charged to have some semblance to a barrel of pork, and that those superintending the dispensation of the pork would naturally abstract therefrom the larger and more juicy portion; that is to say, a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, while dealing out to an ordinary Member one or two items, would take three or four items for himself. Of course, Mr. Chairman, that is bad enough when erecting public buildings over the country, but when you say a Member of Congress shall be able to relieve any fixed number of old soldiers, without reference to the number of needy ones in his district, and if perchance he happens to be on the committee he can relieve twice as many of these old heroes as a man who is not on the committee, without reference to the number of old soldiers in needy circumstances in his district, I must confess that is carrying pork-barrel politics to an alarming extent.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my friend from Texas yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. I have heard for the first time openly these charges against the committee.

Mr. DIES. I am not making charges.

Mr. GOULDEN. Insinuations, then. Now, I am not a member of any one of these committees, and am not replying for myself; but I am astounded to hear these things, and certainly can not believe that my friend is serious.

Mr. DIES. Who would not be astounded?

Mr. GOULDEN. I am astounded to hear these charges or insinuations made about these committees, or any others of the House.

Mr. DIES. Here is a case where we are passing this bill to relieve the necessitous condition of the old soldiers of the Civil War. And it develops that we are to get a number of bills without reference to the number of soldiers in the district, and that a fixed number shall be given to Members of Congress, a certain number to the Committee on Invalid Pensions——

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I desire to say that I am a member of the Pensions Committee, and thus far I have never missed one of its sittings. No such allotment as he refers to has ever been considered in that committee.

Mr. DIES. What committee is the gentleman on?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. On the Pension Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John E. Clark, late of Company M, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DIES. As I was about to say, this committee is in its swaddling clothes, so far as these nefarious things known as private bills are concerned. Naturally it does not know the tricks of the trade.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the matter before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DIES. I submit I discussed it in its most vital part.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not discussing the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DIES. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. The Clerk reads very rapidly. What is the paragraph we are considering?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman apparently was not familiar with the paragraph.

Mr. DIES. I move to strike out the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DYER. What paragraph?

Mr. DIES. The paragraph just read. Any paragraph of any bill known as a private pension bill ought to be stricken out if it should develop that we are using the old soldiers of this country as a means of perpetuating ourselves in political office. And I repeat my statement that it is bad enough to constitute certain other standing committees as "pork-barrel" committees, so that a man can get access to them, and, if he is a committeeman, can take out a ham, and if he is a common Member of Congress all he can get is a hog jowl or a pigtail, in order to get that which is applicable as a reward to the old soldiers of this country. I want to recommend to the judgment of this committee and its members, who are young now in point of service, that if they have not fallen into this practice, in the name of God they ought not to fall into it, because if you are going to reward these old soldiers on the ground of merit you will give an increase of pension to a soldier in proportion to his necessitous condition and not in respect to the number of bills theretofore introduced by a Member of Congress. I say it is a shame that this pension roll of the Government should be dragged down and be made a stench in the Nation's nostrils as a pork-barrel proposition. It ought not to be.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the proforma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary Baker, dependent mother of Frederick H. Baker, alias Sheridan, late of Company L, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and Louis W. Baker, late of Company M, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, both deceased, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask what is the basis on which the pension in this paragraph is granted?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Which paragraph is that?

Mr. FINLEY. Page 4, line 18. I see that it is provided to pay Mary Baker, and so on, a pension at the rate of $24 per month. I would like to know upon what basis that allowance is made. What is the reason for that allowance?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Well, I shall have to look it up.

Mr. GARNER. Is she the widow of an officer?

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to know what her relation to the soldier is.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Chairman, without looking over the record, that this is a case of a dependent mother, who gave two sons to the Spanish-American War, and both of those sons are now dead. This is an old lady, about 78 years of age, who is entirely destitute.

Mr. FINLEY. Has she any other children?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. She has no other children.

Mr. FINLEY. Has she any grandchildren?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. So far as I know, there is no one who is legally bound for her support.

Mr. CALDER. She has no other relatives living.

Mr. FINLEY. She has no property?

Mr. CALDER. Absolutely none.

Mr. FINLEY. My reason for calling attention to this paragraph is this: That I happen to know that the widow of an officer, the colonel of a regiment, who died during the Spanish War gets a pension of something like $25 a month, and not over $30 a month. I was solicitous to know on what basis this lady would be granted a pension of $24 a month.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Well, the committee thought that inasmuch as this old lady was 78 years of age and in feeble health, supported by charity, and in view of the fact that she had given up two sons——

Mr. FINLEY. She had no pensionable status in the Pension Office?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. She is not pensioned as a dependent mother, but if she could show that death of either son was due to Army service she would have a pensionable status at the bureau. It was a close decision at the bureau.

Mr. FINLEY. Her sons lost their lives in the Spanish War?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. No. The evidence shows that these two sons supported their mother. They were her support.

Mr. FINLEY. Then they did not lose their lives in the Spanish-American War?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. So far as I can remember, without going over the evidence in the case, there was a strong probability that the death of one son was the result of his service in the Spanish-American War. As to the other son, I do not know whether his death had any connection whatever with his service.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, now, if the same amount were accorded to other mothers and widows in like circumstances, it would swell the pension roll to a very considerable extent, would it not?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I do not know. I think this is rather an unusual case myself. The committee has been very careful. They have not granted these pensions promiscuously. I am sure this is a very worthy and meritorious case. The woman is an aged woman and dependent on charity.

Mr. FINLEY. I am sure it is a gratuity on the part of the Government. I am certain of that. What I wanted to know is on what plan the committee was proceeding. This lady would have no pensionable status outside of an act of Congress?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Only as I have already stated.

Mr. FINLEY. What would be the rate?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Twelve dollars a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think this paragraph ought to be explained if this is a departure from the usual rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] desire to take the floor in connection with that item?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. No. I wish to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary F. Carson, widow of William H. Carson, late of Company G, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the Committee on Pensions for its efforts in this bill to help some very deserving cases. In the Spanish War and the Philippine insurrection there was approximately a total of 434,000 men in the military and naval service of the United States. In all the history of the world no more splendid or braver body of men were ever enlisted for the cause of country and patriotism than they. Many of those splendid heroes have died and left widows and minor children. Many of these widows and orphans are in distress and have been unable to secure pensions because they have not been able to satisfactorily establish that their husbands died of disabilities contracted in the service. The Committee on Pensions, however, recognizes that there are deserving cases that have not and do not come within the strict interpretation of the law as it now exists.

This bill contains two or three, and one of them, I know particularly is a most deserving and worthy case, where the soldier contracted disability while serving in the Philippines from the results of which he died. Any of us who know anything about the conditions of the climate in the Philippines during the insurrection there realize and know fully that it was impossible for a man to have served a year in that climate under the conditions that existed and come back and remain a well man. A number of cases of that kind have been considered by this committee. It is a most excellent committee. I also want to say for the Committee on Invalid Pensions that it is also one of the best committees of this House. They are doing a great and splendid and patriotic work.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Pensions a few days ago reported a bill to this House—H. R. 13044—which provides that there shall be paid to the widows of those who served in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps of the United States during the Spanish War or the Philippine insurrection a pension of $12 per month, provided it is shown by those claimants that they are in needy circumstances, and $2 a month for minor children.

The report which they submitted with the bill explains most excellently the conditions that exist relative to these Spanish War widows, and gives the facts which the House desires to have. I believe it is hoped that within a short time the Committee on Pensions, through its acting chairman, Mr. KEY of Ohio, will call up this bill for passage by this House; therefore I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a copy of the report to which I refer. It is a very short report and gives much valuable information upon the subject of pensions for widows and orphans of Spanish War veterans.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Missouri to extend his remarks in the RECORD will be granted.

There was no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

Report No. 282, to accompany H. R. 13044.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13044) granting pensions to the widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, either as Regulars or Volunteers, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, and were honorably discharged therefrom, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report, with the recommendation that the bill do pass after being amended as set out at the end of this report.

In amended form, the measure grants $12 monthly to the widow of an honorably discharged soldier or sailor who served during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection during her widowhood, and $2 monthly for each child under 16 years of age, provided that the widow shall have married the soldier prior to the passage of this act. The pension is to be limited only to the widow who is "without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year."

We favorably recommend the amended measure for the following reasons:

1. The total number who served in the United States Army and Navy during said warfares approximates 434,000, which is about 18 per cent of the number who served in the War between the States. The monthly allowance fixed by this measure is the same that is allowed by statute to the widows and orphans of veterans of other wars and Indian campaigns. Existing law grants this allowance to the widows and orphans of men who served in other wars, whether the beneficiary be rich or poor. The provision contained in the present amended bill narrows the proposed beneficiaries to a far smaller class. The number of widows and orphans to be benefited by the proposed measure can not be definitely ascertained. Inquiry among the camps of the United Spanish War Veterans would indicate that there are about 4,000 widows of men who served in the Spanish War and the Philippine insurrection. What percentage of these come within the purview of the bill—that is, have no means of support other than their daily labor, etc.—can only be conjectured.

2. At present the destitute widows and their dependents are cared for in the main by the United Spanish War Veterans. It is inequitable to ask the men who offered their lives to their country in war service to make this additional financial sacrifice when the burden should be carried by the mass of our population which did not serve with the colors.

3. It is 15 years since the Spanish War, and this is the first request for legislation ever made by the organization of United Spanish War Veterans. The unselfishness of the request commends itself, for these veterans ask absolutely nothing for themselves, but only provision for the helpless widow and orphan.

4. Under present law the widows of the veterans of these warfares have pensionable status if they can show that their husbands' deaths were directly caused by disabilities incurred in the service. This limitation has, however, been removed by statute with reference to the widows of veterans of prior wars because of the difficulty of furnishing proof that the death was traceable to antecedent disability incurred in war service. When the veteran seeks a pension for himself he knows, and probably can trace, his comrades in arms in order to furnish the required proof. When the widow asks a pension for herself she is left helpless, and invariably has no knowledge of the identity and whereabouts of the men who served with the deceased veteran. In practice it has been found that it is rarely practicable for her to gather the proofs.

5. The amended measure merely continues the well-recognized statutory policy of our Government in dealing with the veteran soldier and sailor and their dependents.

6. Of the 434,000 who served in these warfares about one-fourth were in the regular service and from seventy-five to one hundred thousand were assigned to duty in the Philippine Islands. In these warfares there were 826 battles and skirmishes, in 515 of which men were killed or wounded. The whole mortality of the campaigns was 12,000 lives. For the first time in the history of our country the American soldier and sailor served in the Tropics and the Orient under climatic and hygienic conditions unusual to him. They received no bounty or substitute money, and were not drafted for service. Not to provide for the dependents of this latest type of our patriotic citizenship while lavishly making provisions for the dependents of those who served in all the other wars of the Republic indicts the Government on a charge of unjust discrimination.

7. When Congress made provision for the Union veterans the National Government was burdened by a stupendous national debt. At present its burden is far lighter.

On June 1, 1912, the then Secretary of the Interior, upon data furnished by the then Commissioner of Pensions, estimated that the cost of a bill in the Sixty-second Congress, should it become a law, which provided for exactly the same pensions as the pending bill, would be $2,500,000 per annum to start with, and that for some years there would be a steady annual increase. The present Secretary of the Interior, upon data furnished by the present Commissioner of Pensions, has advised your committee to the same effect, to wit, that the cost would at first be about $2,500,000 annually, and for some years gradually increase. In both instances, however, it has been stated that it is impossible from data in the Pension Bureau to give any exact estimate. This grows out of the fact that the point of dependence has never entered into claims of widows and minors of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the War with Spain and Philippine insurrection.

In response to a request of the committee, the Secretary of the Interior, under date of June 1, 1912, advised the committee as follows:

"1. I am informed by the Commissioner of Pensions that in the consideration of claims filed on account of service during the War with Spain and the Philippine insurrection, April 21, 1898, has been accepted as the date of commencement of the War with Spain, and July 4, 1902, as the date of termination of the Philippine insurrection.

"2. In a publication issued some years ago it was estimated that the number of United States troops engaged in the Spanish War was 312,523, and that the number engaged in the Philippine insurrection was 140,038. No data, however, is obtainable showing the number of individuals engaged in the two services, as this department has no definite information as to the number of persons who were in the service during the Spanish War who reenlisted and were in the service during the Philippine insurrection.

"3. The number of claims filed by widows and dependents based upon service during the Spanish War and the Philippine insurrection is 14,614; and the number of widows and dependents who have been granted pensions on account of such service, 7,122. The number of widows on the roll on account of the service above named, on June 30, 1911, was 1,217 and the number of minor children 326. The number of widows' claims which have been rejected is 4,705. In the number rejected there are no doubt included many claims which have been rejected the second or third time, upon the submission of additional evidence; so that the actual number of rejections would be somewhat less than that given.

"4. From statistics gathered from various sources as to the average number of marriages each year and the ascertained death rates at certain ages, it is estimated that the number of widows and minors who would probably be entitled to pension under this bill, should it be enacted into law, would be between 10,000 and 15,000. If the number should be as high as 15,000 the cost of the bill would be approximately $2,500,000 per annum within a few years after the passage thereof. It is evident, however, that the cost would increase from year to year for a number of years, on account of the death of those who rendered service—who would leave widows and minor children surviving who would be entitled to pension under the proposed act."

The Assistant Secretary of the Interior advises the committee as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 13, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RICHARDSON: I have your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing a copy of H. R. 1754, entitled "A bill to pension widows and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection," and asking information as to "(1) the period of service covered by the bill, the dates the War with Spain and the Philippine insurrection commenced and ended; (2) the number of officers and enlisted men who served for the period of 90 days between those dates; (3) the number of widows' and minor children's claims filed based on such service, the number allowed, and the number rejected; and (4) the probable increase to the pension roll, amount of increase per year, which the passage of the bill would entail."

A compilation from records of The Adjutant General's Office and other sources of authentic information, which was published as an exhibit in the reports of the operations of the Bureau of Pensions for the fiscal years 1903, 1904, 1905, gives the periods of duration of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Islands insurrection as from April 21, 1898, to April 11, 1899, for the former, and from February 4, 1899, to July 4, 1902, for the latter, making a continuous period for the two wars from April 21, 1898, to July 4, 1902, as given in the bill. The same compilation gives the total number of Regular and Volunteer troops, officers and men, of the United States Army and Navy engaged in said wars as 452,561 [From best data available it is thought the total number of soldiers, sailors, and marines involved is 434,860.—Committee.], exclusive of officers of the Navy except as to those of the United States Marine Corps. It affords, however, no information as to what number of such participants served the period of 90 days prescribed by the bill, and the department is unable at this time to supply such information from other sources.

The records of the Bureau of Pensions show some 15,000 claims filed for pensions to widows and dependents, on the basis of service in said wars, and certificates issued in about one-half that number to the close of the fiscal year 1913, the remaining one-half representing the claims rejected, abandoned, and pending.

The foregoing information, which comprises practically all that is available to the department on the subject of your inquiry as relates to the War with Spain and the Philippine insurrection, does not afford sufficient basis for an intelligent estimate of the cost of the bill, as limited to such service. In case it should become a law. There is no 90-days-service pension to the soldiers and sailors of said wars; they are pensionable only for disabilities incurred in service and line of duty. There is therefore no "survivor" class on the pension roll on account of said wars, as in the case of prior wars, whose claims might serve in some measure as a guide for such estimate. In estimates heretofore given upon a similar provision in H. R. 17470, introduced on January 9, 1912, the annual cost on a basis of 15,000 claims was given as approximately $2,500,000, with a promise of increase from year to year for a number of years. Said estimates are found to have been necessarily dependent in large measure upon an application of uncertain factors, such as marriage averages and death rates at given ages. They should therefore not be accepted with any degree of conclusiveness.

Cordially, yours,

LEWIS C. LAYLIN, Assistant Secretary.

Your committee could not understand the $2,500,000 estimate, as it failed to see how the number of widows and minors' claims which had been filed could be used as a basis for same. Upon inquiry it was learned that the estimate had originally (January, 1913) been prepared by the then Chief of the Finance Division of the Pension Bureau. It has simply been readopted by the present officers of the Interior Department. In arriving at this estimate this officer admittedly did not base same upon the number of claims filed except in the most incidental manner. He used as his basis what he termed "a law of average," to wit: He obtained from somewhere a table of the average number of marriages among a given number of men of a given age and then applied it to the maximum number of men who served during the period from April 21, 1898, to July 4, 1902. By this method he arrived at the conclusion that there would be 15,000 claims the first year, or $2,500,000 cost to start with, and a gradual increase for a number of years.

Your committee can not agree with this estimate and fails to see any warrant for the use of this peculiar table of averages as a basis. Therefore your committee has determined to use a number of claims filed as a basis and believes this plan is fairer, as experience will show. There are about 5,000 rejected claims of widows and minor children at present in the Bureau of Pensions which could be affected by this law. The Spanish War veterans state that there are about 4,000 cases of which they know. Taking the number at 5,000, the cost the first year would be $720,000, and if, to be on the safe side, we double this and take the number of cases as 10,000 the cost would be only $1,440,000. It is for this reason your committee has estimated the outside first cost would be about $1,500,000 annually, with a slight increase each year for some years.

Your committee would invite your attention to the fact that in the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the year ending June 30, 1913, it is stated that there was a net loss of 40,094 names from the pension roll during the preceding year.

There was an actual loss—
By death	57,459
By remarriage	888
By minors attaining 16 years	983
By failure to claim pension	202
By all other causes	320
Total		59,852
There were added—
By original allowance	19,276
By restoration and renewal	482
Total		19,758
Net loss		40,094

The same report shows that of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, there was an unexpended balance of $5,348,215.65.

This report shows an annual loss of nearly 60,000 pensioners by death alone—about 5,000 per month—and the average of loss by death is bound to steadily increase for some years. Your committee takes the view that even if the cost of the proposed bill should prove to be double the estimates of the officers of the Interior Department, which it is believed to have been shown to be excessive, this great, rich, and prosperous country is amply able to incur the necessary expense to provide for every dependent widow and each orphan under 16 years of age of those brave men who offered to and did risk their lives in its defense.

After careful consideration and investigation your committee came to the conclusion that a fee of $10 to attorneys in claims under the proposed law was proper. This is the same fee allowed in similar claims under the act of June 27, 1890, and amendments thereto. The dependent feature in the law in many cases will call for much correspondence and work by attorneys, with its consequent cost, and if the fee be placed less than $10 it is believed the better class of attorneys would not care to undertake the prosecution of such claims, which in many cases would cause delay, and perhaps failure, of deserving claimants to secure benefits thereof. In many cases it is believed there will be no attorneys employed at all, and hence no fee incurred.

Your committee understands and intends that this law shall provide pension for each dependent widow and each child under 16 years of age of every soldier, sailor, or marine who served 90 days during the period covered from April 21, 1898, to July 4, 1902, in Regular Establishment for Volunteer forces, including those who served in the China uprising of 1900 and 1901.

In conclusion, your committee would state that many bills were introduced by Members of this Congress—about one dozen in all—each seeking practically the same end as that of the pending bill. All were given careful consideration by the committee, which finally adopted and reports the pending bill as the one whose provisions best carry out the purposes sought by the authors of all of said bills.

Amendments to the bill adopted by the committee:

On page 1 the title of the bill to be amended so as to read as follows:

"To pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain and Philippine insurrection."

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out, after the word "volunteer," "during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "inclusive," to insert "service to be computed from date of enlistment to date of discharge, including all furloughs."

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report back to the House with a favorable recommendation the bills which it has been considering.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ANSBERRY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13542) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and the bill (H. R. 13920) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that they do pass.

BILLS PASSED.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 13542) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 13920) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the above-mentioned two bills were passed was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. HAY. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, by the voice of the constituency which I have the honor to represent it fell to my lot to come to this body as a Representative during the closing days of the reign of that party which, with a few short, broken intervals, had been in power in this country for practically 50 years. The Sixty-first Congress was organized with a substantial Republican majority. The Democratic minority in that Congress, under the leadership of the present able and popular Speaker of this House, proceeded to make history. That history has been only partly written. I may call attention briefly to some of its results. Its first achievement was to demoralize the organization of the Republican Party in this branch of Congress; its second achievement was to continue the division among its ancient foes; and its third achievement was the election of an overwhelming Democratic majority to the Sixty-second Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That Democratic majority proceeded to do what in all justice, righteousness, and honor it should have done, name its former leader to the high and honorable position of Speaker of this body. [Applause.] He was elected and reelected to that position, and now holds the office and discharges its duties with impartiality and with great distinction. [Applause.]

That Democratic majority, selected as his successor as Democratic leader one who had been at all times his trusted, able, and conscientious lieutenant. That majority selected as its leader a man who, from that time until this good hour, has won and deserved the respect and admiration of his opponents and the sincere, I may say the affectionate, loyalty of his party followers. [Applause.] That OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD is the most patient, the most diplomatic, one of the most sagacious, and certainly one of the most lovable party leaders in the history of the American Congress no man can deny. [Applause.] Under his leadership the election of a Democratic President was not only made possible but absolutely certain and easy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under that leadership there came also to the Senate of the United States a Democratic majority in that body for the first time in many years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And what has this Democratic administration, which is the result of his great leadership in this body, accomplished during the brief period that it has been in power? I need not mention details. I may be pardoned, however, if I briefly call attention to one thing that deserves the greatest consideration. That was the action of the Secretary of the Treasury during the crop-moving season last fall in depositing, with ample security and at a low rate of interest, $50,000,000 of the Government funds in order to move the crops. [Applause.] The great benefits that have resulted from that action of the Treasury Department can hardly be estimated.

But what about matters of general legislation? This Democratic majority in both Houses of Congress proceeded to adopt a low-tariff bill, the lowest tariff bill since the famous Walker tariff of 1846, which brought to this country a wonderful period of prosperity. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I need not call your attention to the many important items in the free list of that bill. Nor need I mention the numerous reductions made upon articles of everyday consumption. It has not been in operation long enough to fully demonstrate the beneficial results sure to follow, but I may say this to our friends on the other side who still preach calamity, that the Underwood tariff bill has demonstrated that there can be a bill passed with low duties without bringing upon this country a financial panic. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If that bill had accomplished nothing else, it has served a wonderfully beneficent purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I go further and make the prediction that never again in American political history will any political party enter into a campaign in favor of high protective duties such as are found in the McKinley, the Dingley, and the Payne-Aldrich bills. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Another matter of legislation of great importance is the currency bill. This bill received the votes of Republicans and Progressives. It has been accepted, with rare exceptions, by the business interests of the country with great favor. It decentralizes the money control of the country. It gives to each section the right to use its own commercial and agricultural assets as a basis for currency. It is so well guarded that this currency will be issued when needed and must be retired when not needed. [Applause.] In addition, it authorizes the country banks to loan money upon farm lands, and it gives to the regional banks to be incorporated under this law the right to purchase warrants of the State and its various subdivisions, for the purpose of discounting them when issued for taxes assessed but not collected.

The administration of this law will depend a great deal on the action of the Executive in selecting the members who control it. But in that respect Mr. Wilson has the confidence and regard of the entire country. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are briefly some of the results that have been accomplished since the Democratic Party came into power, less than 12 months ago. These are some of the things that have been accomplished under the leadership of OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD. [Applause.]

When he announced some months ago that he intended to leave this branch of the Congress, that he had the honorable ambition of representing his constituents in the Senate of the United States, his announcement was received with sincere regret by his colleagues, because they hated to give him up. [Applause.]

He has accomplished one other thing for the Democratic Party, and that accomplishment is this: I dare say that I will not be contradicted by any man within the sound of my voice when I say that under his leadership the Democratic Party is more thoroughly united in the Congress of the United States than it has been since the days of the Civil War. [Applause.]

There was a time, even within the memory of some of the youngest among us, when Democrats spoke of themselves as Jackson Democrats, Tilden Democrats, Cleveland Democrats, and Bryan Democrats, gold Democrats and silver Democrats, but now, thank God, we are all just plain Democrats, bowing at the same shrine and worshiping at the same altar. [Applause.] May this happy condition continue for the good of the country and for the cause of constitutional liberty throughout the world until—if I may be pardoned in quoting the eloquent language of that distinguished Georgian, Henry W. Grady—"all the nations of the earth, hearkening to the American drum beat, under one language, one liberty, and one God, shall march down the pathway of time into the dawn of the millennial day." [Great applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the consideration of appropriations for the Army, involving as they do questions of increased forces and facilities and enlarged reserves, leads naturally and logically to inquiry as to the state of our relations with foreign powers, particularly with those countries where conditions exist, or with whose Governments we have questions pending, of a character which in certain contingencies might involve us in the unfortunate possibility of armed conflict.

While our foreign relations and the acts and policies of our Government which affect them are therefore legitimate, and may be essential subjects for consideration in connection with Army appropriations, one naturally hesitates to enter upon such a discussion, in a way that involves criticism, at a time when it might be claimed that plans and purposes are maturing that might be seriously and unfortunately affected by such criticism.

I am not unmindful of the force of such a contention, and I fully realize the duty which devolves upon all patriotic citizens to uphold the hands of the administration in its dealings with foreign powers. There comes a time, however, in the development of any policy, foreign or domestic, when, having progressed to a point where its effect is clearly apparent and its outcome may be reasonably judged or anticipated, silence in regard to it is likely to be interpreted as evidencing approval or acquiescence both in methods pursued and in their logical or probable result.

In my opinion we have reached that point in our relations with several foreign peoples, and particularly with the Government and people of Mexico. The administration has had a year in which to formulate its plans and develop its purposes during which time those who have not entirely approved what has been done or left undone have clearly proven their patriotism by the self-restraint in the expression of views which they have so generally exercised.

If further support of the administration, or continued silence in regard to its acts, afforded any substantial ground of hope or element of promise of improvement or solution of the conditions and problems which confront us, such support or silence would continue to be incumbent upon all good citizens. Being, however, convinced that no good or patriotic purpose can be served by further support, active or passive, of the attitude of our Government toward the people and Government of Mexico, I feel that every consideration of patriotism prompts and impels frank expression of views, to the end that one's position may not be misconstrued and in the hope that wiser counsels may prevail.

I am persuaded that the acts and attitude of our Government have had the effect of prolonging and extending the lamentable condition of appalling disorder and distress which prevail in Mexico; that a continuation of our present policy, or lack of policy, tends to retard indefinitely the establishment of orderly conditions and constitutional government and will, eventually, if persisted in, compel armed intervention, with its inevitable horrors and calamities. Being thus persuaded, I feel it my duty to express my disapproval of those acts and omissions which have accentuated these regrettable conditions and will tend to produce these lamentable results.

The administration of President Taft, very properly, temporarily withheld recognition from the government of Huerta in Mexico in order to emphasize our unqualified disapproval of the arbitrary methods by which that government was inaugurated and our profound abhorrence of the crimes which stained its establishment. This definite attitude toward the government of Huerta, which was inherited by the present administration, was allowed to drift into a condition of vacuous vacillation and aimless inaction while the Secretary of State traveled on lucrative lecture tours.

WHAT OTHERS THINK OF OUR ATTITUDE.

The great Italian historian, Ferrero, in a recent entirely temperate statement relative to our relations with and attitude toward Mexico, said:

> When a revolution breaks out in a neighboring country there are three policies between which a state can choose: Either resolute armed intervention, to reestablish order quickly; or strict neutrality, which leaves the hostile forces to fight out their fight alone; or masked intervention, by giving indirect support to one of the two parties at war, and usually to the weaker one.
> All these three policies have their drawbacks, have their advantages. But it is certain that the greatest drawbacks and the least advantages are to be found in the third policy, that of indirect intervention, to which the United States is now committed.
> A policy of this kind leads to the prolongation instead of the shortening of the conflict.
> So, if things go on as they have begun, one may foresee that the relations between the United States and Mexico will for a time be very uncertain and unpleasant. This revolution will leave behind it a long trail of hatred, distrust, and fears.

These words of the great Italian authority state the situation to a nicety. The policy we have been pursuing, if one may dignify the constantly shifting position taken by the administration by calling it a policy, is, in effect, indirect intervention; but it embraces more than that.

The only features of our attitude toward Mexico that seem to have any elements of fixity are the continued evidences of personal antipathy toward the individual at the head of the only government in Mexico which has any standing among the nations or makes any pretense of protecting life and property or of conducting warfare in a civilized manner; a fatuous and fantastic theory that we should withhold recognition from governments, however well established, which in their genesis and personnel do not measure up to the highest ideals of our executive authorities; an extraordinary obsession that any outlaw or barbarian chieftain is a patriot entitled to our support and encouragement, regardless of his aims or methods, provided he dubs himself a "constitutionalist."

While the attitude of our administration is that of indirect intervention, we still maintain a tenuous and uncertain anchor to windward by sustaining, through various intermediaries, a peculiar and precarious, not to say humiliating, semipersonal, semiofficial, relationship with the head of that government in Mexico the overthrow of which seems to be the principal aim and end of our endeavors. I can recall nothing in international relationship so unusual, and it seems to me so lacking in the dignity and rectitude which should characterize international relations as, on the one hand, the administration's announced anxiety for the fall of the government now established in the City of Mexico and, on the other, the apparent determination to hold that government responsible for the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners in Mexico. This is perhaps not to be wondered at, for, while terror reigns and murder, rape, and rapine are the rule in the so-called "constitutionalist" territory, the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners have been in the main secure within the territory under control of the federal government.

Perhaps the most striking feature of this situation and condition of paradoxes is to be found in the generally perfectly correct attitude of that government, which our administration is seeking to overthrow, toward our Government and people. Our representatives and emissaries have had courteous treatment and consideration at the hands of Huerta, and popular and newspaper outbreaks and attacks against us have been discouraged by his government, whose downfall our officials constantly plan and predict. On the other hand, among those whose cause we have indirectly espoused and whose success our officials desire and promote, neither persons nor property are safe, and our citizens and our representatives receive scant consideration or are treated with open contempt.

SITUATION WILL GROW WORSE.

The situation is bad enough as it is, but it might easily be worse, and will, in my opinion, be infinitely worse if the aims and objects apparently desired by our administration shall be accomplished with the aid of the arms, ammunition, and encouragement obtained and received from us. It is, of course, possible that the so-called constitutionalist forces may succeed in overthrowing Huerta, and then what? Is there any doubt but what the reign of rape and rapine, of plunder and murder, that have desolated northern Mexico and set it back a generation in civilization and development will in that event spread all over that fair land? Will the barbarian Villas and Zapatas be less bloodthirsty, rapacious, savage, and murderous in conquered territory than they have been in their native habitat, and will our administration find among the outlaws who control the rebel forces a more desirable head for a permanent and constitutional government than they see in the stern soldier now at the head of the Mexican Government?

There may be some justification in the removal by the President of the embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition into northern Mexico, but if there is it is certainly not to be found in the reasons advanced in support of it. The President gave as the reason or excuse for that act the fact that there is now no constitutional government in Mexico entitled to the protection or advantage the embargo was supposed to give. Judged by our standards, the government of Huerta may not be a constitutional government, but it is every whit as constitutional and in nowise more revolutionary than the government of Madero, which preceded it.

That government was frankly and notoriously revolutionary, and the farce of an election which was supposed to establish its constitutionality was as grotesque a travesty on constitutional government as the methods employed to give a semblance of constitutionality to the government of Huerta. We denied arms to the rebels against Madero under Orozco, whom Huerta, fighting for Madero, vanquished at Torreon, but we furnish arms, ammunition, and encouragement to the murderous outlaw rebel, Villa, for his coming or promised conflict with the forces of President Huerta on the same plains of Torreon.

THE KILLING OF BENTON.

The recent cold-blooded murder or barbarous execution, whichever it may prove to have been, of the ranchman, Benton, at Juarez, has served to throw a sinister light on the character of the constitutionalist commander of the north, but to those who have been following developments in northern Mexico it is neither a surprise nor a revelation. It simply serves to throw into baleful relief the character of the forces of barbarism and outlawry which are the backwash of the Madero revolution, utterly devoid, as they are, of all the humanitarian and patriotic instincts that inspired that unfortunate man.

Whatever there might have been of injustice to stimulate their native savagery, the fact remains that a bare recital of the unspeakable atrocities and villainies visited on unarmed men and defenseless women and children by leaders of the type of Zapata and Villa and their followers brands them as impossible material with which to hope to win a victory for peace, liberty, order, and constitutional government. We may have sympathy for the seemingly well-intentioned Carranza, but we must confess to serious misgivings of his patriotic purpose in view of his overtures to the bandit Zapata, whose crimes cry out to Heaven for vengeance. Each day that passes seems to more clearly reveal Carranza as a pathetic and impotent figurehead, temporarily tolerated by outlaw chieftains to cloak and lend respectability to their plans and practices of pillage, outrage, and murder.

Illuminating and uninspiring examples of our practice, in connection with Mexican matters, are to be found in the uncontradicted reports that refugee federal soldiers have been unarmed by our military authorities and thrust back across the international boundary upon the tender mercies of Villa. On the other hand, we afford an asylum for and protect against the vengeance of the same Villa, the outlaw Castello, whose villainous atrocity in smothering in a burning tunnel a trainload of women and children placed him beyond the pale of even Villa's tolerance. While plotting the downfall of the Huerta government we are holding in American territory and providing for hundreds of Mexican women and children because we dare not take the responsibility of turning them over to the lust and savagery of the very forces we are arming and encouraging against Huerta.

The climax of paradoxes in this unhappy situation is found in the fact that only by the triumph of the Huerta government can we ever hope to be compensated for the expense of caring for these refugees, for no so-called constitutional chieftain who might become master of the situation in Mexico would ever recompense us for feeding and caring for refugees held by us because we did not deem it safe to place them within their power. Not only must we look to the government our administration is plotting to overthrow for satisfaction of demands and claims arising in federal territory, but the administration seems disposed to hold the federal government responsible for outrages and losses committed and sustained in so-called constitutional territory.

It is neither my duty nor my purpose to say what shall be done, but it is perfectly patent that the devious pathway that the administration has haltingly followed thus far must lead, if it accomplish anything, to further desolation, chaos, and outrage in Mexico, and finally land us in the vortex of intervention. From such misfortunes may wiser and better counsels save us and the people of Mexico.

PRESIDENT LACKED GOOD ADVICE.

I have profound faith and confidence in the good intentions of our President. I approve most heartily his avowed and unquestioned desire to save our people from the loss and sacrifice which active intervention in the affairs of Mexico would entail. I regret most profoundly the lack of sound and sane advice which the President should have had and to which he was entitled. I still hope that a change of attitude and policy may place us in a position where we can be of real service to the people of Mexico without improperly intruding ourselves into their affairs.

I regret the situation in Mexico and our position there, not only on account of the woe and ruin it has wrought and its effect on our future relations with this neighboring people, but also because it has seemed to me that the situation there and our attitude in regard to it must necessarily have affected unfavorably our relations with other powers who, whatever may appear on the surface, have gravely doubted the wisdom of our position. I hope and trust that the effort and desire to bring other nations to our way of thinking or to passive acquiescence in our attitude toward Mexico has not tempted nor necessitated yielding to foreign demands in other matters. If it has or should, then, indeed, is our situation doubly lamentable, for how great will be our loss if a free hand in Mexico has cost us permanent prestige there and in other Latin American countries and weakened the fiber of our determination in our relations with other foreign countries.

What we have needed was close attention and prompt and practical action by those charged with authority in foreign affairs. On the contrary, our Secretary of State, while engaged in Chautauqua lectures and in speeches extolling the "New Freedom," is employing his spare moments in unwarranted intermeddling with the local politics of people of the West Indies and in promoting treaties calculated to embroil and entangle us in the domestic affairs of Central American countries. I am very glad to credit the best intentions in the world to the President and to the Secretary of State in connection with our foreign affairs, but good intentions can not save us from disasters which amateurs, theorists, dreamers, acting on impulse when not on prejudice, are likely to bring upon us. When we compare the policy of retreat in China, of aimless vacillation in Mexico, of meddling in the West Indies, and of entanglement in Central America, with the administration's plan of scoot and scuttle in the Philippines, where we have real interests and great responsibilities, we have a picture of external affairs calculated to make fools laugh and wise men grieve. A picture that would seem to warrant at least as large appropriations for the Army as are carried in this bill.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Has the gentleman any suggestions to offer as to what should be done?

Mr. MONDELL. I am neither the President nor any portion of the Cabinet, and certainly not the Secretary of State. I am sure that we have not left uncommitted many errors that might have been committed in our recent dealings with Mexico. I am sure that we have not done things that should have been done in connection with our dealings with Mexico. I have kept silent in regard to these matters because I have hoped for the best and because, agreeing with our President, I do not want to see armed intervention in Mexico. I speak now because our present policy, followed and adhered to, leads to intervention as unquestionably as the sunlight of to-day leads to the sunset and the darkness of the coming night.

Mr. FARR. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any suggestion that would avert intervention.

Mr. MONDELL. The probability is that if I made any definite suggestion, if it had any effect at all upon the powers that be, it would be to influence them against doing the very thing they ought to do. Assuming that there is a complete solution of our present difficulties, the probability is that it would not be wise for anyone on this side to suggest it. However, I will not leave the matter there. In national relations the usual rule is that you recognize the situation as it is and not as you might wish it to be. We are doing that everywhere on the face of this round globe save in Mexico. We maintain the friendliest relations with a man in power in China—what he may be I do not know, President, Emperor, King—who recently dismissed a Parliament. If there is any greater crime than that from the standpoint of constitutional government, I do not know what it could be.

We have recently recognized as President of Peru a man who has not half the constitutional claim or right to authority that Huerta has in Mexico. Whatever Huerta may have done—he has been charged, in my opinion, with crimes he never committed or had anything to do with—he is now in control of territory in which nearly three-quarters of the people of Mexico live. His government rules over the major part of Mexico. There is not a part of Mexico which his government does not control where rape and murder has not been stalking through the land these 12 months.

While I do not say whom we should recognize, if we must choose let us choose—if all are guilty, as some insist—between the guilty ones who maintain order and protect life and property rather than those who commit the crime without apology and make no pretense of protecting life and property or maintaining order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that Zapata with his army has been within sight of Mexico City and that he controls the greater portion of all of the States of Sinaloa and Guerro?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I never can bring myself to call the band of cutthroats and outlaws that respond to the call of Zapata an army—fiends who, it has been charged and not denied, ripped open the bowels of pregnant women and played football with their unborn babes; savages who have violated every law of God and man—these are the creatures with whom the so-called Constitutionalist Chief Carranza has been recently having negotiations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. As I understand the gentleman from Wyoming, he is in the position of a doctor who diagnoses a case——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield for anything but a question.

Speaking of this lovely outlaw, I am reminded that a correspondent for the New York World recently interviewed him at Xolox and wrote as follows, in regard to him, for his paper:

Across his lanky legs, which were incased in tightly fitting charro trousers strapped under dusty tan boots, his red, hairy hands lay loosely. Three fingers were circled with rings. One finger from the knuckle to the first joint was covered with rings, four or five of them bearing huge diamonds and a ruby and an emerald. Bigger diamonds were on the other fingers. The jewels fairly shrieked "loot" at one. So did the gold watch that was strapped around his wrist. Every man in his entourage was similarly decked out with gaudy but valuable jewelry. Over a soiled, rumpled blue silk shirt Zapata wore a short charro jacket. Embroidery in gold bullion almost hid the fabric of which his jacket was made. The buttons were of gold.

So were a double row of buttons on the outside of his tight trousers, as well as tiny chains that connected up the buttons two by two. Knotted under a low collar that sadly needed laundering was a red silk tie with long ends that flared down to the waist. In the tie was another diamond as big as the butt of one of the .30-30 Mauser cartridges, which he bore in his belt, and as yellow as the white of a bilious man's eyes. Two automatic revolvers resembling young cannon snuggled in stamped leather holsters at his hips. In gold on each holster were monogrammed his initials. Gold damascened silver spurs jangled from the heels of his boots. By his side lay a huge sombrero with pounds and pounds of gold bullion on the brim and crown. Here again on either side of the crown shone a gold monogram. Any pawnbroker in Mexico would have loaned Zapata at least $20,000 on himself as he sat taking his ease before the fire in Xolox.

Whenever Zapata spoke to the men or gave an order he fairly barked the words at them in a rough, guttural voice. Instant compliance was always given, and a semimilitary salute invariably prefaced any speech that Zapata's men addressed to him.

Impressions of brutality, ruthlessness, cunning, but nothing of real cleverness; an ill-proportioned ambition, vanity, and other qualities akin to these forced themselves upon one as the rebel leader's dominant characteristics. He is as impressive as a gaunt, fiery-eyed, snarling tiger man, who has committed some monstrous crime, or as a repulsive serpent is impressive, not because of anything within them latently noble, beneficent, or useful, but by reason of malign power for harm which they hold.

One can not train the imagination sufficiently to divine a humane, kind, wise, or patriotic Zapata. His appearance and manner, everything that one turns to the world in converse with other men, is against him. Revelations of self which came during the interview stamped him as a man in intellect, education, aspirations, and knowledge of his own country or of other lands not superior to the average peon whom one encounters anywhere in Mexico during a day's journey.

It is true, I believe—at least I hope it is—that we have not had any direct dealings with Zapata, but it is popularly reported, and not denied, that Carranza has been negotiating with him; for Zapata, be it remembered, also classes himself as a constitutionalist. So, while we have not dealt with Zapata, we have been encouraging those forces in the north that look upon him as a brother patriot, and in case of their advance on the City of Mexico they would expect Zapata to lend aid to their constitutional movement with attacks from the rear. What would happen in the City of Mexico and in other parts of the country with Villa and Zapata vying with each other in constitutional outlawry their past crimes eloquently suggest. Is not it about time that we cease affording aid, comfort, and encouragement to the forces of pillage, plunder, and savagery in Mexico?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from California desire to use any more time?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have promised some time to several gentlemen who were to be here; I do not see them present, and therefore I suggest that we commence reading the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingencies of the Army: For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the War Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified; to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $25,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question with reference to this item. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee was here this morning when the statement was made by my colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES] that out of the contingent fund of the Secretary of Labor an automobile was purchased, and that the auditor had held that the law authorized the purchase out of the contingent fund, upon the approval of the Secretary of Labor, of an automobile or other vehicle necessary to run the department in Washington. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if he understands any portion of this money is to be used for that purpose?

Mr. HAY. I do not understand so. The Secretary of War already has an automobile, and I do not suppose that he would want to buy another one.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman further whether or not he believes the Auditor for the War Department would audit a bill for the purchase of a vehicle or horses or automobile to be used by the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff or any other officer in the Army?

Mr. HAY. I do not think so; nor do I think the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff or any other officer stationed here would undertake to buy an automobile out of the contingent fund.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

Army War College: For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery; typewriters and exchange of same; office, toilet, and desk furniture; textbooks; books of reference; scientific and professional papers and periodicals; printing and binding; maps; police utensils; employment of temporary, technical, or special services; and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk of division for superintendence of the War College Building, $9,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what authorization there is for the extra $25 a month additional compensation for the chief clerk of the division for superintendence of the War College Building?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this has been carried in the bill for a good many years, and that this man, outside of his duties as chief clerk, has to superintend the War College Building. It is quite a large building, and he has under him a good many people. So far as there being any authority in law for it, there is no authority outside of the appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. How large is the salary now that is paid to this chief clerk?

Mr. HAY. I think the salary now is $1,800.

Mr. COX. How long has he held his present position?

Mr. HAY. I can not tell, because I do not know.

Mr. COX. My recollection is that for several years the legislative bill carried a sum of $200 to $400 per year additional pay to the chief clerk of the Treasury Department because of his care of the Treasury Building, and in some way or other, I do not know how, we got rid of that item and it does not any longer appear in the legislative bill.

Mr. HAY. They probably increased his salary to that extent.

Mr. COX. No; I do not think his salary has been increased. During the last seven years it has been $4,000 a year, and it has been that ever since I have been a Member of the House. I am rather inclined to the opinion that this $25 a month is not needed at all. I do not know what this clerk does, but if I were to venture an opinion I would say that he does not employ very much of his time in taking care of the building. The chairman of the committee has said that he has a large number of employees under him.

Mr. HAY. I did not say a large number.

Mr. COX. He has a few, then. I imagine if there is anybody looking after the building it is the clerks under him. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that part of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAY. I do not.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman desires to make a statement, I will reserve the point of order, but I will state to him that eventually I intend to make it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, very well. I shall not take up the time of the committee unnecessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the point of order is sustained to the words:

Including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk of division for superintendence of the War College Building.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true, down to the figures "$9,000."

Mr. HAY. So that the figures "$9,000" will come after the word "expenses"?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the figures "$9,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$8,700."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingencies, Military Information Section, General Staff Corps: For contingent expenses of the Military Information Section, General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books, professional books of reference, professional and technical periodicals and newspapers, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; and of the branch office of the Military Information Section at Manila and the actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred by military attachés abroad under orders from the Secretary of War, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000; Provided, That section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the proviso in this paragraph. May I ask the chairman the reason for that proviso?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, that proviso is carried in every appropriation bill where newspapers and periodicals are purchased abroad, for the reason that the subscription can not be paid at the time the subscription is made under that provision. The purpose is to permit the people subscribing to those newspapers and periodicals to do so without advertising, as is required in this section.

Mr. GARNER. Now, I will not make the point of order against it, but I would like to ask the gentleman another question with regard to the provisions of this paragraph, and that is in reference to the actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred by military attachés abroad under orders from the Secretary of War. I have heard some newspaper criticisms—and I might say some cloak-room criticisms—with reference to the expenses of military officers in their traveling expenses.

Mr. HAY. This does not apply to that item. The item to which the gentleman probably is addressing himself is an item which provides for pay for the mileage of officers in this country. This is for the travel of military attachés abroad.

Mr. GARNER. Is there any rule of the War Department limiting expenses in this direction?

Mr. HAY. Well, I presume so. I do not know what the rules are as to how much they will allow these officers for traveling abroad, but I take it they do not permit an officer traveling abroad as a military attaché to spend anything he pleases. It is a very small appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. I notice it is a very small appropriation; very little travel under it, or else it would be larger. My object in making this suggestion was that possibly in the next appropriation bill it might be wise to look into the question of expenditures for travel by the different officers of the Army. Since this has been a matter of criticism of magazines and newspapers, as well as Members of Congress, it has occurred to me it might be well for the committee, if I may be permitted to make that suggestion, at the next hearing in the Committee on Military Affairs to take up the question, so as to be able to give something like an itemized statement of the traveling expenses of the various officers of the Army in connection with their various duties.

Mr. HAY. Well, I will say to my friend from Texas there has been no question which has been before the Committee on Military Affairs that has been so thoroughly thrashed out as the question of mileage pay for officers. We have had it in every sort of form. We have had the Paymaster General before us when he had charge of that particular item. We have discussed it from every point of view, and we have come to the conclusion that the amount which we now allow officers for travel pay, 7 cents per mile, is the cheapest way it can be done.

Mr. GARNER. I am very glad the committee has had it under consideration, and I simply mention in this connection that if we sent an officer, for instance, over to Europe and allowed him 7 cents per mile, it would be rather an expensive item, considering the number of miles traveled and the actual fare paid for that travel.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman there is no question about the fact that it has been abused.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. COX. If I understand the matter correctly, the 7 cents per mile is not allowed while traveling abroad?

Mr. HAY. Not under this appropriation; but if an officer is ordered from the Philippines, for example, to come to this country he is allowed 7 cents a mile, as I understand.

Mr. GARNER. That is the point I was making about it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in this item is provided travel pay for military attachés abroad. We have one military attaché to serve in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. He has to go to the courts of those respective countries. There are quite a number of instances where one military attaché is assigned to several capitals, and of course they must travel, and it is only a small portion of this item.

Mr. HAY. And it is not abused, I think.

Mr. GARNER. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Annunciator buzzer systems at target ranges: Maintenance of annunciator buzzer systems at target ranges, $3,800.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have received a communication from the Acting Secretary of War, Mr. Breckenridge, which calls my attention to the fact there is an item for commercial telephone service at Coast Artillery posts, usually carried in the bill, but which was inadvertently omitted; it reads as follows:

For providing commercial telephone service for official services at Coast Artillery posts, $6,000.

And which should have been included here. The Secretary says:

This is in no sense a new item, but a change that has been made from one supply corps to another for the purpose of simplifying the administration.

Under these circumstances I offer the following amendment, which the Clerk will find in the middle of the page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 6, page 6, insert the following:
"Commercial telephone service at Coast Artillery posts: For providing commercial telephone service for official purposes at Coast Artillery posts, $6,000."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. I would like to ask the chairman whether he thinks that this system will be the beginning of a general plan to take over the telephone systems of the country by the Government?

Mr. HAY. It is not for the purpose of taking over any system; it is for the purpose of paying some commercial telephone company for the use of their phones.

Mr. KAHN. It does not contemplate——

Mr. HAY. And I am advised it has heretofore been carried in the bill; but they segregated it into a separate item, for the purpose, as the Secretary says, of better administration.

Mr. KAHN. I understand it is simply to enable them to pay the bills of local telephone companies where they use the lines of local companies rather than put in their own plant?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF OFFICERS OF THE LINE.

For pay of officers of the line, $7,750,000.
For pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,616,218.27.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how many classifications of officers there are in the Army?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that I do not exactly understand his question.

Mr. HELM. I understand there are line officers and officers of the staff and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. HAY. Noncommissioned men are not officers. They are enlisted men.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman kindly give the line of demarcation or distinction between a staff officer and a line officer?

Mr. HAY. A line officer is an officer who is in the line of the Army. That is, he is in the Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Coast Artillery.

Mr. KAHN. He serves with troops.

Mr. HAY. He does not necessarily serve with troops. He may possibly be detailed to some other duty. A staff officer is an officer who is on some of the staff corps, for instance, the Quartermaster Corps, the Signal Corps, the Ordnance Corps, or is in the Staff Corps of the Army, such as engineers, surgeons, and so forth.

Mr. KAHN. An adjutant general.

Mr. HELM. One goes into the field with the Army when it is in action, and the other——

Mr. HAY. A staff officer very frequently goes into the field.

Mr. HELM. And all line officers go into the field?

Mr. HAY. They do.

Mr. HELM. And some staff officers may go? What does a noncommissioned officer do?

Mr. HAY. The noncommissioned officers go into the field all the time, except some of them, who may be in the Staff Corps, such as quartermaster sergeants, for example.

Mr. HELM. I notice the pay of the officers of the line is $7,750,000. Does it appear in here anywhere what the total pay of the staff officers is?

Mr. HAY. Yes. There is a separate item for staff officers farther on in the bill.

Mr. HELM. Can the gentleman tell the committee what the total amount of the appropriations carried by this bill is received by the officers of the line, the staff officers, and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. HAY. I can not tell the gentleman that, because I have not any figures which will enable me to tell him what the noncommissioned officers get. I can tell him, however, what the officers receive.

Mr. HELM. Both line and staff?

Mr. HAY. Both line and staff, and what the enlisted men receive.

Mr. HELM. Will you kindly do that, please?

Mr. HAY. The line officers receive what is stated here, namely, $7,750,000. The enlisted men receive——

Mr. HELM. Not the enlisted men?

Mr. HAY. The noncommissioned officers are enlisted men.

Mr. HELM. They are not men in the ranks?

Mr. HAY. Yes; they are men in the ranks.

Mr. HELM. But they have official duties?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. HELM. They are not what you term "privates"?

Mr. HAY. They are not privates, but they are just as much enlisted men as are the privates.

Mr. HELM. They are enlisted, but they are not in the line of battle?

Mr. HAY. Yes; they are, of course. A first sergeant is the most important man in his company and has as much responsibility, almost, as the captain of the company.

Mr. HELM. Well, that is what I am trying to get at, namely, the distinction between what is termed the "private," the common or ordinary soldier, and the noncommissioned officer.

Mr. HAY. I will try to explain to the gentleman. Every man who enlists in the Army enlists as a private. If he is found worthy after being in the Army for six months or a year, he may be promoted to the office of corporal, and if he proves himself well qualified for that——

Mr. HELM. He thereby becomes a noncommissioned officer?

Mr. HAY. He becomes a noncommissioned officer. And then he may be promoted to a sergeant, and from sergeant to first sergeant; and then there are some sergeant majors. Each regiment has a sergeant major. It depends entirely on a man's qualifications or his merits whether he is made a noncommissioned officer in the Army or not.

Mr. HELM. What I am trying to get at is, if the chairman can furnish me with the information, the number of line officers, the number of staff officers, and the number of noncommissioned officers, and the total amount that these officers of all classes receive under this bill, including longevity, emoluments, and everything else.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is asking me——

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, on page 112 of the hearings you will find that the number of officers——

Mr. HAY. I can give the gentleman the number of officers in The Adjutant General's report.

Mr. HELM. What class of officers are they?

Mr. KAHN. They are officers of the line.

Mr. HAY. They are officers of the line. In 1913 there were 4,465.

Mr. HELM. Active?

Mr. HAY. They are commissioned officers in active service.

Mr. HELM. That has nothing to do with the retired list?

Mr. HAY. Nothing to do with the retired officers. There were 4,465 commissioned officers on the active list, and of these 1,227, including 66 chaplains, were general officers in the Staff Corps and departments. Seven hundred and eighty-eight belonged to the Cavalry, 262 to the Field Artillery, 748 to the Coast Artillery, and 1,640 to the Infantry. That is the report of The Adjutant General as to the officers.

Mr. HELM. That does not include noncommmissioned officers?

Mr. HAY. No. As to the noncommissioned officers, it is impossible for me to answer the question of the gentleman, for the reason that in making up this appropriation we do not ask of the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps, who has charge of this, the number of noncommissioned officers. They are listed under the general head of enlisted men.

Mr. HELM. But they have a different classification?

Mr. HAY. They have no different classification. They are not paid as officers. They are paid as enlisted men.

Mr. HELM. But they receive more than the private soldier receives, do they not?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman desires it, I can give him the pay of a sergeant and of a corporal and of a private soldier.

Mr. HELM. I am not particularly interested in what the individual receives.

Mr. HAY. Under the act of May 11, 1908, which was the act which increased the pay of the Army, a sergeant of the first class in the Signal Corps, the first sergeant of Artillery, Cavalry, and Engineers gets $45 a month on his first enlistment.

Mr. HELM. Now, what does the private soldier get?

Mr. HAY. A private soldier gets $15 a month, unless he is a private in the Engineers, Ordnance, or Signal Corps, when he gets $18 a month.

Mr. HELM. These noncommissioned officers in the same class of service receive a higher salary?

Mr. HAY. Yes. The corporal gets $24. They have different rates. I do not care to take up the time to read the rates unless somebody wants to hear them.

Mr. HELM. I am not particularly interested in that.

Mr. Chairman, my object in trying to get this information is to inform the committee as near as I can what proportion of this entire appropriation carried by the bill is received by the commissioned officers, the officers of the line, the staff officers, and the retired officers of all classes, including Philippine Scouts, together with their perquisites and emoluments, longevity, heat, light, expenses, and every other blessing that can be had by individuals. A year or so ago, when I was connected with the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, I worked some time to figure up what the total amount of money was that is received by these various classes of officers, and if my recollection serves me correctly, it amounted to about $40,000,000. Out of a total appropriation of $94,000,000 the officers of the Army are receiving virtually one-half. It has been my observation since I have been a Member of Congress that there has been a continuous campaign carried on by the officers of the Army to increase their compensation. They have not been so much interested in the organization of an Army as in the increase of their compensation and perquisites.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HELM. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. The thing that has not appealed to me in these matters of appropriations for the Army and Navy is the almost scandalous system in vogue—and I measure my words when I use that language—of logrolling, conducting a campaign year in and year out for the purpose of increasing their compensation. It has grown to be almost a scandal. If you men would stop to think for a moment you would be surprised to know that out of a total appropriation of $94,000,000, if I am in any wise near correct—and I challenge any man to get on the floor and deny the statement—of that sum of money well-nigh $40,000,000 finds its way into the pockets of these officers of the Army.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I deny that statement absolutely.

Mr. KAHN. So do I.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is wholly mistaken in that statement.

Mr. HELM. I lay down this statement, that the officers of the line and the staff officers and the noncommissioned officers, active and retired, receive $40,000,000 a year in salaries and their many varieties of perquisites.

Mr. HAY. Oh, well——

Mr. HELM. Let me finish my statement, gentlemen. Including the emoluments that they receive, and they are too numerous to mention—the longevity pay, their heat and light and furniture and buildings, and things of that kind that are provided for their comfort—I say to you after investigating it—and the chairman of the committee said just a moment ago that he had never made an investigation and could not tell how much was paid these noncommissioned officers—I say to you that after investigating I risk my statement that it is between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000. I went over the figures and took the time to go through an appropriation bill similar to this, and that was the result of my investigation.

Now, if that is true—and the Chairman says it is not, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] says it is not true—then I ask both of them to state what is the total amount, including all of those items on account of the noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HAY. I can give it to the gentleman, generally speaking, just as he has done. The gentleman mixes up, in the first place, the officers of the Army. The officers of the Army are one thing; the noncommissioned officers are enlisted men, and an entirely separate and distinct class of men.

Mr. HELM. I am talking about everybody except the high private in the rear ranks, if you may so term him—the common, ordinary soldier.

Mr. HAY. There is appropriated in this bill $7,750,000 for officers of the line.

Mr. HELM. How much for longevity?

Mr. HAY. It is about $9,300,000, including longevity pay.

Mr. HELM. What does that cover?

Mr. HAY. That goes to the officers of the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to take the floor in my own right for the purpose of answering the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HELM. I would like to ask unanimous consent for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. HELM. I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman can go ahead. I will take the floor when he is through.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, simply repeating what I said before, if I am anywhere in the neighborhood of being correct, does it not strike this committee as a very unwholesome situation?

If one-half or even one-third of this $94,000,000 finds its way into the pockets of these officers, is not this an unbalanced bill, so to speak? I am not charging the chairman of the committee, or any member of the committee, or the committee as a whole with any dereliction of duty. This thing has grown up from time immemorial and has been persistent and insistent. You heard a former member of this committee on the floor of this House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], tell you this morning how there is a continual campaign going on on the part of the Army and the Navy. It reminds me of the time when we were all children, and each one complained about the other getting the biggest stick of candy. The officers of the Army are afraid that the officers of the Navy will get a little more out of the Treasury than they will get, and vice versa, and so the system has gone on. The criticism I have to make is this——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I take it the gentleman is going upon the theory that we have too many officers. Now, the number of officers is fixed by law, and their salaries are fixed by law, and not by this bill. This is simply an appropriation to pay salaries authorized by law.

Mr. HELM. I said a moment ago that I am finding no fault with this committee. This is a system that has grown up—a condition that this committee has got to confront. But what I am trying to do is to remind the committee of the fact that instead of looking after an organization, a fighting machine, this thing has resolved itself into a log-rolling system among the officers of the Army to get money out of the Treasury.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understand the gentleman to say that there are too many officers. Can the gentleman suggest any sort of organized fighting machine with fewer officers in it than those provided under the law for the organization of the United States Army?

Mr. HELM. I do not think the gentleman has correctly understood me or correctly quoted me. I have never yet said in this discussion that there are too many officers in the Army, whatever may be my opinion about it. The thing that I am criticizing is the log-rolling system among the officers of the Army to increase their pay—compensation and emoluments—that mount up into the millions of dollars. That is what I am directing my criticism against.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman does not think that the noncommissioned officers are paid too much, does he?

Mr. HELM. If you should go through the bill and pick out every line officer—you might pick out any one man—and you could not say that he got too much money. I advocate a horizontal reduction.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I mean the noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HELM. I would not say that the private gets too much money, or anything of that kind.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understood that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have been a member of the Military Affairs Committee for some years, and I have never been cognizant of Army officers making it a business to logroll with members of that committee to increase their pay. [Applause.] There may have been some instances in which certain officers have sought to get promotions; but the great body of the officers of the Army of the United States are as high-class men as there are in this country. [Applause.] I do not believe that any gentleman on this floor is warranted in making the statement that officers of the Army, speaking generally, are in the habit of logrolling with Congress for the purpose of increasing their salaries.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In the gentleman's experience as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, is it not his judgment that officers of the Army are less seen around those places where lobbying could be done, and do less lobbying on their own behalf, than almost any other class of officials in the United States?

Mr. HAY. I can say that most truthfully.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is my experience.

Mr. HAY. I can say that the officers of the Army who come to the room of the Committee on Military Affairs come there because they are requested to do so, to give their evidence in hearings before the committee, and they do it as a duty and not because they want to. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] that, as suggested by my friend from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], we are appropriating in this bill for the pay of the Army under the law, and if the gentleman thinks these men receive too much money, if he thinks there are too many officers, why has not the gentleman, during his long term of service here, introduced a bill for the purpose of cutting down this pay and cutting down the number of the officers of the Army? I myself do not believe that these men are receiving more money than they are entitled to. I do not believe that men occupying the responsible positions which they occupy ought to be cut down to a pittance in the service of their country; and while I believe that the Army is costing more than it ought to cost, we can not afford to become penurious at the expense of these servants of the public who are doing their duty, and who do it under all circumstances, and who in the last 10 years have, in my judgment, demonstrated that they are better fitted to perform their duties than are the officers of any other army in the world. [Applause.] Every time a great calamity occurs in this country, a great fire or a great flood, or when there is any great national undertaking to be accomplished, the officers of the Army are always called upon, and when they are called upon they are always found equal to the occasion. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I know my friend from Kentucky must have had in mind only a few of these officers when he was talking about their logrolling with Members of Congress, and I trust that if my friend feels aggrieved by the provisions of this bill he will introduce some substantive measure which will enable the Committee on Military Affairs to take up the matter. I assure him that we will give him a hearing, and we will give to any measure which he sends to us proper and fair consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I shall not engage in the controversy between the able chairman of this committee [Mr. HAY] and the able gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM]. The chairman of this committee in the course of his remarks struck a chord which constrains me to testify to something within my own knowledge. I must confess that formerly I did not have very much use for the Army; but last April when large sections of my district were absolutely swept away, when practically every town along the Ohio River in my district for a distance of about 300 miles was inundated, when people's houses were flooded and they were driven from their homes, and thousands of their homes washed away, appeals began coming in to me about 8 o'clock one night for help, aid, and assistance. I was at my home and came to my office and immediately got in touch with Gen. Wood, and to my knowledge Gen. Wood stayed up that night until midnight. I was at the telephone in my office and he was directing the forces along the Ohio River by means of the telegraph.

I never appealed to him a single time during that trying ordeal for seven days for aid, assistance, and relief but what it was given to my people as fast and as rapidly as it could get there. I must confess that to some extent I changed my views of the Army. I am in thorough accord with what the chairman of the committee has said, that in every great disaster, whether it be a flood, fire, or earthquake, it is always the same; sometimes with its strong arm, sometimes with its arm of aid and assistance, but it goes to the rescue. I have no purpose in making the statement except that I probably heretofore have said a few things on the floor of the House that might reflect on the Army, but my views have been somewhat changed. While I am not in accord with everything in this bill, yet I believe that the Army does some very valuable work for this Nation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I want to add a few words along the line of praise of the Army in time of unexpected stress and emergency which the gentleman from Indiana has just uttered. I think I have anticipated the gentleman from California who would have said what I am about to say much more ably, and still I felt that I wanted to say this because, first, in regard to what the Army officers and the rank and file of the Army did in time of that awful calamity in San Francisco which came to me first-hand. I have people in the Army and I have people who reside in San Francisco, and among them a brother who always votes for the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], although he knows how much it offends me to have him do so. [Laughter.]

As my brother told me when he came back from there, the Army was on the water front of San Francisco handling the most vicious crowd from all the criminal places in the world down on the Barbary coast. The Army was up in the business section assisting the rescuers of books and valuable papers and money. The Army was a little farther up the hill helping men and women to escape from residences. The Army was still farther out in Van Ness Avenue and Franklin Street helping people to escape with their lives alone.

The Army was still farther out in the hills, and, as one officer said, he had to teach a young mother how to heat the milk for her babe. Another officer of equal rank and willingness was teaching troops how to blow down blocks of buildings to prevent the flames from spreading over the rest of San Francisco. And so it is the same in every great calamity. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has said, the Army and the officers have always prosecuted this rescue work ably, honestly, fearlessly, and willingly. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit me to add this to what he has said: The medical officers of the Army were in the hospitals ministering to the needs of those who required medical attendance. The medical officers of the Army, when hundreds and thousands of people were homeless, taught them how to keep their little temporary shacks in a sanitary condition so as to prevent any malignant disease arising in the community and adding to the horrors of the occasion.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman from California that such was the case, and also I will add that in the Army posts the wives of the Army officers were working 24 hours a day to relieve the suffering of the women.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the committee has already discovered how impossible a task the chairman of the committee has ascribed me to undertake to reduce one farthing the amount that any officer receives by way of salary or compensation, emoluments, or benefits. It is a hopeless and a useless task. The Army and Navy have a grip on the Treasury that no one can release.

Now, I am measuring my words. I know how easy it is to get up on the floor, like some gentlemen do, and pat the officers of the Army and the officers of the Navy on the backs, making much ado about it. It is easy to reply to criticism that anybody makes on the floor as I am doing. Any time you get up on any occasion and make any criticism of any officer all they have to do is to hand out just exactly what I am getting here. What is the use? It is a hopeless and a useless task.

Now, if you want to organize a fire brigade, do it; but do not try to use the Army as a "darky-town" fire brigade out of the Army. If you are going to use the Army on flood propositions, that is all good and well. Then go on, and every time there is a flood or an earthquake double the salary of the officers and you will get a magnificent Army organization.

The chairman of the committee says you have got the greatest Army that ever was. I submit to him that he read the letter of Gen. Edwards, written to Senator ROOT. Gen. Edwards has had charge of the forces that have been down on the Rio Grande, and he states that so far as a divisional organization of our Army goes, it is a complete, abject failure. There you are.

The thing I have been hammering on is to try to get the House to give its attention to these constant increases here and there.

I have distinctly put myself on record as not criticizing this committee for making these appropriations, because you have got to do it. These increases are creeping in inch by inch and inch by inch. It comes in from one amendment to another; first the pay, then the rate, and then one thing after another—mileage, longevity pay, furnishing them with horses, bridles, saddles, provender, every piece of equipment—and most every year some new item is carried in the bill which increases the compensation of these officers.

Some additional emolument is added which they receive. If you are going to stand here and let it go on, we may as well surrender and let it go.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the gentleman know that any increase in this bill not provided for by law is subject to a point of order which the gentleman has a right to make?

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman please tell me how it is that the emoluments of these officers and their salaries have year in and year out grown larger?

Mr. McKELLAR. They do not grow any larger except when this Houses increase them.

Mr. HELM. Of course, that is just what I have been complaining about, not so much now as in the past, hoping thereby to check it in the future as much as possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the gentleman will permit me, they are not increased by this Army appropriation bill. We can only appropriate in this bill what is authorized by law.

Mr. HELM. Why, Mr. Chairman, that is my whole object in taking this floor—to try and get Members of this House awakened to the fact that this abuse is going on from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I noticed an article in one of the Washington newspapers to the effect there had recently been times when there was not sufficient ammunition to permit the firing of the defense guns on the Pacific coast for a period of 30 minutes.

Still another article stated that should there be war, two years would be required to obtain sufficient ammunition to place the Army on a war footing.

Both these statements were based on testimony given before a Senate committee by Brig. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance of the Army.

Just think of it! Although Congress has been appropriating $100,000,000 annually to maintain the Army in a state at least approaching preparedness for war, there is not sufficient ammunition on the Pacific coast at times to last 30 minutes!

GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN OVERCHARGED FOR MUNITIONS OF WAR.

I desire to submit to the American people what I believe to be the reason for this state of affairs. The reason, in my opinion, is that Gen. Crozier and other Army and Navy officers have for years been permitting a ring of eastern manufacturers to outrageously overcharge the Government for its munitions of war.

I desire to ask Gen. Crozier why he has been paying the ammunition ring $3.06 for a 3-inch finished shrapnel case when he can manufacture and is manufacturing the identical article in the Government arsenals for $1.75? I would like to know why he has been paying the ammunition ring $17.50 for a 3.8-inch common shrapnel when he can manufacture and is manufacturing the identical article in the arsenals for $7.94? Seventeen dollars and fifty cents is more than twice $7.94. The Government could manufacture two shrapnel for the price it is paying the private manufacturers for one and have $1.62 left over on each transaction. It is the public funds that are being spent here, and the people have a right to have these questions answered.

BIG SAVING RESULTS FROM GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE.

The illustrations just cited are merely average samples of the manner in which the Army and Navy officers have been permitting Uncle Sam to be overcharged in the purchase of military supplies. These officers do not seem to have any regard for money—at least for the people's money.

A contract for $1,900,064 worth of ammunition was given the Frankford Arsenal, at Philadelphia, and the Government saved $979,000, or approximately $1,000,000, on a $2,000,000 order.

The program of the War Department calls for $20,000,000 worth of field artillery ammunition and $11,000,000 worth of field artillery gun carriages and other equipment.

Were a business man in Uncle Sam's place, would he give the bulk of this $31,000,000 order to the ammunition ring or would he enlarge his own plants and save from 20 to 50 per cent on that portion of the order he would thus be able to take care of himself? Is not a saving to the people of 35 per cent on contracts running into the millions annually worth the saving?

In less than 17 years three firms comprising the ammunition ring and the armor ring have drawn down in excess of $100,000,000 worth of fat Government contracts from the Army and Navy, and if the Government had manufactured all these supplies in the arsenals and navy yards $35,000,000, at the very least estimate, would have been saved to the people.

THE ADVANTAGES OF THE ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

To enlarge the Government arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., so that it may manufacture a large portion of the Army supplies for which the Government is now being grossly overcharged by the ammunition ring, would not require the expenditure of a penny for ground, buildings, or water power.

I do not believe the United States Government sufficiently appreciates what a prize it has in the Rock Island military tract, which is adjacent to the enterprising and thriving cities of Rock Island, Moline, Davenport, and East Moline, having a combined population in excess of 100,000, and in the very heart of one of the most promising manufacturing centers in the Middle West. The tract covers 896 acres of an island in the Mississippi, with a double row of great stone buildings and elegant drives, and every acre a natural park, with beautiful shade trees in profusion everywhere.

I firmly believe that this piece of Government property offers the best site that can be found for the proposed $7,000,000 armor-plate factory, and I have introduced a resolution, H. Res. 306, requiring the Secretary of the Navy to carefully consider the advantages of Rock Island, which will be enumerated more fully later on in these remarks, before determining upon any other site for the armor factory. In the meantime every Member of Congress is invited to stop off at Rock Island and see for himself what a magnificent and advantageous site Uncle Sam already has for a great central military manufacturing plant without having to go to the expense of purchasing additional ground for this purpose.

AMMUNITION RING TAKES WORK FROM ROCK ISLAND.

At the Rock Island Arsenal to-day there are two great stone buildings, originally constructed for manufacturing purposes at a cost of approximately $400,000 each, being used only for storage purposes. These two buildings are magnificent structures, and at a cost of $250,000 each could be equipped with the necessary machinery to manufacture field-artillery ammunition.

As I rode through the arsenal grounds at Rock Island recently and saw these two fine buildings standing deserted and idle I could not help but think of the fact that contracts for war munitions which could be manufactured in these buildings are at present going to the ammunition ring, and that the Army officers are paying this ring from 20 to 60 per cent more than they could manufacture the same orders for in these two buildings at Rock Island.

The real explanation of the idleness of these buildings is that the strong and long arm of the ammunition ring has reached into the Government buildings at Rock Island and taken the work away from them. This procedure means huge profits to the ammunition ring, but at a tremendous cost to the public.

GEN. CROZIER OPPOSES ENLARGEMENT OF ARSENAL.

Gen. Crozier has from the start opposed—not openly, but from under cover—my efforts to have these two buildings equipped with machinery for manufacturing field artillery ammunition. If these buildings were equipped, Gen. Crozier could no longer go before the Appropriation Committees and testify that he does not have capacity in the Government arsenals to do such manufacturing, and must, therefore, award the fat contracts to the ammunition ring.

The Rock Island Arsenal is now the largest arsenal in the United States, and when the policy of complete Government manufacture of munitions in Government arsenals gets to working the Rock Island Arsenal is destined to become one of the largest arsenals in the world. This arsenal has the advantage of free water power, the Government owning its own power plant in the Mississippi River. The Government can manufacture cheaper at Rock Island than at any other point in the United States.

THE "PATRIOTISM" OF THE ARMOR RING.

Army and Navy officers claim that the ammunition ring and the armor ring are composed of a group of patriotic manufacturers, and that we ought to give them work in time of peace in order that we may depend upon their patriotic cooperation in time of war. But when war with Spain was imminent, these three concerns got together and issued an ultimatum to the Government that they would not manufacture a single piece of armor plate unless the Government would agree to pay them $100 a ton more than the price that had been determined upon by Congress, after an investigation, as a fair price.

But at the same time the armor ring was selling to Russia for $249 a ton the same plate that it was demanding $616 a ton for from the United States Government.

Ball cartridges, caliber .30, for the regulation service rifles were made at the Frankford Arsenal in 1912 for $26.95 per 1,000, including all overhead charges. For the same cartridge private manufacturers are receiving $38.04.

Why should the Government pay private manufacturers $1,708 for a 3-inch caisson when it is manufacturing the identical article at Rock Island Arsenal for $1,081, all overhead charges included?

Why should the Government pay private manufacturers $3,268 for a 3-inch gun carriage when it is manufacturing the same thing at the Rock Island Arsenal for $2,341?

PEOPLE WIN IMPORTANT VICTORY.

But the days of the ammunition ring and the armor ring are numbered. Their friends are being forced out of the saddle.

For the first time in the history of the Government the fortification bill and the Army bill now under consideration are so worded as to require practically all munitions of war, at least so far as the Army is concerned, to be manufactured in the Government arsenals. I consider this legislation one of the greatest achievements of the present Congress, for which the members of the Military Affairs Committee and the Appropriations Committee in particular, and the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle in general, deserve the unstinted thanks of the country.

The new policy will mean that the Government itself will save millions annually, because of its ability to manufacture cheaper than outside manufacturers, and that the workmen who actually do the work will receive better wages for 8-hour work days than the employees of the outside manufacturers receive for 9 and 10 and, in some instances, 12-hour work days.

The new policy of complete Government manufacture of munitions of war will very largely take the profit out of war, to the end that Army appropriation bills will be required to stand the test of merit alone.

I hope to see a similar policy adopted regarding all expenditures in the Navy, and am giving my full support to Secretary Daniels in his efforts to bring this about.

When all profit is taken out of war we may expect complete disappearance of the systematic agitation now being carried on in this country for an ever and ever increased amount of armament, which agitation is especially systematic and pronounced about the time the Army and Navy bills are before Congress each year.

Gen. Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, reluctantly admitted before the Committee on Military Affairs that, on the average, he could save 35 per cent by manufacturing field-artillery ammunition in the arsenals.

Mr. McKELLAR. More than that.

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; it ranges all the way from 20 per cent to 60 per cent. These illustrations I have given here are not exceptions picked out just to make a good case, but they are the general rule. I have a clipping in my hand here from a Washington newspaper concerning contracts awarded by the Navy Department. The naval officers have been doing the same thing that the Army officers have been doing. The same three manufacturers that have been permitted to overcharge the Army have also been doing the work for the Navy.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman does not mean to say that any officers of the Army or officers of the Navy have been guilty of any such impropriety as he is charging here?

Mr. TAVENNER. I mean to say that these officers have been guilty and are now guilty of allowing private manufacturers to outrageously overcharge the Government. I have any amount of figures here to sustain this statement, on any particular feature of the proposition the gentleman may desire to know about.

Mr. HELM. Let me see if I thoroughly understand the gentleman. These are officers of the Army that are doing this?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. HELM. In view of the statements made here by certain gentlemen on the floor of the House, it must seem astonishing to them that an officer of the Army could possibly have done anything along the line the gentleman says they have done. Nevertheless I am not astonished at the information you have given the House on this subject.

Mr. TAVENNER. When Mr. Daniels became Secretary of the Navy he discovered the Government was being grossly overcharged almost the first week he was in office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 10 minutes.

Mr. TAVENNER. I do not care for any more time, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNCLE SAM'S CONFIDENCE AND TRUST BETRAYED.

Mr. TAVENNER. Easy-going, generous, old Uncle Sam has been passing out his hundreds of millions every year for the Army and Navy, and the Army and Navy officers have so used the money that for each dollar expended the country has received little more than 50 cents' worth of war materials.

Congress has been appropriating $100,000,000 annually for the Army alone, or, to be exact, $1,007,410,270 in the last 10 years, and then has been permitting the Army officers to have practically a free rein in the expenditure of these colossal sums.

And Congress has been making a mistake.

For instance, if $3,000,000 is appropriated for Field Artillery ammunition, the Chief of Ordnance is left practically free to purchase the ammunition from outside manufacturers or to manufacture it in the Government arsenals. The same applies to the Navy.

THREE CONCERNS GET BULK OF CONTRACTS.

Under this practice, which gives a few officers altogether too much freedom in the handling of so many millions of the people's funds, a few favored contractors have been able to obtain the great bulk of the fat Government contracts.

For instance, three concerns have obtained from the Army and Navy more than $100,000,000 worth of contracts in 17 years. These three concerns have conspired to prevent competitive bidding between them, and the Army and Navy officers have only winked at this teamwork on the part of the armor and ammunition trusts.

The Army and Navy officers have shown a marked generosity in spending the people's money with these three concerns. They have been paying the ring all the way from 20 to 60 per cent more than they could have manufactured identical or superior guns, ammunition, and other munitions for in the Government arsenals and navy yards.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY SAVES TAXPAYERS $2,000,000.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels deserves the support of the Nation in the courageous and effective fight he is making to rescue the Navy Department from the tender mercies of the armor ring. For years the Navy has been dominated by the armor ring. Having a monopoly on the manufacture of armor plate in this country, the armor ring has been able to demand and obtain extortionate prices for armor plate. Secretary Daniels called a halt almost the first day he entered office. Through real competitive bidding he has already saved the Government more than $2,000,000, and has been in office only one year.

WHAT HAPPENS UNDER REAL COMPETITIVE BIDDING.

Recently he awarded a contract for building 100 torpedo flasks, including heads. There was competition; new contractors entered the field previously monopolized by the ring, and the Secretary of the Navy was able to purchase 100 flasks for $58,246 which under former conditions would have cost $115,075.

The bids of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the Midvale Steel Co., two of the three concerns composing the armor ring, under honest competitive bidding showed a reduction of 44 per cent as compared with bids for similar forgings submitted by these companies only four months previous.

Personally I believe that these officers who in the expenditure of the people's money have been paying $115,075 for supplies which, had they been as alert in the people's interest as was the Secretary of the Navy, could have been obtained for $58,246, should, somewhere or in some manner, be required to make a public accounting for their acts.

ARMY OFFICERS DO NOT VOLUNTEER INFORMATION.

Ever since my election I have been endeavoring to obtain facts relative to the expenditure of Army and Navy appropriations. My very first visit with the Army officers at the War Department convinced me that I had an uphill journey ahead of me. Any request for information was resented as an attempt to pry into the personal affairs of Army officers. Every possible obstruction was placed in the way, and some letters remained unanswered for more than two months.

Scarcely ever have I been able to obtain the exact information asked for.

A CONGRESSMAN'S PRINCIPAL VALUE IS TO APPROPRIATE MONEY.

The small group of Army officers who are running things care very little about the average Member of Congress, particularly the young, inexperienced Member of Congress, who, like all the general public and 98 per cent of the Members of Congress, knows very little of the practices and customs in vogue in the Army and Navy relative to the buying of ammunition and supplies. These officers want no interference, and least of all close scrutiny of the prices they pay for ammunition, either by Mr. Congressman or anyone else.

The Army and Navy officers who run things were in the saddle long before the inexperienced Member of Congress came on the scene, and will no doubt be on the job a long time after he has taken his departure. Administrations come and go, but the Army and Navy organization goes on forever. Army and Navy officers never have to go before the people and answer for their acts, and they have a powerful organization to smooth things over and to protect them.

INFORMATION IS VERY HARD TO OBTAIN.

Here is just one experience I have had in my endeavor to obtain information concerning the Rock Island Arsenal, to which I was entitled as the Representative in Congress of the district in which the arsenal is located, but which information I have never been able to receive.

Some time back Representative MOORE, of Pennsylvania, placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD extensive data prepared by Col. George Montgomery, commandant of the Frankford Arsenal at Philadelphia, showing the advantage of that plant for manufacturing.

I was desirous of obtaining similar data concerning the Rock Island Arsenal for use in support of a bill I had introduced in Congress to equip two buildings there for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition.

I wrote Col. George W. Burr, commandant of the Rock Island Arsenal, requesting similar information to that prepared by Col. Montgomery on behalf of Frankford Arsenal. Col. Burr is an enthusiastic supporter of Rock Island, and in every good faith replied that it would be a pleasure to furnish the information requested; that as a result of the free water power at Rock Island, where the Government owns its own power plant in the Mississippi, he could make a showing that would be much to the advantage of Rock Island. He stated he had already assigned men to collect the data required, and that he would have it to me within a week for use in support of my bill.

Two months passed and the information did not come. In the meantime I had been writing Col. Burr, importuning him to hurry the data along, as I had urgent need of it. Then I received a letter to the effect that he had been able to obtain only part of the data desired and that he had deemed it advisable to first submit it to Gen. Crozier, who was anxious that I be supplied with the information, and who would add the data that could not be obtained at Rock Island and would forward all to me direct.

GEN. CROZIER IS STINGY WITH INFORMATION.

The data has never come, but in its stead a letter from Gen. Crozier to the effect I would find the information I desired in the hearings of the Appropriation Committee. An examination of the hearings showed that it did not contain the special data I desired and did not contain the data I asked for.

What actually happened was that Col. Burr felt it incumbent upon him to obtain the consent of Gen. Crozier before giving me any information, and Gen. Crozier did not permit it to reach me.

What Gen. Crozier's motive was in withholding this and other information, I can not say because I do not know. I can, however, state the fact that Gen. Crozier is an enthusiastic advocate of the policy of giving as much work as possible to outside manufacturers at prices ranging from 20 to 60 per cent more than he can manufacture—and is manufacturing—the same articles for in the Government arsenals.

It is obvious that if I am successful in attaining the end for which I desire the information above alluded to—that is, in having the two large buildings at Rock Island equipped with machinery—the ammunition ring will lose some contracts for Government work that have been exceedingly fat.

CROZIER SELLS PATENT TO BETHLEHEM CO.

When Representative HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, one of the best known and most respected men in public life, and one of the leaders on the Democratic side of this House, investigated the domination of the War and Navy Departments by the armor and ammunition rings, he took occasion to mention Gen. Crozier in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives on Tuesday, February 21, 1911, as follows:

Millions of dollars were expended by the Government on the Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriage while Buffington was Chief of Ordnance and while Crozier was a member of the Board of Ordnance. These officers, as a result of experimenting with Government money, were finally enabled to take out a patent on the disappearing gun carriage now in use in this country. The patent was taken out at the suggestion of the Bethlehem Iron Co., as Mr. Crozier admitted. These two officers sold all the rights to the Bethlehem Iron Co., as Mr. Crozier also admitted, for $10,000, and the Bethlehem Iron Co. agreed to pay to Gen. Buffington and to Gen. Crozier, in addition to that amount, royalties on each carriage built for Governments other than the United States until on this account there had been paid to these officers in royalties the sum of $50,000.

A MAN CAN NOT SERVE TWO MASTERS.

These officers, therefore, charged with protecting the contracts made by this Government with the steel companies against fraud on the part of the steel companies, charged also with placing orders for armor plate and for castings for guns with steel companies, entered into this partnership with the Bethlehem Steel Co. "A man can not serve two masters," and the inferior character of work done for the Government by these companies, as evidenced by accidents to machinery and explosions of guns, followed as a matter of course.

RAINEY SPEECH IS ANSWERED.

The speech of Representative RAINEY was answered by Representative Walter I. Smith, of Iowa, on March 3, 1911. Representative Smith quoted the first paragraph of the above and then said:

Most of these statements are substantially true, but discolored.

The following letter, written by Gen. Crozier to the Bethlehem Steel Co., was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 15, 1903.

The BETHLEHEM STEEL CO.,
South Bethlehem, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: 1. Referring to the agreement between the Bethlehem Iron Co. and myself, for myself and also as attorney for Gen. (then Col.) A. R. Buffington, which appears in my letter of September 6, 1894, and your answer thereto of September 10 of the same year, I wish now to inform you that I hereby release the Bethlehem Iron Co. and its successors from all obligations to myself in consequence of such agreement; that is, that I hereby assign all my right, title, and interest in the invention which has been commonly known as the Buffington-Crozier disappearing carriage, and in all letters patent relating thereto, to the Bethlehem Iron Co. and its successors, without any further consideration or compensation whatsoever to be paid to myself or to any other person in my behalf, my object being to relinquish fully and totally all personal interest in this invention.

2. Nothing in this letter is, however, to be understood as affecting the right or interest or compensation of Gen. Buffington in regard to this invention or any rights of the United States therein.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance.

The Gen. Buffington referred to in Gen. Crozier's letter is now receiving pay from the Government as a retired Army officer. When he and the then Capt. Crozier were in partnership with the Bethlehem Co., Gen. Buffington was Chief of Ordnance and the present Gen. Crozier was a captain.

When Gen. Buffington was retired, his business partner, Capt. Crozier, was jumped over 23 officers of the line to be made Chief of Ordnance, the occupant of which position awards the contracts for guns, ammunition, and supplies for the Ordnance Department.

Representative Smith, in defending Gen. Crozier, did not deny that Gens. Crozier and Buffington received $10,000 from the Bethlehem Co., nor that they entered into a contract by which they were to receive royalties until the sum of $50,000 should have been received by them. In his letter to the Bethlehem Co. Gen. Crozier simply released the Bethlehem Co. from "any further consideration or compensation."

I am informed that what happened was this: Immediately after Gen. Buffington and Capt. Crozier went into a contract with the Bethlehem Co. in 1894, the Bethlehem Co. sent agents to all of the countries of Europe in the hope of selling them the Buffington-Crozier disappearing carriages, which had been perfected, it will be remembered, with the American people's money.

FOREIGN NATIONS REFUSED TO BUY.

Various European nations, I am informed, tested these gun carriages, and not one nation would buy them, not believing them practical. In the meantime the United States had been loaded down with $8,000,000 worth of such carriages, and is still buying them. Since no Buffington-Crozier carriages could be sold to foreign Governments, Gen. Crozier sacrificed nothing by releasing the Bethlehem company in 1903 from its contract. These gun carriages may be as deadly in warfare as Gen. Crozier claims, and their purchase by this Government through Gen. Crozier may be an excellent investment. I do not know.

What I take particular exception to, and what I believe the American people would take exception to if they knew of these facts, is that Army officers should have any business connection whatever with the ammunition ring, and that instruments of war perfected as a result of the expenditure of money raised by taxing the American people should be even offered to foreign Governments by an American Army officer.

Let us see how this policy would work out: If this Nation should engage in war with nations equipped with such weapons, American sailors and soldiers would be mowed down with engines of death perfected with the American people's money.

What is the use of this Government spending huge sums to perfect guns if after they are perfected they are to be offered for sale to foreign nations?

GREAT ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE.

That the ring of private manufacturers is outrageously overcharging the Government for munitions of war is revealed beyond successful contradiction in a table prepared by Col. George Montgomery, commandant at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia.

The figures indicate that the Government can save from 20 to 50 per cent on Army contracts, running into millions of dollars annually, by increasing the capacity of the Government arsenals and doing all of its own manufacturing of war materials.

The report shows that on orders for ammunition given to Frankford Arsenal instead of private manufacturers between July 1, 1912, and April 25, 1913, amounting to $1,900,064.05, the Government saved $979,840.94, or nearly one-half the amount of the order.

In other words, had this contract been given to the ring of private ammunition manufacturers, the same amount of ammunition would have cost the Government $2,879,904.99, or $979,840.94 more than it cost the Government to fill the order itself. These calculations are based on the cost of the ammunition manufactured in the arsenal, as compared with the latest contract prices for the same article procured from outside manufacturers.

TOTAL ARSENAL COSTS INCLUDE ALL OVERHEAD CHARGES.

The total arsenal costs include 15 per cent to cover administration, depreciation, insurance, and interest charges. Here are a few typical comparisons shown in the report which constitute an unanswerable argument why the Government should enlarge its arsenals and manufacture a larger proportion of its ammunition and other munitions of war than it is now doing:

	Total arsenal cost.	Total contract cost.
3-inch shrapnel case	$1.75	$3.15
3-inch shrapnel	3.55	5.96
3.8-inch shrapnel	7.94	18.03
3-inch steel shell	2.39	5.02
3.8-inch steel shell	4.81	9.45

GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE BENEFITS WORKINGMEN.

A striking feature of the comparisons of Government cost of manufacture as compared to the private contractors' prices is that the Government works its employees but 8 hours a day, while the private contractors work their men 9 and 10 hours a day, and in some instances 12 hours a day and 7 days a week. Government employees also receive higher wages for the shorter days. Nor is that all. Uncle Sam pays his men for 15 days' annual leave of absence, for 7 national holidays, and for 13 Saturday afternoons in the summer time, during which time he receives no labor in return, yet the Government cost of manufacture, including 15 per cent for depreciation and interest, is from 20 to 50 per cent below the prices charged by the ring of private manufacturers.

Query: Since it is obvious the private manufacturers do not divide their almost fabulous profits on the fat Government contracts with their employees, why should Uncle Sam continue to be an easy mark?

TABLE REVEALS HOW UNCLE SAM IS BEING GROSSLY OVERCHARGED BY THE AMMUNITION RING.

This table constitutes an excellent argument for the Government armor plant advocated by Secretary of the Navy Daniels. The figures were furnished by Col. George Montgomery, commandant at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, and show the total arsenal costs and total contract costs for the ammunition now being manufactured at Frankford Arsenal. Had this order been manufactured at the arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., where the Government has a power plant in the Mississippi River, and consequently free power, even a better showing could be made on the side of Government manufacture of the munitions of war.

CROZIER DETERMINED TO INSTALL TAYLOR SYSTEM.

It is worthy of passing notice that the same Army officers who insist that the ammunition ring should be permitted to draw down the fat Government contracts for Army supplies are also insisting upon the installation at the Government arsenals of the Taylor system of shop management, a cruel system of scientifically grinding down the spirit as well as the physical bodies of those who toil.

While Gen. Crozier is not the least bit saving with the people's money when awarding contracts to the Bethlehem Steel Co., paying this concern 35 per cent more than he could obtain the same work for by Government manufacture, he is an extreme economist when it comes to using the stop watch on a workingman to prevent him from turning his head or blowing his nose while at work.

Although Gen. Crozier's own testimony before the Appropriations Committee was that the arsenal workmen are turning out work 35 per cent below the prices of the private manufacturers, and are saving the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, Gen. Crozier is determined to make them work still faster.

WHAT THE TAYLOR SYSTEM IS.

The Taylor system is an excellent system for all except those who are required by the necessity of making a living to work under it.

The feature of the Taylor system is to set a pace so fast that only one workingman out of five can keep up. This can be shown by Mr. Taylor's own book of instruction to employers, in which he tells how he introduced his system.

The tasks were all made so severe—

Explains Mr. Taylor, in paragraph 125—

that not more than one out of five laborers (perhaps even a smaller percentage than this) could keep up.

Mr. Taylor lays great stress on his system of scientific "persuasion." Of this "persuasive" feature, in paragraph 293, he says:

A certain percentage of the men, with the best of attention, will fail in this and find that they have no place in the general organization, while still others—and among them some of the best workers, who are, however, either stupid or stubborn—can never be made to see that the new system is as good as the old; and these, too, must drop out.

For the success of the system the number of men employed on practically the same class of work should be large enough for the workmen quite often to have the object lesson of seeing men laid off for failing to earn high wages and others substituted in their places.

In paragraph 312 of his book of instructions to employers, Mr. Taylor very frankly and cold-bloodedly says:

All employees should bear in mind that each shop exists first, last, and all the time for the purpose of paying dividends to its owners.

SYSTEM CONDEMNED BY COMMITTEE OF CONGRESS.

The Taylor system was investigated by a special committee of the preceding Democratic House of Representatives, and that committee was unaminous in its condemnation of the system.

There is no economic necessity to require workmen to speed up to the highest point even without injury of their health and strength.

States the report in brief—

To place workmen in this position is to place them in the position of a beast of burden.

By the stop watch you may be able to determine the time in which a piece of work can be done, but you do not thereby alone determine the length of time in which it ought to be done. The time study of the operations of any machine can be made with a reasonable degree of accuracy, because all of the elements can be taken into consideration in making the computation. A machine is an inanimate thing—it has no life, no brain, no sentiment, and no place in the social order. With a workman it is different. He is a living, moving, sentient, social being; he is entitled to all the rights, privileges, opportunities, and respectful consideration given to other men. He would be less than a man if he did not resent the introduction of any system which deals with him in the same way as a beast of burden or an inanimate machine.

Two of the three members who signed this report are now members of President Wilson's Cabinet. They are William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, and William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce.

Gen. Crozier declares he is determined to extend scientific management in the arsenals regardless of this report. The Secretary of War, however, will not permit him to do so.

Gen. Crozier's persistent and systematic efforts to install the Taylor system in the arsenals is almost as valuable to the ammunition ring and other manufacturers as is his policy of giving ammunition contracts to outside manufacturers. The great manufacturers want the Taylor system installed in the Government arsenals, so that when their employees protest against the installation of the system they will be in the strategic position of being able to reply that the system must be humane or the United States Government would not have placed its official indorsement upon it by installing it in the Government arsenals.

GOVERNMENT ARMOR PLANT IS COMING.

Since my election I have endeavored to cooperate in every way possible with the Secretary of the Navy in his campaign to obtain authorization by Congress for a Government armor plant, which I believe will be provided for next year. After the necessary appropriation is obtained I intend to urge upon Congress the advisability of locating this plant at Rock Island, but I heartily approve the project regardless of whether it is ultimately located at Rock Island or some other point.

It is estimated that an armor plant would cost approximately $7,000,000, and that it would pay for itself in three years at the outside. The naval program for the coming year provides for two battleships, at a cost of $14,000,000 each. Personally I believe it would be wiser to provide for one less battleship and [illegible] armor plant. This program would mean that the Government would save $7,000,000 and at the same time obtain a plant that would effect great money saving, which is money making. It would also be a long step toward the taking of profit out of war, and it would mean that the men who actually make the armor plate would receive better wages and would work under better labor conditions than they do now.

WHO AND WHAT THE "ARMOR RING" IS.

It is evident—

Says Secretary Daniels, in his annual report—

that without an armor plant of its own the Government in time of war or impending war would be entirely at the mercy of three manufacturers, and obliged to pay practically whatever price they ask.

Secretary Daniels estimates that he could save $1,061,360 per annum on a 10,000-ton-a-year armor plant, after deducting 4 per cent as interest on the money used in the erection and installation of plant, and $3,048,462 a year on the basis of a 20,000-ton-a-year plant.

Secretary Daniels concludes with the following significant statement:

I do not see how it is possible for Congress to justify to the people a refusal to erect a Government plant, nor how it can answer the charge that will invariably be brought up—that the same mysterious providence which saved this profitable business to the steel companies three times in the past, even after money for a Government plant had actually been appropriated, is not still at work exercising its beneficent protection over these lusty specimens of infant industries, who are even now under investigation as violators of the antitrust law.

It might be well to state at this point what and who the "armor ring" is. It does not come under the head of invisible government, as it is possible to definitely locate it and place our finger upon it.

By the term "armor ring" is meant these three concerns: Bethlehem Steel Co., Carnegie Steel Co., and the Midvale Steel Co. So far, these three concerns have drawn down $77,000,000 worth of contracts from the Navy Department alone, divided as follows: Bethlehem, $34,215,112.58; Carnegie, $30,844,153.56; Midvale, $12,044,217.41.

Advertising for bids for armor plate for battleship No. 39, now in course of construction, Secretary Daniels was amazed to find that each concern had put in practically the same bid. The Secretary wrote each of the bidders a letter, asking how it came their bids were so nearly identical. Two of the three firms frankly replied that the three companies above alluded to were the only ones in this country that could do the work, and therefore to bid against each other would be simply to bring down the price, especially since it was the custom of the Navy to divide its work between the three firms.

RESOLUTION CALLING ATTENTION TO ROCK ISLAND.

On November 13 I introduced House resolution 306, which is now before the Military Affairs Committee and which provides that—

"Whereas the Secretary of the Navy recommends a Government armor-plate factory at a cost of approximately $7,000,000 to take the manufacture of armor plate out of the hands of a ring of private manufacturers who have for years been outrageously overcharging the Government while at the same time paying low wages and imposing unfair conditions upon its employees; and

"Whereas the Secretary of the Navy has publicly advocated that any and all cities believing they have satisfactory sites for the proposed armor plant should urge consideration by the Government of the alleged advantages of such respective sites, to the end that the Government may ultimately purchase one of the sites for the purpose of erecting the Government armor-plate factory thereon; and

"Whereas the Government already owns 896 acres of land at the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., every acre of which is especially adaptable to use for manufacturing purposes: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate and carefully consider the advantages of the Rock Island Arsenal military tract as a site for the proposed Government armor-plate factory and report his conclusions on same to the House of Representatives before deciding upon any other site."

SEVEN IMPORTANT ADVANTAGES OF ROCK ISLAND.

The resolution further provides that in making this investigation of the suitability of Rock Island as a site for the proposed armor plant especial consideration be given the following particular advantages:

First. Everlasting free water-power possibilities, the Government owning its own plant in the Mississippi River.

Second. Its central location geographically, making it convenient to ship the finished product to either the Pacific, Atlantic, or Gulf coast with economy in both time and transportation costs.

Third. Its strategic location from a military standpoint. Being well in the interior of the country, it would be much safer from attack and possible capture by an enemy in time of war than would a site on or near either coast.

Fourth. Should coal be needed, there is a great abundance of excellent coal being mined almost at the very door of Rock Island, and it is at the same time convenient to the ore fields of the North.

Fifth. By utilizing a part of the 896 acres in the Rock Island military tract several hundred thousand dollars which would probably be necessary to purchase a site elsewhere would be saved to the Government.

Sixth. The advantages of Rock Island as a manufacturing center, as demonstrated by the fact that at the Rock Island Arsenal shops the Government is now manufacturing rifles, field-artillery gun carriages, and other war equipment at from 20 to 30 per cent below the prices of private manufacturers.

For instance, 3-inch caissons, consisting of a wagon for carrying ammunition chests, are being produced at Rock Island for $1,081 as against a cost of $1,708 when purchased from private manufacturers; 3-inch gun carriages proper—the vehicle on which the gun rests and from which it is fired—are being produced for $2,341 as against the private contractors' price of $3,268, and so forth.

Seventh. The location of the military tract in the heart of a great manufacturing center, being within 2 miles of Rock Island, Moline, and East Moline, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, all of which are essentially manufacturing cities, embracing a combined population of more than 100,000 people, affording employment to thousands of mechanics, and furnishing an ideal field from which the Government may draw its skilled labor and other help, which is a very important consideration in such an industrial enterprise as a Government armor plant.

NAVY LEAGUE SHOULD ADVOCATE GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE.

I have frequently been importuned by the Navy League of the United States, an organization that has been charged with being supported by those who would profit financially from a big navy policy, to support big navy bills in Congress. As this is a subject I am much interested in I took the trouble to write the league, giving my views on its propaganda:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1914.

Mr. A. H. DADMUN,
Secretary the Navy League of United States,
Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DADMUN: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, together with inclosures as to why a powerful navy is needed.

Assuming that you are in good faith in this agitation and really desire the largest possible navy for patriotic reasons, I am going to take the liberty of suggesting to you that if you will inaugurate a movement for the Government manufacture of all munitions of war, including all battleships, your campaign will strike a much more responsive chord in both Members of Congress and the people.

In other words, if the Government is to do all of the manufacturing of munitions of war, including battleships, the point can not then be successfully raised that the agitation is for the benefit of the armor ring, the ammunition ring, and the Shipbuilding Trust.

But if you do not advocate the Government manufacture of all munitions of war, including battleships, you can not successfully deny that you are carrying on a propaganda which means millions and millions of dollars of extortionate profits to the above-mentioned interests. I base this assumption on the fact that the records of the War and Navy Departments show that the Government is paying private manufacturers all the way from 20 to 70 per cent more for munitions of war than the Government can itself manufacture these articles for in the Government arsenals and navy yards.

Very respectfully submitted.

CLYDE H. TAVENNER.

ARMOR RING "DOCTORS" DEFECTIVE CASTINGS.

Not only have the armor ring and the ammunition ring overcharged the Government, but they have cheated the Government by "doctoring" defective armor plates, guns, and gun forgings. If manufacturers from which private concerns obtain their supplies should perpetrate frauds upon them such as the armor ring has perpetrated upon the Government, private concerns would withdraw their patronage from such manufacturers and have no further dealings with them. But the fact that the Government was imposed upon does not seem to have in the least prejudiced the friendly Army and Navy officers against the armor ring.

Representative RAINEY, of Illinois, who has made a very thorough study of the depredations of the armor ring, threw the spotlight upon its activities in a speech delivered in the Sixty-first Congress. In part Mr. RAINEY said:

In 1894 we had an investigation into the frauds perpetrated upon this Government by Mr. Carnegie's company. I can not be charged with unfairness if I simply call attention to those frauds perpetrated by Mr. Carnegie's company, which were admitted by his representatives, some of whom are now among the 43 Carnegie-made millionaires. The document which contains all this evidence is House of Representatives Report No. 1468, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

FRAUDS PERPETRATED BY MR. CARNEGIE'S COMPANY.

C. M. Schwab, who was at that time a stockholder in the Carnegie Co., and who was the superintendent of the company, and who is now the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., admitted that armor plates manufactured by the Carnegie Co. did not receive the "uniform" treatment required by the contract of the company with the Government.

Another one of Mr. Carnegie's superintendents, Mr. W. A. Cline, admitted that almost invariably after the day's work was over he changed the figures so that false reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made to the Government inspectors. This superintendent also admitted that he discharged workmen in the Carnegie factory for the reason that they told the truth about the fraudulent work done in this plant. Supt. Corey, of the Carnegie Co., also admitted that specimens which were taken from the plates to ascertain the tensile strength of the plates were stretched so as to increase their apparent tensile strength without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. Upon the stand Mr. Schwab admitted that he knew of this fraudulent method of stretching the specimens. Mr. Corey admitted that he knew that false specimens taken from good plates were substituted for specimens selected by the Government inspectors from plates of doubtful character, so that in reality the inspectors were not testing the plates they thought they were testing. Mr. Corey, however, testified that he considered this to be a matter of small importance. The evidence disclosed that specimens taken for physical tests were retreated without the knowledge of the Government inspectors and before the Government inspectors made the tests required by the contracts. Supt. Corey admitted that plates selected by the Government inspector for the ballistic tests were re-treated before the tests were made by the company without the knowledge of the inspector. Supts. Corey and Schwab both admitted that large blowholes or shrinking cavities were plugged by the contractors in order that these defects might be concealed from the Government inspectors.

I have so far called attention to the admissions of Mr. Carnegie's executive officers. The testimony, however, of employees was particularly damaging. T. F. Farley testified that he had seen blowholes large enough for a person to run three fingers in plugged by taking cuttings from the same plate, which were driven into the blowholes with hammers; he also testified that he himself had run flexible wires into blowholes to the depth of 18 inches. These blowholes were afterwards plugged up on the surface. The blowholes might, according to his testimony, have extended into the plates a much greater distance than this. These blowholes, it appears from the testimony, follow a sinuous course, so as to make it difficult to ascertain the extent of them, even by inserting flexible wires. J. W. Kountz, another employee, testified that he had known holes from 4 to 6 inches in diameter plugged in order to deceive Government inspectors. Samuel Sheriff, another employee, testified that the plugging and doctoring of plates was done at night when no inspectors were about; but he testified that he had seen one fixed up at noon. T. F. Farley also testified that the plates were frequently imperfect, full of blowholes and defects. He also testified that they were frequently taken off the planer and hidden until night so that they could not be seen by the inspectors. They were then worked upon at night when the inspectors were gone.

In discussing this matter I have kept well within the record and have been conservative. I have principally called attention only to the admissions of fraud brazenly made by Mr. Carnegie's executive officers. It is only fair to them to say, however, that the admissions were made in the face of overpowering evidence as to the truth of all these charges. Many things were proven by the evidence more damaging than I have called attention to, which, however, were not admitted by Mr. Carnegie's superintendents.

THESE FRAUDS CONTINUED TO PRESENT TIME.

The fact of the continuance of these frauds is evidenced by the frequency with which guns explode on our battleships and on land, killing and maiming men; by the frequency with which boilers on our ships blow up, with such awful results to human life.

Guns, while being tested by other great nations of the world, do not explode with disastrous results. We do not read in the papers that boilers frequently explode on the war vessels of England or Germany or any other nation. The very large number of these accidents in our own Navy and in tests made by our Army officers leads to the irresistible conclusion that there are defects in the castings of the guns and in the castings for the steel tubes and boilers furnished by our steel companies. Castings for guns are not made by the Government. They are made at Bethlehem, at Midvale, at the plant of the Carnegie Co., and some of the smaller castings are made by companies not so large as the companies I have mentioned. In our Government arsenals here up at Washington and up at Watervliet we simply assemble these castings. I desire to insert here in my speech a chronological record of the more important accidents of this character as recorded in the news items of our metropolitan papers.

DISASTERS CAUSED BY EXPLOSIONS, BURSTING GUNS, FAULTY BREECH BLOCKS, ETC.

1902, February 2. Battleship Kearsarge, West Indian waters; gun burst, killing 5.
1903, January 17. Battleship Massachusetts; gun explosion off Culebra Islands; 6 killed.
1903, April 9. Battleship Iowa; explosion of gun; 3 killed, 5 wounded.
1904, April 13. Battleship Missouri, off Pensacola, Fla.; explosion; 32 killed.
1904, December 14. Battleship Massachusetts, at Philadelphia; explosion in fireroom; 3 killed, 4 scalded.
1905, July 21. Gunboat Bennington, San Diego, Cal.; boiler explosion; 34 killed, 66 injured.
1906, January 10. Battleship Massachusetts; gun explosion; 9 killed.
1906, April 13. Battleship Kearsarge, in Caribbean Sea; explosion; 6 killed.
1907, July 15. Battleship Georgia, Massachusetts Bay; explosion; 6 killed, 15 injured.
1908, June 5. In California waters, cruiser Tennessee; bursting of boiler tube; 6 killed.
——— ———. Torpedo-boat destroyer Hopkins, California waters; exploding boiler; 1 killed, 5 wounded.
1910, March 28. Cruiser Charleston, in Philippine waters; gun explosion, alleged faulty breach block; 8 killed, 7 or 8 wounded.
1910, July 21. Explosion of gun, Fort Monroe; 12 killed.
1910, September 9. Battleship North Dakota; explosion, Hampton Roads; 3 killed.
1910, November 19. Explosion of gun, Indianhead; 4 killed.
1911, January 13. Cruiser Washington; cylinder head blown out. Also about this time 3 similar accidents to vessels in Admiral Schroeder's fleet; no one killed.
1911, January 17. Battleship Delaware; boilers exploded; 9 killed; just outside Hampton Roads.
Total killed in 9 years, 147.
Total maimed in 9 years, 102.

As a result of the accidents I have enumerated, and there have been others, in 9 years 147 men have been killed and 102 maimed for life. In other words, by these accidents, in 9 years of profound peace, we have killed or maimed for life more of our men than were killed in action in the Spanish-American War.

WORKINGMEN TESTIFY HOW GOVERNMENT IS CHEATED.

There is no longer any competition in this country, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] has so well stated, in the manufacture of armor or armament for vessels.

In the old investigation practically only the superintendents of the Carnegie Co. were called upon to testify. In order to show that the frauds continue to this day, I have original affidavits, made within the last few months up here at Bethlehem, and I send them to the Clerk's desk and ask that they be read now in my time:

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 26, 1910.

I, the undersigned, do hereby certify that the following information is an absolute fact, as I have been an employee of the Bethlehem Steel Co. in the treatment department for a period of one and one-half years.

After official tests on 12-inch liners, tubes, and long propeller shafts for U. S. S. Florida there was a heat treatment given above forgings while the inspectors were at home at night; for instance, if a tube, liner, or shaft passes test to-day, instead of shipping same forging into the machine shop for machining, they put forging into a wood furnace and heat it at 860°, which is equal to 1,000° or more in oil furnace, thereby softening the forging, and the following morning have same piece ready for machine shop after straightening (which should have been done before official test bars were taken). This was not, of course, done with all tubes, liners, and shafts, but it was done in cases where the company needed any individual forging to complete a set of gun forgings in order to get out a certain amount of work to reach their tonnage basis, so as to make their annual bonus. One of the most prominent features of the superintendents and overseers of the company is to produce as much tonnage as possible, regardless of whether or not work is accomplished in a manner which gave the Government an inferior product.

The United States Government specifications require all treatment reports to be forwarded to the Army and Navy office at works where work is being done, but this rule was not lived up to on the part of the company, as I myself was instructed by the superintendent to withhold the report of tubes, liners, and shafts from the Army and Navy office; therefore the inspectors never knew about the treatment that was given after the official test.

I also wish to state that during the month of December, 1909, there was more of this defective work done than any month previous, to the best of my knowledge.

The records that were supposed to be open for public inspection were always so fixed that they would not show the fraudulent treatments that were given forgings, and the reports that I got about treatments on tubes, liners, and shafts were withheld from the public records that were supposed to be open for scrutiny of Army and Navy inspectors.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 29, 1910.

This is to certify that I know there was work done in No. 2 machine shop for the United States Government that was not up to specifications. I myself have deceived the inspector many a time.

On the last lot of 5-inch mounts that were made here a number of patches were placed on the brackets, to cover up a mistake in machining. These were put on in such a way so that under ordinary inspection they could not be detected.

I know of a slide for a 12-inch gun that was being machined when a blowhole was discovered. The yoke was taken off the machine and at night the hole was filled up with metal and the yoke put back on the machine, the inspector not discovering the trick. I know of a track for a 12-inch turret which, while being machined, was found to be cracked.

I closed the crack by hammering the crack shut and finished machining it.

THE HISTORY OF ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The Rock Island Arsenal has a most interesting history, a history that is picturesquely rich in Indian lore. First it was the happy playground of the Indian young folks, whose habit it was to come to the island every summer for an outing. Such scenes quickly changed, however, with the coming of the white man, and dissensions and bloody warfare took their place. Then the white man put up a fort, to be followed many years later by a Government arsenal, which is now the largest plant of its kind in the United States. And when the new Government policy of manufacturing all munitions of war in the arsenals becomes fully established, Rock Island is destined to become one of the largest arsenals in the world.

The Rock Island military tract, comprising 896 acres, is situated near the Illinois shore of the Mississippi River, and was obtained for the United States through the efforts of William Henry Harrison—later President—by treaty with the Sac and Fox Indians in 1804. Black Hawk, the head chief of the Sac Indians, refused to sign the treaty, and afterwards held that it was not binding.

Several skirmishes took place near Rock Island during the War of 1812. In March of that year three boats on their way up the Mississippi River to Prairie du Chien were attacked by Indians at Rock Island and one of the boats was taken, many men being killed. In September, 1815, a second treaty of peace was signed with the Indians.

A fort, called Fort Armstrong, after the then Secretary of War, was completed at Rock Island in 1817. The Indians evidently knew that the erection of the fort was intended to compel a compliance on their part with the disputed treaties which had been made, and that when white settlers came they might have to leave their homes. Speaking of this, years afterwards, Black Hawk said:

We did not, however, try to prevent their building the fort on the island; but we were very sorry, as this was the best island on the Mississippi, and had long been the resort of our young people during the summer. It was our garden—like the white people have near their big villages—which supplied us with strawberries, blackberries, plums, apples, and nuts of various kinds; and its waters supplied us with pure fish, being situated in the rapids of the river. In my early life I spent many happy days on this island. A good spirit had care of it, who lived in a cave in the rocks immediately under the place where the fort now stands, and has often been seen by our people. He was white, with large wings like a swan's, but ten times larger. We were particular not to make much noise in that part of the island which he inhabited for fear of disturbing him. But the noise of the fort has since driven him away, and no doubt a bad spirit has taken his place.

White settlers first located in the vicinity of Rock Island in 1828. It was the habit of the Indians to leave their villages for several months in each year, and while they were absent the white settlers moved in and took possession. This created discontent and hostility among the Indians when they returned, and as the number of settlers increased the feeling became stronger. At the frequent urgings of the commanding officers at Fort Armstrong and of the Indian agent on the island, Keokuk, the head chief of the Foxes, and his tribe, in accordance with the treaties they had made, moved west of the Mississippi River and established themselves on the Iowa River.

Black Hawk and his party of Sacs, sometimes called the "British Band," because of their adherence to the English, refused to go. Complaints from the settlers of depredations of the Indians were frequent, till finally, in 1831, Black Hawk warned the settlers that they must leave. The war finally broke out in 1832, and after much hard fighting in the months of May, June, July, and August the whole of Black Hawk's band was destroyed, and the great chief himself, together with his son and several other chiefs, were made prisoners.

After an eastern tour, which included Washington and other cities, Black Hawk lived with a remnant of his tribe on the Des Moines River, in Iowa, until he died, in 1838.

In 1825 Rock Island had been reserved from the public land of the United States for military purposes. Nothwithstanding this fact, settlers repeatedly tried to establish themselves on the island. In 1850 an order for a public sale of the island to the highest bidder was reversed by the Government before the sale had been consummated.

The first railroad to reach Rock Island was built in 1854 from Chicago by the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad Co. The Mississippi & Missouri Railroad then built a road from Davenport to Council Bluffs, and it became necessary to build a bridge to connect the two lines. Such a bridge was constructed in 1855 from the Illinois shore to the island and from the Iowa shore to the island, with an embankment across the island connecting the two bridges, or rather the two parts of the Rock Island Bridge. This bridge is not now in existence.

Many determined efforts were made to acquire title to the land of the island because of its desirable residence qualities, but chiefly because of the water-power possibilities. Several men were successful is establishing such claims through the medium of a special bill passed through Congress, and the Government afterwards rebought the land at many times the price paid for it by these enterprising citizens.

In July, 1862, Congress passed a bill locating an arsenal at Rock Island. Ground for the first building, a large storehouse, was broken in September, 1863, in the corner stone of which were placed three newspapers—a Rock Island Union, a Davenport Gazette, and a Davenport Democrat—a half dollar, and a paper giving date of laying of stone, the name of the President of the United States, the name of the governor of Illinois, and the names of the commanding officers at the arsenal.

Extensive prison barracks for prisoners of war were built on the island in 1863, and the first building of the arsenal was partly constructed by the labor of Confederate soldiers.

Congress in 1869 appropriated $500,000 for the construction of the present Rock Island Bridge, the building of which was later given over to the Engineer Department of the Army.

The arsenal plant, including buildings, machinery, and so forth, has been enlarged and extended from time to time, and is now worth $9,492,329. Approximately $2,500,000 worth of work was turned out of the arsenal last year. On November 30 last 1,569 men were being employed.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] desire to be heard at this time?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I believe not. I sought recognition, Mr. Chairman, just to make some reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM], but I believe it is not necessary now. The gentleman stated that nothing could be easier than to make a commendatory speech here and pat the soldiers on the back and make good with them. I can think of nothing that would be easier than to make a general criticism, such as the gentleman from Kentucky made a few moments ago, against the officers of the Army without specifying just how and in what particular he would remedy the evil. He does not complain that the officers are too numerous——

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; for a question.

Mr. HELM. I would cut off—the gentleman said he would like to have me make some suggestions as to how I would remedy some of these evils—then cut off these emoluments they are receiving that run up into the millions of dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman's proposition, then, is to reduce the pay that is now given to the officers of the Army—that is, officers of the line, the Medical Corps, the Engineer Corps, the noncommissioned officers of the Army, and so forth?

Mr. HELM. Is the gentleman asking me the question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HELM. My answer to that question is this, that these emoluments that these officers of the Army are receiving are entirely excessive, and that they should be reduced, and that the officers of the Army are getting a disproportionate amount of this appropriation. Cut it where you will or upon what line of officers you choose, but cut it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to detain the committee at all or enter into any argument with the gentleman on that score. My own opinion is that the number of officers in the Army now, noncommissioned and all, is none too great. I do not believe that we could maintain an effective military organization with any fewer officers than we now have. As a matter of course, we can not perfect the organization of the Army for the effective maneuvering of divisions, about which the gentleman complained a few moments ago, because the Army is not large enough. It is not because we have too many officers or because——

Mr. HELM. We have an Army of 90,000 men, have not we——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. An Infantry division——

Mr. HELM (continuing). Is not that big enough for a division?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. An Infantry division is 20,000. The organization of the Army is the growth and experience of 100 years, ripened by the study of all the military organizations of the world.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman means that is what it ought to be.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What it is.

Mr. HELM. Well, there is no officer in the Army who will tell you it is.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, yes; officers of the Army will tell me it is. The officers will all say the Army is not big enough, but they will not say that the organization itself is at fault, and surely none of them will say that better results can be brought about by cutting off the "emoluments" they are receiving.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman is acquainted with Gen. Edwards, is he not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have no personal acquaintance with him, but I know who he is.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman knows there is a Gen. Edwards in the Army?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman admits he has been in the Army long enough to know what he is talking about?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. HELM. When he says you have not a sufficient divisional organization, does the gentleman think he knows what he is talking about?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; they all say that, but that can not be accomplished by reducing the number of officers or by altering the organization from corporal up to a lieutenant general, and it can not be effected——

Mr. HELM. And it can not be done by increasing the salaries of the officers or men, either.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In my opinion the officers get none too large a salary now.

Mr. HELM. Of course not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is my judgment about that—neither a noncommissioned officer nor commissioned officer; and the gentleman himself has utterly failed, and I dare say will continue to fail, to point out just what it is that he wants done to make the "divisional organization," as he terms it, more efficient, or whether he wants the noncommissioned officers' commutation of rations or commutation for clothing or commutation for quarters, in the event he is entitled to them, reduced or cut off or any other pay that the officer gets reduced. He simply says we are paying out of the $90,000,000 too many millions for the officers, when the policy has always been——

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I must decline to yield—the policy has always been, and it is a wise policy and a sound policy, that in time of peace is the proper time when the military force is to be reduced, and then to reduce the number of privates and not the number of officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed at the expiration of 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to debate this particular point that is before the committee just now. I want to ask the chairman a question, however. I have been detained with committee work and was not here when the first section of the bill was read. I want to know if there is any provision in the bill for entertainment by American officers in the United States or in foreign countries of officers of foreign countries?

Mr. HAY. There is not.

Mr. WEBB. I want to ask the object of this language, on page 1, beginning with line 10, after the semicolon, which reads:

> For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the War Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified.

Now, what does that mean?

Mr. HAY. Well, the Secretary of War explained that. I will call the attention of the gentleman to it and will read just what he said, so that he can judge. I asked the question myself.

Mr. WEBB. It is new legislation?

Mr. HAY. It is new legislation; yes, sir.

Mr. WEBB. While the gentleman is looking that up, I want to say that I had a notion that that language was put in the bill by the War Department for the purpose of meeting a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury. They had presented to him from an officer in a foreign country, who gets 10 per cent additional, a bill for entertaining some foreign officer with high wines and the rest of it, I suppose. He charged the entertainment to the Government of the United States and sent the bill over here. The Comptroller of the Treasury properly turned it down. That was in November, 1913, and in less than four months we find the War Department coming before the Committee on Military Affairs and putting in a section that will cover that very thing if you do not watch.

Mr. HAY. I called the attention of the Secretary of War to this language, and I asked him:

> What is the purpose of changing the law?

He replied:

> In so far as I had anything to do with that particular language it arose out of two or three matters that have been brought to my attention in the short time during which I have been at the head of the department where there was need of some such a provision.
> When I was in the West recently I received an important cipher dispatch from headquarters here. The cipher book was 35 miles from where I was; it was 12 o'clock at night, and I had to hire an automobile to bring it to me, and I do not know of any other fund out of which I might pay an expense like that. If there is such an emergency fund out of which things of that sort may be paid, as is contemplated in this provision, for emergencies of that sort, and those which I have mentioned to the committee confidentially, it will be of much assistance.
> The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything you desire to say, Mr. Secretary, to the committee in a general way regarding these appropriations carried by this bill?

Mr. WEBB. The chairman will say, then, it was not for the purpose of paying the expenses of our officers stationed abroad in entertaining?

Mr. HAY. It was not. But I will say to the gentleman the estimate was $50,000 for this fund, and the purpose of it was to entertain on the Pacific coast during the exposition, and the committee cut out the $25,000 which was estimated for that.

Mr. WEBB. I am glad the chairman understands it just as he ought to understand it, that it is not intended to let these officers go abroad and entertain foreign officers and have the American taxpayers settle the bill.

Mr. HAY. Certainly not. And I will say to the gentleman that this item was originally $50,000 when I became chairman of the committee, and I examined into the expenditure and found they did not spend as much; and we cut it down.

Mr. WEBB. I am very glad to have the chairman give that explanation.

Mr. HAY. I have been very careful to look into that, in order to see what they are spending it for.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is certain that no part of that $25,000 will be used for entertaining in San Francisco or any other portion of the United States?

Mr. HAY. I am, so far as I can be certain of anything. Of course, I can not look into the mind of the Secretary of War and see what he will do, but from my knowledge of him I do not believe he would authorize the expenditure of this money for any such purpose. It was not appropriated for that purpose and was not intended for that purpose.

Mr. GARNER. I take it, it is the custom of the Committee on Military Affairs each succeeding year to make inquiry for what purpose a lump-sum appropriation of this character is made.

Mr. HAY. And in that way determine what it is for.

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. With that understanding I will make no further point on it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with what the chairman of the committee [Mr. HAY] said respecting the character of the officers of the Army. They have always given a good account of themselves whenever they have been called upon either in peace or in war.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] stated that $40,000,000 out of a total appropriation of $94,000,000 for the military establishment goes for pay of the officers of the Army and their emoluments. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I do not think one-half of the amount the gentleman referred to goes for that purpose. After the chairman of the committee [Mr. HAY] and myself had challenged the correctness of his first statement, the gentleman quickly dropped from $40,000,000 to $35,000,000. Perhaps if we were to discuss the matter a little longer he would lower his estimate still more. It reminds me very much of a play I saw the late William J. Florence perform many years ago. There was a character in it who was given greatly to exaggeration. He had a daughter, and they had an arrangement between themselves that whenever he exaggerated too much she would cough. That would immediately bring the matter of exaggeration to his attention, and he would reduce his estimate. He went on to say, "I have a million sheep in Texas." His daughter coughed, and he said, "Well, on second thought, it is probably 900,000 sheep." Then she coughed again, and he said, "Maybe it is only 800,000 sheep." And, finally, after repeated coughing, he got down to 500,000 sheep; and then, when she coughed again, he said: "Even if you cough your head off, I will not come down another sheep." [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman complains of what he is pleased to term "emoluments"—light, fuel, and those things. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that some of the officers and men of the Army are stationed in Alaska? In the cold of winter they have to have light and heat. There is no large settlement around there from which to supply them. They have to depend on the Government to do so.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. And the same is true regarding conditions all over continental United States, in China, in the Philippines, in the Canal Zone, in Hawaii, and in Porto Rico. The Army is spread out everywhere. There are a few large posts, but a great number of the posts are quite small——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield in a moment. And the latter have to get their supplies from the military establishment or go without them entirely. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is striking an interesting subject to me when he talks about commutation.

Mr. KAHN. I did not speak of commutation.

Mr. COX. That entered into the controversy between the two gentlemen——

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. COX. In the word "emolument"?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Take the term "commutation of fuel" as an illustration, and is that based on oak wood?

Mr. KAHN. I do not recall exactly just what it is based on, but the rate is arrived at in the Army by long experience.

Mr. WEBB. Oak wood is of varying prices. It is about $3.25 a cord in the United States and $20 a cord in Spain.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] says that the price of oak wood is $3.25 in the United States and $20 a cord in Spain.

Mr. KAHN. I understand the gentleman from North Carolina to say the price varies.

Mr. WEBB. Oak wood is never furnished, but the allowance for coal and heat is estimated on the price of oak wood. An officer stationed in Spain gets $78 a month for heat and light.

Mr. KAHN. What is that rate?

Mr. WEBB. I know that one officer in Spain gets $78 a month for heat and light.

Mr. HELM. I was curious to know, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from California knew the basis on which it was calculated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $16,949,126.

For additional pay for length of service, $2,325,746.64.

Provided, That hereafter no officer or enlisted man in active service who shall be absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct shall receive pay for the period of such absence, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That hereafter an enlistment shall not be regarded as complete until the soldier shall have made good any time in excess of one day lost by unauthorized absences, or on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct, or while in confinement awaiting trial or disposition of his case if the trial results in conviction, or while in confinement under sentence which includes dishonorable discharge.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. HAY. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman will withhold his point of order for a moment.

Mr. LEVY. I will withhold it.

Mr. HAY. What objection has the gentleman from New York to this item?

Mr. LEVY. I think it is rather severe.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that the provision has been carried on the bill for some years.

Mr. LEVY. The same provision?

Mr. HAY. Yes; the same provision. The only change is that we have put in the word "hereafter," so as to make it permanent law. I think it would be entirely in order to strike out the word "hereafter" and put it in as a limitation on the appropriation. If the gentleman insists on that, I will do it. But I can say to the gentleman that the officers of the Army, notably the Surgeon General, say this has worked most excellently.

Mr. LEVY. I thought it was a new departure. I will withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

For pay of 407 quartermaster sergeants, at $45 per month each, $219,780.

Additional pay for length of service, $86,800.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 14, insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint such number of quartermaster sergeants, Quartermaster Corps, not to exceed the number provided for by law, as he may deem necessary for the interest of the service, said quartermaster sergeants to be selected from the most competent noncommissioned officers of the Army, who shall have served therein at least five years, three years of such service having been rendered as noncommissioned officers, and whose character and education shall fit them to take charge of public property and to act as clerks and assistants to the proper officers of the Army in charge of public property."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. Can the chairman of the committee tell me whether that amendment would interfere with any of the civil-service employees of the military establishment?

Mr. HAY. It does not. You know there are provided by law 407 quartermaster sergeants. They are now appointed altogether from the line of the Army, and the purpose of this amendment is to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint some of them from the service corps.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS (ENLISTED MEN).

For pay of enlisted men, Quartermaster Corps, $1,000,000.

Provided, That the enlisted force of the Quartermaster Corps shall consist of not to exceed 15 master electricians, 600 sergeants (first class), 975 sergeants 625 corporals, 2,500 privates (first class), 1,190 privates, and 95 cooks, all of whom shall receive the same pay and allowances as enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Signal Corps of the Army, and shall be assigned to such duties pertaining to the Quartermaster Corps as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that is not new legislation?

Mr. HAY. I would state to the gentleman that the occasion for the legislation is this: It does not increase the force at all, nor does it increase the pay. The purpose of it is to increase the number of cooks. They have not got a sufficient number of cooks, and the only change in it is to bring about an increase in the number of cooks.

Mr. WEBB. Why do you make them of the corresponding grade of the Signal Corps of the Army? Why do you make the grades in the Signal Corps of the Army the standard?

Mr. HAY. That is under the present law. The Service Corps law now provides that these people shall be paid at the rate at which the Signal Corps men are paid.

Mr. WEBB. Does not this increase the appropriation?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. WEBB. I do not see how you put in all these additional men without some increase of cost.

Mr. HAY. We do not put in anything new at all. We decrease the number of sergeants and increase the number of cooks.

Mr. WEBB. You make the Signal Corps pay the standard?

Mr. HAY. Yes. That is in accordance with the law of 1912. It does not increase the appropriation, nor does it increase the number in the corps.

Mr. WEBB. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance Department: For pay of officers in the Ordnance Department, $228,500.

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $49,756.80.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I did not observe when the Clerk reached line 6 on page 10, "additional 20 per cent increase while on foreign service, $9,400." Is that new legislation? If so, why is it inserted? I understand that that is new legislation.

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is additional legislation. It escaped me. It ought to come out.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee does not object, I will make the point of order, and it will go out. I make the point that "additional 20 per cent increase while on foreign service" is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quartermaster Corps: For pay of officers in the Quartermaster Corps, $534,800: Provided, That hereafter the title of the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps shall be Quartermaster General of the Army.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I think, again, we have run upon some new legislation; that is, changing the name of the Quartermaster General. After the word "Provided" the paragraph reads:

That hereafter the title of the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps shall be Quartermaster General of the Army.

I like "Chief of the Quartermaster Corps" instead of "Quartermaster General of the Army."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not object to that. All of the officers of the Army, and particularly the officers of the Quartermaster Corps, are anxious that this old, historic title shall be restored. It always was the "Quartermaster General of the Army" until we changed it and made it "Chief of the Quartermaster Corps." It is much simpler, too.

Mr. WEBB. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One superintendent, Nurse Corps, at $1,800 per annum, $1,800.

Nurses (female), $106,030.

Provided, That hereafter the superintendent shall receive such allowances of quarters, subsistence, and medical care during illness as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that proviso.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this provision has been in the bill heretofore, but we put in the word "hereafter" so as to avoid the necessity of carrying the provision in the bill every year. The person who is superintendent of this corps is given such allowances of quarters, subsistence, and medical care as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. COX. This is the first time the word "hereafter" has crept in.

Mr. HAY. This is the first time we have put in the word "hereafter." We put that in so as to avoid the necessity of carrying it in the bill constantly, that is all.

Mr. COX. The word "hereafter" will make it permanent law?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. COX. Heretofore it has simply been a regulation.

Mr. HAY. Heretofore it has simply been carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman ought to strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. HAY. I have no objection.

Mr. COX. I make a point of order against the word "hereafter."

Mr. HAY. I move to amend by striking out the word "hereafter," in line 20, page 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 20, strike out the word "hereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED OFFICERS.

For pay of officers on the retired list and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $2,894,175.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

Page 12, line 14, after the figures "$2,894,175," insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter any retired officer of the Army or Navy who shall act as or be the representative, agent, or employee of any firm, company, corporation, or individual engaged in manufacturing for or selling to the Government any article or articles, either directly or indirectly, shall receive no part of this appropriation."

I hope the chairman of the committee will accept it without any debate upon it. If he does not, I will state——

Mr. HAY. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KAHN. I suggest that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 14, add after the figures "$2,894,175," the following: "Provided, That hereafter any retired officer of the Army or Navy who shall act as or be the representative, agent, or employee of any firm, company, corporation, or individual engaged in manufacturing for or selling to the Government any article or articles, either directly or indirectly, shall receive no part of this appropriation."

Mr. KAHN. I reserve a point of order. I suggest to the gentleman that he strike out the words "or Navy," this being the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman makes that point of order, I am willing to strike out the words "or Navy," although I think the amendment as I have offered it is a good one.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman wants to legislate for the Navy on the Army bill, he might also insert "or Marine Corps."

Mr. WEBB. I think it is a good provision and ought to apply to all retired officers, but if the gentleman makes the point of order I will strike out the words "or Navy."

Mr. KAHN. I shall not make the point of order. I simply make the suggestion.

Mr. WEBB. I do not think it is subject to a point of order if it is confined to the Army. It may be subject to a point of order with reference to the Navy, but in order to avoid any further discussion I withdraw the words "or Navy" where they occur.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw the words "or Navy." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of the enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, $2,482,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ANONYMOUS BILL.

The SPEAKER. A bill has been put into the basket without anybody's name on it. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, so that the Member who introduced it may put his name on it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to reimburse Saunders Lewis, jr., for expenses of the offices of clerk of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, February 28, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for printing and binding for the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 799); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Raccoon Creek, N. J., including the construction of a dike or jetty at the mouth, if necessary (H. Doc. No. 800); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of San Rafael Creek, Cal. (H. Doc. No. 801); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Northeast Cape Fear River, N. C., for a distance of about 3 miles above Hilton Bridge (H. Doc. No. 802); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4351) to regulate detached service in the line of the Army, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 309), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 311), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. SATURDAY, February 28, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee day by day that we may learn the larger meaning of life, a meaning that we may not gain out of the performance even of our daily tasks. We would know by divine revelation the meaning of God, soul, freedom, and immortality. Thou hast put the passion of eternity in our hearts. We pray Thee to lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us and in Thy light we shall see light. Guide us in the path of life eternal. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

Resolutions.

Whereas by Army Regulations, paragraph 201, the Secretary of War of the United States is empowered with the naming of all military posts; and

Whereas the 5 forts and 15 batteries designated for the defense of the Panama Canal have already received their names through Order No. 153, issued by the War Department November 24, 1911, at which time Gen. Leonard Wood was Chief of Staff of the United States Army; Hon. Henry L. Stimson, of New York, Secretary of War; and Hon. William Howard Taft, President of the United States; and

Whereas in naming these forts and batteries no recognition was given by these authorities to the men who by statesmanship, engineering, genius, and scientific knowledge made the Panama Canal an accomplished fact; and

Whereas with two exceptions in favor of foreigners these coveted honors were bestowed upon deceased United States Army officers whose military distinction was won in the war between the States; and

Whereas the completion of the Panama Canal is coincident with a half century of peace between the North and the South, affording an unsurpassed opportunity to the Government of the United States to manifest to the world the completeness of a reunited country: Be it

Resolved by the United Daughters of the Confederacy in general convention assembled, That the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Secretary of War, and the President of the United States be, and are hereby, respectfully requested to recall Order No. 153 and so revise it that it shall in substance carry out the intent of this petition; and

Whereas by the original Order No. 153 the principal military reservation near the Pacific terminus of the Panama Canal was named "Fort Grant," in honor of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant of the United States Army, it is requested by this convention that the principal military reservation near the Atlantic terminus of the Panama Canal be named in honor of him whose service as an officer of the old Army shed luster upon its fame and the purity of whose motives was unquestioned when compelled by the stern voice of duty to use his sword against his former comrades in arms; as a man and a soldier, leaving his country a matchless name without stain and without reproach; as Commander in Chief, so valiant and wise that he is justly reckoned by history as one of the greatest generals of the world; as a Christian, esteemed by the pious as the peerless exemplar of the faith—Robert E. Lee; and

Whereas the name of "Fort Amador," in honor of the first President of the Republic of Panama is given the second place of honor on the Pacific side of the canal by Order No. 153; it is requested by this convention that the corresponding position of honor on the Atlantic be given the name "Fort John T. Morgan," in honor of the father of the Isthmian Canal idea; and

Whereas it is the purpose of the Government of the United States to establish Army posts and great land defenses in the Panama Canal Zone: Be it

Resolved further, That the proper authorities be, and are hereby, respectfully urged by this convention to give, in the bestowal of these honors, due consideration to the men who planned and executed the Panama Canal and whose genius made it the greatest engineering triumph in the history of the world, namely, Col. George Goethals, Col. William Sibert, Col. William Gorgas, Maj. Gaillard, and others eminently entitled by their distinguished services to have their names perpetuated in enduring form on the site of their achievement.

It is also resolved, That the authorities, in further proof of the present era of good feeling and of national pride in the Panama Canal as a triumph of American genius, be requested to give to heroes of the United States Army and the Confederate States Army equal recognition in bestowing names upon all batteries to be established in the Panama Canal Zone, those specified in Order No. 153, as well as all others that may hereafter be established.

Resolved further, That the corresponding secretary general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy transmit copies of these resolutions to President Woodrow Wilson, Secretary of War Garrison, and Chief of Staff Gen. Leonard Wood, United States Army.

The above resolution was offered by Mrs. Thomas M. Owen, of Alabama, at the general convention, United Daughters of the Confederacy, New Orleans, La., November 12–15, 1913, and was unanimously adopted.

MRS. EDUARD CARL SCHNABEL,
Corresponding Secretary General.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, February 16, 1914.

Whereas it appears from the message of the governor to the legislature under date of February 2, 1914, that there were, on September 30, 1912, 9,241 insane aliens in the civil hospitals of this State, comprising 29.2 per cent of the total hospital population, the net cost of whom to the State for the year 1912 was upward of $2,500,000, and there is reason to believe that the number of the alien insane and the net cost thereof have increased since said date; and

Whereas the immigration of aliens, their acquisition of a residence within this State, and the deportation of insane aliens therefrom are subjects over which this State has no control; and

Whereas it is believed that the provisions of the Federal statutes on the subjects of the admission of aliens and the deportation and repatriation of insane aliens are inadequate to effectively protect the State and Nation; and

Whereas the National Government having assumed legislative responsibility for the alien should be willing to assume the financial responsibility for the care, maintenance, and removal from this country of the alien insane:

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the legislature of this State hereby urges upon Congress, in accordance with the suggestions contained in the governor's message, the enactment of appropriate legislation to accomplish the purposes aforementioned and to that end—

1. To provide that the maintenance of the alien insane be a National and not a State charge; but if the Nation will not assume this just and proper charge, to reimburse the State for the cost of the care and maintenance of the deportable alien insane from the date of commitment to a hospital for the insane to the date of deportation, or until the date of discharge or death in case of any deportable insane alien who for any cause it is found impossible or deemed inadvisable to deport.

2. To appropriate moneys sufficient to insure the adequate mental examination of all arriving immigrants, the reimbursement to the State for the care and maintenance of the deportable alien insane, and the efficient deportation thereof.

To amend the immigration act:

3. To make mandatory the exclusion of all aliens who are mentally defective or are afflicted with chronic alcoholism, or exhibit marked psychopathic tendencies or have been insane at any previous time.

4. To provide that each immigrant examined shall receive, at the port of entry, a certificate from the medical officer or officers who examined him that no mental or physical defects were found, or that those found had been duly certified.

5. To provide that physicians of the United States Public Health Service of special training in the diagnosis of mental diseases and defects should be detailed for duty in sufficient numbers at all times at all the ports of entry.

6. To provide that such physicians should at all times have all necessary facilities, including the exclusive services of interpreters, should be responsible for the mental examination of immigrants, and should be required to make recommendations from time to time as to facilities needed.

7. To provide that there be imposed upon a transportation company a fine of $200 for bringing to this country any alien whose present or previous insanity, mental defect, chronic alcoholism, or psychopathic tendency could have been detected by a competent medical examination prior to his embarkation.

8. To provide for a special study by a board of medical experts of the methods employed for the detection of mental diseases among immigrants, which board shall report such changes therein as to it shall appear to be desirable.

9. To provide that when the chief executive officer of an institution certifies that an insane alien is a public charge therein it shall be the duty of the nearest immigration commissioner to make an investigation as soon as possible, in order to determine if such alien is deportable, and to secure the data necessary to verify his landing.

10. To provide for the deportation of any alien who within five years after entry into this country becomes insane, unless it can be shown that the causes of the alien's insanity arose solely subsequent to his landing.

11. To provide that the extension of the deportation period shall also permit of the deportation of the insane alien whenever proceedings for deportation are commenced within the statutory period.

12. To make it mandatory that the immigration authorities order the insane alien who is deported to be accompanied to his final destination by a suitable attendant in each case in which it is certified by a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service, or by the chief medical officer of the institution in which such alien has been confined, that the alien's condition requires special care and attention.

13. To provide that the testimony of competent alienists as to the mental condition of the alien be taken as sufficient authority for the issuance of a Federal warrant of deportation if other conditions admit.

14. To provide that it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine, for a transportation company to refuse to sell tickets for or to receive on board, guard safely, or return any insane alien who is or has been in an institution for the insane and who desires to be carried to the country of which he is a citizen: Provided—

1. That all the expenses of the return of such alien at customary rates be borne by such alien, his friends, or the authorities charged with his care;

2. That it be certified by the chief medical officer of such institution for the insane that such alien is in condition to travel with safety to others;

3. That it be certified by the same official that such alien is in condition to travel alone with safety to himself or is provided with a suitable attendant; and

4. That such alien is free from any quarantinable disease.

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the clerks of the senate and assembly send a certified copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the United States, the chairman of the appropriate committees of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

PATRICK E. MCCABE, Clerk.

In assembly, February 16, 1914. Concurred in without amendment.
By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

PROPOSED INTERSTATE TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I submit a letter from Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, a distinguished citizen of that city, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the committee which has charge of the bill relating to an interstate trade commission and other similar bills.

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

BOSTON, February 21, 1914.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Senator NEWLANDS sent me Senate bill No. 4160, for the making of an interstate trading commission. Such a commission may be desirable, but must have members very carefully chosen, who have had wide experience in business, high character, and open minds. Such men are hard to find and rarely will serve. The Senate bill asks for inquisitorial powers and for publicity so objectionable that it will fetter and perhaps destroy corporations. Further, any jealous man or corporation affected may force the Attorney General to investigate a rival corporation, with or without cause. This enables a dishonest malcontent to injure an honest, able corporation, and such action is intolerable. In short, it ties the honest man who will speak and deal honestly and truthfully and opens a large door to the dishonest man. It cripples trade and manufactures, and thus limits the work of the day laborer, for the two interests stand or fall together. The question of Federal incorporation is difficult of decision.

Draft bill No. 1: It often happens that a manufacturer sells a lot of shopworn goods in order to clear his shelves, in order to pay notes, or from prudence. Thus it is impossible for a manufacturer or a corporation to fix prices. No man or corporation is ready to show weakness, and yet it may be a necessity to have ready money, for business sometimes feels this necessity, and who can fix the intent or need of a transaction? Still further, the use of judgment in dealing with buyers is essential, for one buyer accepts the goods and pays surely and promptly and another buyer cavils at the goods if the price of them has fallen and delays payment, or does not pay at all. This may all happen as between honest men, the grades of honesty being different. (See postscript.)

The courts alone can decide the just use of the law, but all such threats as are contained in draft bills 1 and 2 frighten people, and the honest man prefers to go without a profit rather than run risks. The less scrupulous man runs this risk, for he has little to lose. The one cares more about his character than he does about his profits, and the other lets his character take care of itself.

Draft bill No. 3 about interlocking directorates. No one doubts that abuses have crept in here. It is often well that a man should advise and direct in two corporations which interlock in their dealings, and often such action is harmful. The Federal bank act will drive from bank directorates many men of great value to the banks, and will substitute men ignorant of credits, conditions, and of general affairs. At the same time, the influence and knowledge of these valuable men will be used, but the responsibility for their acts will not exist; that is, these men can be used, but not held accountable. The law taxes the shadow and not the substance. Further, if directors are to be confined or imprisoned because of mistakes or sins of the corporation officials, good men will not serve on directorates. This bill has good intent, but needs very careful consideration.

All these bills hurt the honest man and help the dishonest or half honest or reckless man—in short, the gambler or semigambler who will run risks, wriggle, and, if need be, lie. If the corporations are hurt or crippled, it reacts on all the wage earners. Unless most carefully drawn, with the full belief that most men are honest and will deal fairly, the bills will prove absolutely undemocratic in their results. I recognize the danger of too much power in any man's hands, and deprecate the greed of mankind, but this greed apears in the acts of the workingman, the farmer, the manufacturer, the trader—whether it be in goods, securities, or money. Nothing but good courts and a higher tone in business will cure the evils, although they will have been much lessened in these last years. Ignorance does much more mischief in this world than dishonesty.

The above are the opinions which come to me after a careful study of this bill and these draft bills by an able lawyer and by myself. If our fellow countrymen can not be trusted and be on the whole good, our country has little value. Having lived among them 80 years, I believe our countrymen can be trusted.

I am, with great respect, and with thanks to you for your trouble,

Very truly, yours,

HENRY L. HIGGINSON.

P. S.—It is true that some of these points may be covered by the provisions of the bill—that is, draft bill No. 1—but opportunities for attack based upon alleged intents or motives are always possible, and often a successful defense might be as harmful as a defeat. For example, a man forced to sell goods at a low price might be very unwilling to disclose his necessity, even after the crisis had passed, for his credit is very dear to him, and, although it is provided that one may choose his customers, still a mine owner or a manufacturer might hesitate to make public his just suspicions of the honesty and credit of the buyer. Such a disclosure might also injure an honest buyer. The question of character constantly comes into business as well as life, and is not easily discussed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the letter, of course, goes into the RECORD. It does seem to me that in justice to all, especially the first bill, should be printed in the RECORD in connection with the letter that, so far as the letter may be read by the public, the public may have an opportunity to pass its judgment upon the criticism contained in the letter of the proposed bill. I ask that the bill itself be printed in the RECORD following the letter.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4160) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 4160) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the interstate trade commission, which shall be composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and the said interstate trade commission is referred to hereinafter as "the commission."

SEC. 2. That on the taking effect of this act the Bureau of Corporations shall cease to exist, and is hereby transferred to, and merged in, and becomes a part of the commission; and all officers and employees of the Bureau of Corporations shall hereafter be the officers and employees of the commission, and with the transfer there shall pass to the possession of the commission all the records and papers of said bureau, and the commission shall hereafter exercise all the powers and perform all the duties heretofore conferred or imposed upon the said bureau.

All appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the bureau shall stand as appropriations to be expended by the commission in the exercise of the power and in the performance of the duties which the law, prior to the passage of this act, conferred or imposed upon said bureau. And the person who at that time shall be the Commissioner of Corporations shall become a member of the commission and the chairman thereof for the term of seven years. The other four commissioners, and a fifth commissioner upon the retirement or expiration of the seven-year term of the former Commissioner of Corporations, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The term of the commissioner shall be seven years: Provided, That the term of the commissioners first appointed by the President shall date from the taking effect of this act and be as follows: One for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, one for a term of five years, and one for a term of six years; and the successor to the former Commissioner of Corporations, when appointed, shall be appointed for a term of seven years; and thereafter all appointments shall be for a term of seven years. Upon the retirement from the commission, from whatsoever cause, of the person who at the time this act shall take effect shall be the Commissioner of Corporations the commissioners shall elect one of its members chairman. The commissioners shall elect a secretary and assistant secretary, said chairman to hold his office as chairman and said secretary and assistant secretary to hold their offices or connection with the commission at the pleasure of the commission. The members of the commission shall each receive a salary of $10,000 per annum, the secretary of the commission shall receive a salary of $7,200 per annum, and the assistant secretary shall receive a salary of $4,500 per annum. In case of vacancy in the commission during the term of the commissioners, an appointment shall be made by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy, and shall be for the unexpired term. The office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but it may at its pleasure hold meetings elsewhere. The commission shall have such clerks, examiners, experts, and other employees as may be necessary and as may be, from time to time, appropriated for by Congress.

SEC. 3. That all corporations engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting common carriers, whether required by general rules and regulations for regular information or information specially asked in special instances, shall, from time to time, furnish to the commission such information, statements, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, management, and relation to other companies, at such time, to such degree and extent, and in such form, as may be prescribed by the commission. The commission, at all reasonable times, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall have complete access to all records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers of such corporations, including the records of any of their executive or other committees. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporations subject to this act to comply with the terms of this section within such time after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission requiring such compliance as shall be fixed by the commission shall constitute a misdemeanor, and upon conviction such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

SEC. 4. That the information so obtained shall be public records, and the commission shall, from time to time, make public such information in such form and to such extent as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 5. That the district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure to comply with any order of the commission for the furnishing of information, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or other order enforcing such order of the commission and to punish the disobedience thereof as in other cases of contempt of court.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of this act the commission shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, documents, or other things of every kind and nature whatsoever relating to any matter under investigation by the commission. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books, documents, and papers as so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of this court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying.

Witnesses whose testimony is taken under the provisions of this act shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like service in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, or other things before the commission, or in obedience to the subpœna of the commission, whether such subpœna be signed or issued by one or more of the commissioners, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify under oath or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said commission in obedience to a subpœna issued by it in a proceeding instituted other than upon his own initiative: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. The purpose of this provision is to give immunity only to natural persons who, under oath, testify in response to a subpœna of the commission in an inquiry instituted by the commission.

SEC. 7. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both

SEC. 8. That the commission is hereby given authority, upon complaint made to it in such manner as it may by general or specific regulations provide, or on its own initiative, to institute and conduct an investigation to determine whether or not any corporation subject to the provisions of this act was organized or has established such relations with other individuals or corporations or is conducting its business in whole or in part in violation of the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," or any existing or future amendments thereof, or any of said provisions. If the commission shall find any such violation, the matter shall be submitted by it to the Attorney General, to the end that the said violation be proceeded against, prosecuted, and terminated in accordance with the provisions of said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof or supplemental thereto as aforesaid.

SEC. 9. That the commission shall, at any time, upon the request of the Attorney General or any corporation affected, investigate any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, with all the powers of investigation heretofore bestowed on the commission, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been in the conduct of said corporation or is in the organization of such corporation or its relations to other corporations or individuals a violation of said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, and in case the commission shall find such violation it shall make a finding, fully stating the same and prescribing the acts, transactions, and readjustments necessary in order that said corporation may thereafter comply with the terms of said act and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, and shall transmit a copy of the said finding as aforesaid to the Attorney General, as advisory to the Attorney General in terminating, by agreement with the corporation affected or by suit, as provided in said act aforesaid, the said unlawful conduct or condition. Said finding shall become a public record of the commission, as provided in section 4, only upon the direction of the Attorney General or the President.

SEC. 10. That in suits of equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General, as provided in the act of July 2, 1890, as aforesaid, the court in which said suit is pending may, at any stage in the litigation, at its discretion, refer to the commission any aspect of the litigation or any proposed decree, whereupon the commission shall investigate the question or questions referred to it with all the powers of investigation hereinbefore bestowed on the commission and shall report its findings to the court, with a copy of the evidence upon which said findings or recommendations are based. Said evidence, findings, and recommendations shall be public records, as provided in section 4 hereof.

SEC. 11. That the said commission shall, on or before the 1st day of January of each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations with reference to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 12. That, with the exception of the secretary and assistant secretary and one clerk to each of the commissioners, and such special agents as may be employed from time to time, all employees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission hereby created and by the Civil Service Commission. The commission shall also have the power to rent suitable rooms for the conduct of its work, paying therefor such rent as may be provided for by appropriation.

SEC. 13. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing, according to the provisions thereof, the said act of July 2, 1890, and the amendments thereof as aforesaid, nor to amend or modify otherwise the provisions of said act and the amendments thereof.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11338, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, on page 27, line 13. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 13, after the word "substations," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1914, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, on the first day the pending bill was taken up I made an announcement that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness. I did not repeat the announcement, and I make this statement in justice to him, so that his absence may be understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 15, line 12, after the words "For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000." I ask to have it read. It is an amendment which I offered some days ago. I have made some changes in it in the nature of perfecting it before being formally offered to the bill. I offered it for printing the other day and had it lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 12, after the sum "$56,188,000" and the colon, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That for carrying parcel-post matter no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any railroad for such matter carried by such railroad except upon the basis of 50 per cent of the gross receipts by the department under the following charges:

On all matter mailed at the post office from which a rural route starts, for delivery on such route, or mailed at any point on such route for delivery at any other point thereon, or at the office from which the route starts, or on any rural route starting therefrom, and on all matter mailed at a city carrier office, or at any point within its delivery limits, for delivery by carriers from that office, or at any office for local delivery, 4 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 1 cent for each additional 2 pounds or fraction thereof.

For delivery within any zone as provided in the act, "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, except as provided in the next preceding paragraph the rates shall be arrived at by multiplying the number of pounds of weight by the number of the zone in which delivery is to be made and adding 3 to the result so obtained: Provided, That 25 per cent from the above rates shall be deducted on all articles of food or drink, except ale, beer, berries, candy and confectionery, fish, live, frogs, fruit, green, in gauze cloth or paper-covered baskets, ice cream, liquor, live stock, medicated beverages, medicines, terrapin, vegetables in gauze cloth or paper-covered baskets: Provided, That the weight limit for parcel-post matter shall be 50 pounds and that fractions of a pound over the first pound shall be charged for at the pound rate: Provided further, That for delivery between the Philippine Islands and any portion of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the several Territories and possessions, the rates charged shall be the same as for delivery within the eighth zone.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, this amendment is quite long, but a great deal of it is simply a reproduction of the present law. Should the amendment be adopted, the changes that would be brought about in the present law would be such as I shall in a moment indicate. Senators who are interested, if they will turn to the RECORD, on page 4234, will see a comparison of the rates which this amendment would provide and those that are provided for in the order of Mr. Burleson; that is, the existing rate.

The first rate is the local rate. That is the same as Mr. Burleson's, except that the rate is 1 cent per package lower. Mr. Burleson's is 5 cents for 1 pound and 1 cent additional for each 2 pounds delivered within the local delivery. So that these rates would make the delivery of a 1-pound package on a rural route or in a city 4 cents instead of 5; and on 2 pounds, 5 cents instead of 6, and so clear on down to 50 pounds, on which the rate would be 29 instead of 30 cents, making a reduction clear down the line.

I restore the 50-mile zone which Mr. Burleson abolished; and the rate in the 50-mile zone will be 1 cent lower than the rates which Mr. Burleson has provided for the first and second zones.

Then, in the second zone, which is the zone embraced between the distances of 50 and 100 miles, the rates are increased above those charged by Mr. Burleson's order. The rate will be 5 cents for the first pound, which is the same as Mr. Burleson's, and then there is an increase of 1 cent per pound for each additional pound, making a rate in the second zone on 50 pounds $1.03 instead of 54 cents, according to Mr. Burleson's order.

Take the third zone. In the third zone, the zone between 150 and 300 miles, there is a similar increase after the first pound of 1 cent a pound. The rate on 50 pounds in that zone under Mr. Burleson's order is $1.04, and under the amendment which I propose it would be $1.53.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator a question for information, if he has no objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. LANE. I understood the Senator to state the other day that out in Chicago the railroad companies divided the cost of transportation with the express companies, and that they were able to deliver a package for the express companies for, say, something like 35 cents, whereas the Government, paying the railroads the rates they charged, had to charge the customer something in excess of a dollar. I ask in what position would the Government be under the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will pardon me, I will say that my amendment proposes to cure that discrepancy; that is the purpose of the amendment. If the Senator will listen to me, I shall be glad to explain that as I proceed.

In the fourth zone the rates in Mr. Burleson's order and the rates proposed in this amendment are exactly the same.

In the fifth zone the rates proposed by myself are very much lower than those of Mr. Burleson. The rate on a 50-pound package in the fifth zone under Mr. Burleson's order would be $3.02, and under the proposed amendment it would be $2.53.

In the sixth zone Mr. Burleson's rate is $4.01 per 50 pounds, while the proposed rate is $3.03 per 50 pounds.

In the seventh zone Mr. Burleson's rate is $5.01 for 50 pounds, and the proposed rate is $3.53 per 50 pounds.

In the eighth zone Mr. Burleson's rate for 50 pounds is $6, while the proposed rate is $4.03.

To show the general effect that this would have on the country at large, I have taken 90 cities located in the 8 zones, and I have here a comparison of rates on a 20-pound package from New York west to those 90 cities. Then I also have a comparison on a 20-pound package from San Francisco east to the 90 cities. The result is that the aggregate amount of postage, under the proposed rates, on the 90 packages delivered from New York west to all of the 90 cities would be $108.90, while the aggregate to the same cities under the Burleson rate would be $120.77, a difference of about $12 in favor of the proposed rates, being that much of a reduction.

Mr. NORRIS. For any one zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; taking 90 cities covering the country and reaching into every zone, that is the way it averages up. It averages up a net reduction of about $12. That saving is effected under the proposed rate for packages going from New York west to the 90 cities. Then I take the rates from San Francisco coming east, and on that computation the aggregate postage to these 90 cities for 20-pound packages under the Burleson rate would be $165.71, and under the proposed rates the aggregate would be $127.90, showing a reduction there of almost $40, a very material reduction.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Has this proposition been considered by the commission which is investigating parcel-post rates?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; not by the commission; this is my work, so far as the table is concerned, aided by a gentleman to whom I expect to refer. I want to speak of that. This is my own work; it is not the commission's work at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Then may I ask the further question: Has this matter been submitted to the Post Office Department in order that we may have the benefit of their judgment about it?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; it has not; but I should like to invite the attention of the Senate to the ingenuity of this table—and when I speak of its ingenuity I do not want to take credit to myself for the idea which it embodies. This table was worked out by Mr KINDEL, a Member of the House of Representatives from Denver, Colo., and for simplicity and ease of ascertaining the rates to any town in the United States is one of the most remarkable tables I think ever gotten up by a rate expert in the United States. If you want to find the rate of postage on any sized package to any town in the United States, you first ascertain in what zone that town is located; then you multiply the number of pounds by the zone and add 3. To illustrate, if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] desired to send a package from Washington to Pittsburgh and the package weighed 9 pounds—Pittsburgh, as I remember, being in the third zone from Washington—you would multiply 9 by 3, making 27, and add 3 cents, which is what Mr. KINDEL calls the "pick-up" charge, and you have a total of 30 cents, which is the rate on that package. If it went to Chicago, which, as I remember, is in the fifth zone from Washington, and the package weighed 19 pounds, the rate would be five times 19, which is 95, plus 3, making 98 cents as the rate on that package to Chicago. So you can take any town anywhere, look at your postal map, and ascertain in what zone it is located, multiply that zone by the number of pounds, add 3, and you will have the rate.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not apply to the local rate, does it?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; the local rate has no mileage; that is simply local delivery. Within the first zone, of course, you would multiply by 1; but after you get into the second zone multiply by 2, or in the third zone by 3, and so forth. It will work out every time. As I have said, the table is a remarkable one.

The rates I have provided are not exactly the ones which Mr. KINDEL suggested, because I have applied my rates; but under these rates there is a desirable decrease.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is the Senator able to give us any estimate as to the amount of revenue which would be derived from this plan and the amount of profit or loss, if any, to the department?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, there can not be a loss in my judgment. I will explain it. If the Senator will notice the amendment, he will see that it provides that the railroads shall be paid 50 per cent of the gross postal receipts for parcel-post matter. If the railroads carry a package from New York to Chicago and the postage is 98 cents, the Government would get 49 cents and the railroad would get 49 cents. That is the arrangement the railroads have with the express companies. The express companies divide approximately half and half the express rates with the railroad companies.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator one question in that connection. The railroads in carrying express matter use a box car, whereas I understand that mail and parcel-post matter is carried in a car specially fitted for that purpose. The railroads claim, of course, that it costs a great deal more to carry postal matter than it does to carry express matter. Has the Senator given that subject any consideration?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not in this matter, because I am dealing with the express; I am not dealing with the question of railway mail pay for letters and newspapers. I let that alone; I do not touch it.

Mr. SMOOT. This is for the parcel post?

Mr. BRISTOW. This is for parcel post only; this is the express business. If we are going into the express business, let us go into the express business, and not undertake to carry cabbages and bricks and potatoes with letters.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator give us a comparison between the earnings of the Parcel Post Service under the prevailing rates and the earnings under the proposed rates contained in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I think I will be able to do that. I am glad the Senator has suggested that to me, because I think I have a table here that will enable me to make that comparison, although I had not thought of it.

We will take a 20-pound package going to the third zone. The present rate, under Mr. Burleson's order, for 20 pounds to the third zone is 44 cents. He claims a profit there of 7 cents, leaving the expense 37 cents, deducting the overhead charge of 5 cents, which he counts, leaves 32 cents for the railroad; that is, he pays the railroad 32 cents and 5 cents for overhead charges, according to his figures, and he receives 44 cents, and therefore there would be 7 cents profit. My rate in that zone on 20 pounds would be more; it would be 63 cents instead of 44 cents. The railway cost in that case to the department would be one-half of 63, or 31½ cents. The rate would be 19 cents more, but the cost in the third zone on a 20-pound package would be several cents less.

Now we come to the fourth zone. Mr. Burleson's rate in the fourth zone is 83 cents. He says he makes a profit of 20 cents, his cost being 63 cents—58 cents rail, 5 cents overhead. My rate in the fourth zone would be the same as Mr. Burleson's, 83 cents. That would be divided by 2. The railroads would get 41½ cents and the department would get 41½ cents, making the expense to the department 41½ cents, as against 63 cents under Mr. Burleson's rate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In the Postmaster General's estimate of the expense, is the railroad cost the only one he has taken into consideration?

Mr. BRISTOW. He adds 5 cents to the railroad cost.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator propose that in his plan?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have added 3 cents.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I see a difficulty in the way of the plan suggested by the Senator from Kansas. Possibly he can remove it. It is a new idea to me.

The railroads agree to take for their compensation 50 per cent of the rates charged by the express companies. That, however, is a matter of agreement. I assume that the railroad companies are somewhat influential in determining the rates charged by the express companies, and therefore may be satisfied with 50 per cent of the revenues of the express companies. The United States, however, does not enter into any consultation or conference with the railroad companies with regard to the rates charged upon postal matter. Of course, it is perfectly well known to the Senator from Kansas that we can not arbitrarily impose upon the railroad companies a rate at which they shall carry this freight matter. We would be compelled to pay them a reasonable rate for the carriage of the freight. That would have to be fixed eventually, I assume, if it was not agreed upon, by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In fact, it will have to be fixed eventually by the Interstate Commerce Commission anyhow, because when the United States goes into the freight business the railroad companies will not be permitted to charge the United States any other or different sum for the carriage of freight than they charge private individuals and other patrons of the common carriers. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that his plan might fall in the provision that the railroad companies shall receive one-half the rate.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me, it might, but it will not, and I will state the reason why. It is because the rates I propose are somewhat higher than the express rates, and the railroads will get slightly more from the Government than they get from the express companies, but very much less than they now get from the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. That might be very good for the railroad companies, but the railroads ought not to be permitted to have any such rates.

Mr. BRISTOW. That may be true; but we are paying them now twice as much, and why not cut that in two?

Mr. CUMMINS. When we consider it as a matter of mail pay that is one thing, but when we go into the freight business that is quite another thing. The railroad companies will have to carry the freight of the United States for just the same rate that they carry the freight of any other person who ships under like circumstances.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree to that; but we have a proposition before us now whereby we are paying for carrying express more than double the amount the express company is paying. We are paying to the railroads for carrying the parcel-post express of the country more than the express companies are charging the people. We pay for our express more than the gross rates that the express companies receive.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume that is so, because we make no discrimination at all between the different kinds of matter carried in the mail.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is worth a certain amount to carry letters, and it is worth quite a different amount or a less amount to carry railroad freight. Eventually we shall have to have some separation or discrimination between those kinds of service.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree to that; and we are trying to do that right now.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. The statement of the Senator from Kansas is interesting, that the Government is paying the railroad companies for carrying mail twice as much as the express companies are paying the railroad companies for carrying express. It came out in the testimony before the Post Office Committee two or three days ago, at a hearing when the Senator from Kansas happened to be absent, that within the 50-mile limit from a large city the Interstate Commerce Commission had permitted the express companies to make a 20-cent rate on a package of 10 pounds weight or less. That package was being carried by the local express company for 15 cents. It is being carried by the Government for somewhere from 5 to 14 cents, according to the weight.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission thinks the express company should charge 20 cents for carrying that package, and it is being carried by a local express company for 15 cents, and is now being carried by the Government for from 5 to 14 cents, dependent on its weight, I should like to have the Senator from Kansas explain how we are likely to get a fair return if any lower rate than that now in force is charged?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator is speaking of short deliveries within the 50-mile zone.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. That is the bulk of the express business of the country, and the parcel-post business, too.

Mr BRISTOW. I think the Senator is very much mistaken about that. Within the 50-mile zone the express companies charge more than the Government does, and the railroads of course make more of a profit from the express companies on those short hauls than they do on the long hauls; and the express companies make more of a profit on the long hauls than on the short hauls, where they have to pick up and deliver. I wish, however, to give the Senator some figures now that have been taken from express charges and postal cost, according to Mr. Burleson's figures.

In the 150-mile zone—unfortunately, Mr. Burleson has abolished the first zone, and it was the greatest mistake he has made—the postal rate is 24 cents. The express rate is 34 cents. The postal cost is estimated by the department at 18 cents. So the amount which the railroads would receive for transporting these packages in the short zone, the first zone, would be less than they get from the express companies, because the rate is less.

When, however, you get into the next zone, the third zone, or Mr. Burleson's second zone in charges, there Mr. Burleson's postal charge is 44 cents and the express charge is 36 cents; so the department there is charging more than the express company. I am referring to the region between Boston and New York. Under Mr. Burleson's figures the department is charging more than the express rate in that zone. Now, Mr. Burleson says his cost is 33 cents. If the railroads received half of Mr. Burleson's charge, which is 44 cents, they would get 22 cents, as against 18 cents which they get from the express companies.

When you get into the fourth zone Mr. Burleson's charge is 83 cents and the express company's charge is 46 cents. I am taking individual towns, of course—that is the only way you can get an express charge—and this is in the eastern part of the United States. In the western part of the United States the comparison will be somewhat different. Mr. Burleson's charge is 83 cents and the express company's charge is 46 cents. Mr. Burleson's expense, according to his estimate, is 63 cents, which is 17 cents more than the entire express charge. Fifty-eight cents of that 63 cents, he says, is paid to the railroads for transporting the mails.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas how it can be possible that the Postmaster General knows what he is paying for the parcel post in three-fourths of the United States? No weighing has taken place since the parcel post was established. Are the railroads getting anything for carrying the parcel post in those sections?

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, that is a temporary condition. That is true. They are getting 5 per cent more than they were getting for the mails. That is what we authorized them to get. It is claimed that that does not at all compensate them. But I am speaking of what they would receive if they were paid according to the legal rates. You can not make any other comparison. The other plan, while it may be temporarily a very great burden, will be in the end a source of tremendous profit when they begin to get these excessive rates for carrying express matter.

Mr. WEEKS. If the figures are correct.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, I do not think there is much doubt about it. I think you can get the cost of railway transportation more accurately than the cost of any other service that is rendered in handling the mails. As the Senator understands, it is estimated with some accuracy that the cost of transporting a pound over the railroads in this country, according to our rates, is about 2.6 mills per pound per 50 miles, and that is the basis upon which all these figures are made. I think the Hughes Commission found that the cost was a little less than that. Those were the figures of the department when they made the very elaborate investigation some time since.

When you get into the sixth zone Mr. Burleson's rate is $1.61 and the express rate is 82 cents. Of course, the rates I propose are much less than Mr. Burleson's. The rate I propose in the sixth zone on 20-pound packages will be $1.23 as against $1.61, the present rate. Under this proposition the railroads would get half of $1,23, or 61½ cents, which is some more than they get from the express companies. They can not, as the Senator from Iowa suggested, attack those rates, because on all of the long hauls they would have better rates than they now get from the express companies; but they would have about 50 per cent less than they are now getting for handling the mails; that is, I classify express matter separately as parcel-post business, pay them for what they haul, and give them half of the gross receipts for the package, which is practically the arrangement they have with the express companies.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] inquired what difference there would be in the revenues of the department under this plan as compared with the existing plan. Of course the profits would be very much more, as the Senator from Ohio can observe.

To illustrate, we will take the fifth zone. The proposed rate is $1.03. The present rate is $1.22. In the fifth zone Mr. Burleson estimates the cost of a 20-pound package at $1.03. That is, he estimates the cost at exactly what my rate is. The cost to the Government for transportation under my rate, instead of being $1.03, would be 51½ cents. So we would carry that package for 19 cents less, and we would make 51½ cents, while under Mr. Burleson's rates, from his estimates, he makes only 17 cents.

If you go into the eighth zone, where there is a large amount of business, the rate on 20 pounds under the proposed amendment would be $1.63. Under the existing rates the rate is $2.40. That is, the proposed rate is 77 cents less than the present rate. The Postmaster General estimates the cost to him under the present rate, on a 20-pound package, at $2.23. My proposed rate is $1.63, which is 60 cents less than his cost. The railroads would receive, under the proposed rate, 81½ cents for handling the package, and under Mr. Burleson's rate they receive $2.18 for handling the package.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Kansas, the greater part of the profit derivable from the plan the Senator proposes would be brought about by a reduction in the amount the railroad company would receive?

Mr. BRISTOW. It would be all received from that source.

There has been a good deal of discussion here in regard to the proposed rates. It has been said that we are paying too much, and the question has been asked time and again why we do not reduce the rates. I have proposed an amendment that will compensate the railroads upon the same basis that they are now compensated by the express companies that will pay them just as much and in the aggregate a little more than they now get from the express companies. They can not have any complaint, and it will reduce the rate to the public on the average almost 20 per cent over the existing rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if it would not follow, whether it is the present rate or the Senator's proposed rate, if the rate is greater than the express rate, that the express companies would do the business?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; they do not do it all.

Mr. NORRIS. Do they not?

Mr. BRISTOW. They do not.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the result eventually be that they will do it?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, that may be true. We would have to adjust that. I do not claim that this is perfect. I should like to have the rate a little lower than it is, but I believe in being on the safe side, and by this system we can save ten or fifteen million dollars in railway charges and reduce the rate to be paid by the public from 10 to 20 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much impressed with what the Senator has said not only to-day but the other day, and the simplicity of the plan proposed appeals to me. At the same time, taking Mr. Burleson's estimate now, if the Senator will take the second zone, the 150-mile zone, he will find that the rate that would be charged, if his proposed rates were put into effect, would be very much higher, except on very small packages. On a 2-pound package it would be a little higher, but it keeps on increasing all the way up. If the Senator will turn to the other table to which he has been referring he will find that the estimate given there by the department is very much lower. So, if there is any reliance to be placed on these estimated charges, the charges might be lowered very greatly in that zone.

Mr. BRISTOW. In certain parts of the country it is true. In other sections of the country it is not true.

Mr. NORRIS. Right on that point I would like to ask the Senator about the first zone, the 50-mile zone. There the Senator's proposed rate would be on every package just 1 cent more than the Burleson rate?

Mr. BRISTOW. No. One cent less.

Mr. NORRIS. The estimated cost in that first zone given by the Postmaster General would enable us in the case of most packages, from 1 to 50 pounds, to cut the rate right in two, and still be safe.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the Senator must remember that in that zone our service is very much different from the express service.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator as to the first zone. I think it ought not to be eliminated. I think the Postmaster General ought not to have put those two zones in one. I am not complaining because he lowered the rate where he did; according to these estimates he was justified in doing it; but he ought to have made a difference between 50 miles and 150 miles, which he could have done under his own estimate by cutting it almost in the middle in the 50-mile zone. So we would avoid in that way the discrepancy the Senator pointed out the other day that arises on account of the zone being so large.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to call the attention of the Senator to a comparison between the proposed rates and the express rates. In the eastern part of the country the express rate is lower than the postal rate. In the western part of the country the postal rate is lower than the express rate. Take our proposed rate on a 20-pound package out of San Francisco; we will say from San Francisco to Cheyenne. The express rate from San Francisco to Cheyenne is $1.41; Mr. Burleson's rate is $1.22; and under this proposed amendment my rate would be $1.03. So in that vast western region there is a reduction anywhere.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the Senator's proposed rates are the same all over the country; that is, for the same distance.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; for the same distance.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the same as Mr. Burleson's rates, of course, but it is not true of the express rates.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. Burleson's western rates are lower than the express rates. His eastern rates are very much higher. The western rates that I propose are materially lower than Mr. Burleson's and, of course, still lower than the express rates; but I can do that, because I pay my railroad charges by dividing my rate in two and giving the railroads half and the Government taking half.

Mr. NORRIS. I see that.

Mr. BRISTOW. I put compensation to railroads on the express basis.

Mr. NORRIS. The thing that interests my mind in this table, which I believe is of more importance than those long-distance hauls, is the rates for the first and second zones. I understand the larger part of the parcel-post business will be confined to those two zones. Is not that true?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I do not think it ought to be the case. I think the Senator will find, if he will count the packages in the tables, that that is not the case. I know a very large business goes beyond the third zone.

Mr. NORRIS. There would be a large business; but, for instance, take farm products and such things as that, their shipment would be confined to the first two zones.

Mr. BRISTOW. They have a reduction of 25 per cent on the rates for all food products.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. In my amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will permit me just a minute, I want to explain one vital point in this arrangement. The rate on merchandise is the regular rate. On market stuff, on food products, it is 25 per cent less. That gives the small man an opportunity to get the lowest rates for the product of his own hand. I think that is a decided advantage. I think it is a good thing.

I want to call the Senator's attention to a point he will appreciate. Under the arrangement which Mr. Burleson has put into effect a mail-order house can send into a distant zone at a low rate, and then redistribute by remailing, and save 15 cents on every package of 20 pounds.

Mr. NORRIS. That has come about on account of the elimination of the first zone.

Mr. BRISTOW. On account of the elimination and the reduction of the rate in the second zone to an amount proportionately so much less than the long haul. But what is the result? I will take a mail-order house at Kansas City. I mention Kansas City because I am familiar with the Missouri River country, and can call the towns, knowing in what zones they are located. I will take St. Louis. A mail-order house in St. Louis can send a package of 20 pounds to Kansas City for 44 cents, and remail it to Salina, Kans., for 24 cents, or a cost of 68 cents. If that mail-order house had sent it direct to Salina, it would have cost 83, or 15 cents more. That is what the mail-order houses can do. They have agencies everywhere, and they are taking advantage, of course, of this sum of the local being less than the through rate; but the ordinary citizen who wants to send an express package can not do that. He has not any agents anywhere, and he has to pay the high rate for every package he sends.

I wish to say that these rates apparently were fixed for mail-order houses. If the mail-order houses of Chicago had had a representative in the department to have fixed these rates, it could not have been done any better for their business. I am not, as I said the other day, intimating that that was done, because I know the Postmaster General would not tolerate that for a minute, but, with all his multitudinous duties, he does not understand just what his rates are doing. The ordinary citizen sends one or two packages, and will have to pay the excessive rate because he can not reship. He has no agent at an intermediate point to attend to his business for him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask the Senator if that is not one of the regulations which is under the control of the Postmaster General, so that if it is discovered that this method of reshipping articles, as suggested by the Senator, is being indulged in, has not the Postmaster General the power to present a regulation which would prevent it?

Mr. BRISTOW. How would he do it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. By making an order to the effect that it shall not be done.

Mr. BRISTOW. That it shall not be reshipped? How will he know whether it is reshipped or not, let me ask the Senator? The Senator is an expert on this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not.

Mr. BRISTOW. Can the Postmaster General say to one citizen, you may send a package of 20 pounds from St. Louis to Kansas City for 44 cents, and say to another citizen you can not send exactly the same kind of a package at the same rate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was impressed with what the Senator said the other day. It was the first time my attention had been called to the possibility of such a thing. I can see in that the absolute defeat of the purpose of the parcel post. The parcel post was organized for the purpose of permitting people to ship directly from the seller to the purchaser. If it can be so used that men can make a wholesale business of shipping to some agent and then having goods reshipped inside of a certain territory, it seems to me that it would be a defeat of the purpose of the system.

I confess I am not prepared to say whether it can or can not be changed, but I know that we have given a certain discretion to the Postmaster General, and it would seem to me as though he might devise some way to defeat an indirect effort to destroy the usefulness of the service.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me, the Postmaster General's order is what makes this possible. It was not possible until he issued his order.

Mr. NORRIS. Right in this connection I should like to suggest to the Senator would it not be possible for the Postmaster General to change that by changing rates?

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course if he will increase the rates in the first zone and restore the first zone and make a proportionate rate.

Mr. NORRIS. He could accomplish the same thing by decreasing the rate, could he not?

Mr. BRISTOW. He can not without paying the railroad more than he is getting for postage.

Mr. NORRIS. His estimates are found on page 4239. There are some of these rates that he can reduce very materially and still be on the safe side. It has always seemed to me that if, instead of raising the rate on the second zone he had lowered the rate on the first or 50-mile zone, he would have accomplished the destruction of the greatest evil the Senator has pointed out, and he would have still been safely under his estimate. For instance, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the estimates made there. He will find it in almost all cases, as, for instance, in 1-pound packages. There the charge is 5 cents and the cost is a little over 3 cents, and so on. When you get down to 6 pounds, say, the charge is 10 cents, the cost 4½ cents, and from that on. In the case of 5-pound packages the charge is 9 cents, and the cost is a little over 4 cents. On 4 pounds the charge is 8 cents and the cost is 4 cents. From 4 pounds on up to 50 he could cut the rate right in two and have a surplus in every instance according to these estimates.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true according to those estimates, but, if the Senator will pardon me, there is this difficulty. I fear the Postmaster General has gotten those rates lower than he is justified. I have accepted it on the first zone, because it is a local rate, and we want the lowest possible rate.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to call attention——

Mr. BRISTOW. Just a moment, until I get my idea expressed, and then I will yield to the Senator.

There is one thing that we must always take into consideration, and that is that we have a Rural Delivery Service that is costing something over $50,000,000 a year. That is a service which no other transportation company furnishes. So we can not make an absolutely accurate comparison of delivery upon the same rates as those of an express company, because we are providing a service which they do not provide. Any citizen who pays postage has the right to have the package delivered, and when you collect it and bring it in from the country on these local deliveries you have a growing expense.

We have increased the cost of delivery in this bill about four and one-half million dollars. That was not taken into consideration in these estimates. There are others. There is an increase that just comes to my mind of half a million dollars for warehousing. We have mounted up here on account of the Parcel Post Service the additional cost of probably $10,000,000 in this bill, taking into consideration the additional rates for star routes, three or four millions for railways, and so forth.

So my opinion is that it would be very unsafe for the Postmaster General to make any additional reduction in the rates that he has fixed in the first zone and the second zone and the third zone. If you do not have a graduated increase, then, of course, you get hopelessly involved and make possible this indefensible remailing system.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that these figures can not in the very nature of things be absolutely accurate. He never will be able to get them absolutely accurate. But the Postmaster General says in the letter in which he incloses these figures and this table, as I remember reading it, that he took into consideration the cost of transportation of all these articles on the railroads at the rates that the railroads would be entitled to receive in case the weighing had taken place.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. So the argument that has been made here so often, that these estimates are not good because the reweighing has not taken place, the Postmaster General has at least attempted to meet. He says:

> I beg to inclose herewith certain statistical data, * * *. These data are not estimates, but accurate records kept in the post offices at the time each parcel was handled.

He took them from 50 of the largest post offices in the United States. I do not claim that is absolutely accurate, of course, because it will vary somewhat. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator, that we have increased here the cost of delivery by increasing the cost of the salaries of the rural delivery carriers and for some other reason, while that is all true, would it not follow that as the business develops, when instead of handling a dozen packages two dozen would be handled, the minimum cost of each unit would be lessened? That ought to be taken into consideration if we are going to get an accurate estimate of what the actual cost would be.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me, I desire to say that, in my opinion, the Postmaster General is misleading himself by taking these 50 cities, because the most convenient and the cheapest way of handling and delivering the packages is in the congested centers of population. He has no way of telling how much it is costing to deliver a package on a rural route; we do not any of us know; we are going absolutely in the dark, because rural parcel delivery is a developing and an experimental business. When you fix a rate low you can not raise it. The Postmaster General has fixed the rates in the first and second zones at the figure which he has, and I want to make a prediction that it will be a long time before those rates are increased, unless they are increased at this session of Congress. You can not increase rates when business adjusts itself to such rates; and my opinion is that the Post Office Department will be involved in tremendous losses unless there is some readjustment of compensation to the railroads for carrying this express matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator from Kansas mean to convey the idea that if, after a sufficient length of trial by the Post Office Department of these particular rates, it is developed that they are too low, the Postmaster General would not increase them?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; he will not. Of course he will not.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think he would. I do not know of any reason why he should not.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator does not know now; but I am making the prediction, and I hope we shall both live for 20 years to see if my prediction is not true. When was a postal rate ever raised?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's prediction is that the rates will not be raised. I predict the same thing, because I do not believe they are too low, though I may be mistaken; but I am sure if the Postmaster General found that the rates had been fixed at a figure which did not bring in the cost of work he would not hesitate a moment to increase them, and I should think the Postmaster General would be subject to censure if he would not do that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator. According to the estimates, we are paying 6 cents a pound for handling newspapers and periodicals, second-class matter, and we get a cent a pound out of it. Is the Senator in favor of raising that rate to 6 cents a pound?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, there are a great many other questions involved in that which, I will say to the Senator, are not involved here.

Mr. BRISTOW. The same questions will be involved when you come to raise the rates which have once been fixed.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the Senator. Nobody has ever said that it should be our policy to make the business pay for itself, for instance, as to letters or newspapers; but the transportation of merchandise is an entirely different proposition. So far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of transporting merchandise to anybody for less than it costs the Government to do it. I should like, however, to cut the rate down to as near the actual cost as possible. I should like to ask the Senator, if the amendment which he has proposed should be adopted, would it be possible for the Postmaster General to change the rates?

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. NORRIS. To my mind, that is the most serious objection to the Senator's amendment. I think there are a great many good things about the amendment; but I should not like to take away the power from the Postmaster General or from the Interstate Commerce Commission or from anybody that can act more rapidly and with more detailed information than we can.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Nebraska and I have different views on that subject. I think that transportation rates ought to be just as stable and subject to as little change as possible. I do not think anybody ought to have the power to change them suddenly.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Stable transportation rates are just as essential to the prosperity of the community and to the life and success of business as is the stability of the currency.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is true; but at the same time I think the Senator from Kansas will agree with me when I say that if rates can be fixed only by legislation which is passed through the Senate and the House of Representatives it would mean that, no matter what the conditions might be, it would take on an average from 5 to 10 years to get the change.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think so. We can change rates whenever we have accurate information.

Mr. President, I do not care to take up any more time of the Senate. I have presented this morning this amendment, which puts the parcel-post business upon the same basis, so far as railway mail pay is concerned, as the express business of the country is placed. It is simply express business. The amendment proposes to pay the same per cent to the railroads that the express companies pay to the railroads for handling the same kind of business; we pay them for what they handle.

The rates I propose are lower than those of Mr. Burleson on the average on packages going west. Just to explain to the Senate, I will say there is a map [exhibiting] showing the different points selected. They were not selected by me, but they were selected by Mr. KINDEL, whom I regard as the best-informed man on the details of rate making in Congress to-day. To send the 90 packages from New York west would cost under the proposed rate $108.30 and under Mr. Burleson's rate they would cost $120.77. From San Francisco east, which is taking it the other way, the same packages to the same cities under the proposed rate would cost $127.90 and under Mr. Burleson's rate they would cost $165.71. The great reduction is in the western part of the country, where the long distances are, and the saving is because we cut the railroads' pay so much. We put the railway mail pay for handling post express exactly upon the same basis that we put it for handling the express matter of the express companies, and we leave the railway mail pay for letters, newspapers, and other classes of mail just where it is now, for the commission to deal with and to readjust as the equities of the case may determine in the future.

Mr. President, I should like a roll call on the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I understand the Senator's amendment, the effect of it would be, after we get beyond the proposed fifth or sixth zone——

Mr. BRISTOW. Beyond the fourth zone.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Beyond the fourth zone, the effect of the amendment would be to cut the rates all the way from 10 to 25 per cent below the rates now fixed by the Postmaster General?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes. I am able to do that——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And to that extent cheapen the transportation by the Parcel Post Service?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; and on the local delivery, on the first zone, the rates are lower, but on the second zone and the third zone the rates are somewhat higher. The rate is the same in the fourth, and the proposition is absolutely safe. The railroads can not be injured by it, because you are paying them upon exactly the same basis as the express companies pay them for the same kind of service.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment. It is hardly necessary to read the rule—the Chair is familiar with its provisions—but the amendment is clearly subject to its prohibitions. This amendment proposes to change existing law, and it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It is clearly in violation of Rule XVI, which in section 1 provides:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Then section 3 of the same rule provides:

> 3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that this amendment does not increase the appropriation contained in the bill; it reduces it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, the amendment does provide that the weight limit for parcel-post matter shall be 50 pounds, and that fractions of a pound over the first pound shall be charged for at the pound rate.

It takes from the Postmaster General the right to regulate these matters.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am very much disappointed in the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi. During the first day's debate when this bill was before the Senate he clearly indicated that, if any proposition was presented here that would reduce the pay of the railroads for handling parcel-post matter, he would be glad to join with me in getting it through. Here is a proposition that cuts the railway pay in two, and yet the Senator is making a point of order against it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator, of course, is disappointed when anybody questions the inerrancy of his own conclusions. I am very sorry that my conduct is not in perfect accord with the Senator's idea of what it should be, but I have the right, as a Senator upon this floor as well as a duty to perform at this time, to differ from the Senator from Kansas. It may be somewhat bold and imprudent on my part to dare to do so, but I do so nevertheless. The Senator has proposed an amendment to this bill which is violative of the rules governing this body. I simply call the Chair's attention to that, and raise the point of order and insist upon the decision by the Chair.

Mr. SWANSON obtained the floor.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Chair please, I will say that I do not question the right of the Senator from Mississippi to differ from me, and I do not question his wisdom. I have been endeavoring here to improve the bill, if I could, by amendments; and the Senator will not deny that in a former discussion he indicated that he would be pleased to join with me in an effort to reduce the railway-mail pay.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should be delighted if I thought the Senator's proposition——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was about to say, Mr. President, that if I thought the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas would improve the bill, would improve the service, and was for the good of the country, most assuredly I should support it; but I do not think it will improve the system or in any way redound to the public interest.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator does not question the fact that it very materially reduces the railway-mail pay for handling express business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, I have been unable to go into that part of it as exhaustively as I should like to do. There is one part of the amendment, however, which I do oppose most heartily, and that is the provision which takes away from the Postmaster General the right to work out and develop the details of this great enterprise.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not been able to get the floor myself, and I should like to make a short statement before I yield further.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield just a moment, that I may ask a question of the Senator from Kansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Kansas, speaking of the reduction of the payment to the railroads, brought up a very interesting phase of his amendment; and if that is the result, so far as that feature of the amendment is concerned, I would be inclined to vote for it, if it could be offered separately. I should like to ask the Senator how much is the reduction, if he has made any estimate as to the extent of the reduction, in railroad pay?

Mr. BRISTOW. That would depend altogether upon the number of pounds that were handled. Of course, you can not make an estimate of that, because you do not know how much they will handle.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But all these estimates have been made upon the basis of the number of pounds that were handled. I have contended all along that we did not know very much about it, but still there has been a basis. The Senator has been making his estimate, and the Post Office Department has been making its estimate, upon the number of pounds that were carried. It would be very interesting to know upon the information that we have, such as it is, how much of a reduction, even approximately in millions of dollars, would result from this amendment in the railway pay. I think $56,000,000 is carried in one paragraph of this bill. I do not know whether that is all that is provided for the railroads, but that is one item that is provided.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have not undertaken to work that out, because it could not be an accurate estimate; but there would be a very great reduction, for if you take the estimated cost, the expenditures here, as I have read, for railway mail pay by the department for the traffic into the fourth zone, we will say, the department says that it costs 63 cents to handle a 20-pound package, and the Senator can readily see that that cost could be cut in two practically. Instead of 63 cents it would be one-half of 58 plus 3, which would be 32 cents.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; but the Senator overlooks the fact that there are a great many other items going into that cost.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I have not overlooked anything. I am giving accurately the reduction in the railway pay so far as I can do so, and have deducted 5 cents for other items, because the Postmaster General deducts 5 cents for other items.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield further. It seems to me that there can be no doubt in the mind of the Chair that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas is general legislation. It affects the entire regulation of the Parcel Post System. It is not specific, but general in its terms, and changes the regulation.

This question is no longer debatable in the Senate. The Senate yesterday, by the decision of the majority, determined that legislation of this kind was out of order, and consequently, it seems to me, after the decision of the Senate yesterday, there should be no doubt in the mind of the Chair that the amendment is obnoxious to Rule XVI. I think it is, and I hope the Chair will so rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present temporary occupant of the chair is ready to rule. The ruling of the Chair is that the amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, is it in order to offer another amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order; amendments are in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to express deep regret, having made this effort to put the parcel-post business upon a substantial, paying basis and obtain a reduction in rates throughout the country that would be material and transform what I think is a deficit in handling the parcel post into what could not help but be a profit, because the expenses would be but a percentage of the money collected, that my amendment should be kept out of the bill and the Senate prevented even from voting on it by points of order made by Senators who have declared that they are anxious to have the railway mail pay reduced.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the comparative figures I have gotten up here in regard to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It would have to go to the Committee on Printing, would it not?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If it is to be printed as a public document, the rule, I think, requires it.

Mr. BRISTOW. The cost will not exceed $500, and that course is not necessary in such cases.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have no objection to the printing of the matter, but I thought it should go to the Committee on Printing first. That is the usual rule, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks that certain maps and documents be printed as a public document for the use of the Senate. Is there objection? There being none, it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was not aware the Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor. I do not desire to interrupt him.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500"; in line 12, to strike out "$2,200" and insert "$2,500"; in line 13, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500"; in line 14, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,200"; and on page 17, line 4, to strike out "$28,501,140" and insert "$28,540,940," so as to read:

Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,500 each; 4 assistant superintendents, at $2,500 each; 15 assistant division superintendents, at $2,500 each; 118 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,200 each; 855 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 1,239 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 836 clerks, grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 3,932 clerks, grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 3,708 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 3,039 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 2,597 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 872 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 3,592 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 2,603 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each; in all, $28,540,940.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to grant advances in pay to the division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, and chief clerks of the Railway Mail Service. They have been serving at the present rates of wages for a great many years. These men are all trained men. They are located for the most part in large cities, where the cost of living has very greatly advanced. They are of a class whose ranks as they become expert are continually being thinned by the railways, particularly, hiring them away from the Government at higher rates of wages than they get from the Government.

The amendment will affect about 150 men altogether, and the total additional amount required is $39,800. I hope the chairman of the committee will see fit to allow this very reasonable increase to a deserving class of men.

That is about all I have to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think this is a perfectly reasonable amendment. It makes a small increase in the salaries of these railway mail employees, who have not had an increase for 15 years, when nearly all the other employees of the department have had. They are competent, able, industrious men, and I think this amendment ought to be allowed. It involves only a small sum—thirty-five or forty thousand dollars.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I was going to address the Senate in favor of the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I had offered a similar amendment myself. I am entirely in sympathy with the position the chairman of the committee has taken, and I hope the amendment will be accepted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on page 9, line 15, I move to amend by striking out the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven." I hope the Senator from Alabama can accept the amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is to promote the efficient, skilled distributors, now in the $1,200 grade, into the "special clerk" grade, at $1,300. The bill, unless amended, will permit of but 1,000 promotions out of the $1,200 grade. As there are 17,000 clerks in this grade, it necessarily follows that but 1 out of 17 can be promoted during the next fiscal year.

It was the intent of Congress when the classification law was passed in 1907 to encourage men to become expert workmen by providing a "special clerk" grade at $1,300, into which those showing particular fitness would be promoted. The department, owing to the large number of supervisory employees that first had to be promoted out of the $1,200 grade, has never been able to grant deserved recognition to thousands of worthy employees who were properly entitled to be designated "special clerks." This has resulted in the $1,200 grade becoming top-heavy. It now contains more than half of the entire clerical force.

The men in the $1,200 grade to-day are in the zenith of their usefulness to the service. The great majority of them are distributors, working nights, Sundays, and holidays, and compelled to study distribution schemes in their own time. They must work at high tension, at top speed, often amid insanitary and unhealthful conditions. Though unseen and unheard of, it is their trained minds and skilled hands that keep the great volume of letter, paper, and parcel mail in motion day and night.

The beneficiaries of these proposed increases have all been in the service at least seven years. They lived and worked through the years prior to the 8-hour day, the Sunday-closing, or the overtime-pay law. Many of them have not been promoted in five years or more, through no fault of their own, but because Congress was wisely legislating in other directions. Now that the entrance salary, the pay for substitutes, and like features affecting the new employees have been bettered, the experienced, valuable men in the service should be given substantial recognition.

At the present time, more than at any previous period, the postal service requires the trained, experienced, skilled man—the man who has devoted years to the mastering of the intricacies of the post-office work. Some effort should be made to keep within the service these valuable employees, who are such an important part of the great, efficient postal army. Some measure of reward should be theirs for past labors and as an incentive for a continuation of faithful, conscientious effort.

These increases to 5,000 additional clerks in the $1,200 grade, based on seniority and efficiency, would cost $500,000; but in the face of the reported surplus of $3,800,000, the first in 30 years, it is sound business policy to show some substantial appreciation to a class of employees who render particularly difficult service—the post-office distributors. The men who helped make this surplus possible should not be denied participation in it.

Unless the bill is amended, unless more than 1,000 promotions are allowed, but few $1,200 distributors can be rewarded during the next fiscal year. The present provision in the bill for the $1,300 grade will scarcely absorb the supervisory increases. The "special clerk," the man of experience and knowledge, will be almost totally excluded unless a more liberal allowance is made in this grade.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, much as I dislike to do so, I am compelled to make the point of order against this amendment on the ground that the amount has not been estimated by the department; it has not been recommended by the committee; and, besides, Mr. President, it seems to me that the bill makes ample provision for these clerks.

We provide in this bill for promotions to 2,437 clerks in the Post Office Department. There are 2,000 clerks in the grade we are promoting from $1,200 to $1,300, $100 each. This proposition is to promote 7,000 clerks in this grade. It seems to me that in authorizing these promotions we are going as fast as the good of the service would justify, and I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only desire to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama and the Chair to the fact that there is no increase in an appropriation. That would be a matter to be considered at some other time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It certainly involves an appropriation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Involving an appropriation and making an appropriation are two very different things. It is in order if the section itself is in order, because it simply changes the word "two" to the word "seven." It does not change in any way whatever the provisions contained in the bill, so far as the organization is concerned; it simply increases the number of possible employees in a certain class. If 2,000 are in order, 7,000 are in order. I can not see how the Senator can make a distinction, so far as the point of order is concerned.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I simply desire to say that in the end the proposed amendment will involve an appropriation of $700,000. It seems to the committee that the provision already made in this bill for the promotion of clerks ought to be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the point of order, the Chair desires to read part of Rule XVI, dealing with amendments to appropriation bills:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

It appears that the amendment does not fall within any of those classes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why, Mr. President, it increases the appropriation just half a million dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not meet the requirements of this rule, and the Chair is bound to hold that it is not in order.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, at the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert:

That seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants shall hereafter be embraced in and carried as fourth-class matter and for the same rates of postage.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my reason for offering this amendment is that under the act approved August 24, 1912, the articles named in the amendment were made mailable at second-class rates, and I think they have been so under the orders of the Post Office Department. This amendment proposes that seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants shall have the privileges of the mail as fourth-class matter.

I can see no reason why this should not be done. It is a strange anomaly to say that under the laws of the United States corn which is meant as feed for horses shall go as fourth-class mail, and when it is intended as seed it shall be charged at the rate of second-class mail.

I therefore urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

The pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with or without pay and of auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices where city delivery is already established or may hereafter be established shall be 40 cents per hour.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, under the present law the pay of substitutes in such cases is 30 cents an hour if the regular man is receiving his pay. It is 40 cents an hour if the regular man is not receiving pay. These substitutes are frequently retained on the rolls as substitutes for a considerable number of years.

I have before me the length of service of substitutes at the Boston post office. Thirty-three of them have been substitutes for eight years, 56 for seven years, 38 for six years, 27 for five years, 2 for four years, 60 for three years, 80 for two years, and 229 for a year or something less than a year.

Those men have passed civil-service examinations for appointment in the service, but have not been appointed because there are no vacancies for them. They are continuing to get their living through their civil employment, but they are subject to the call of the postmaster at any time. Frequently that call means that they get only three or four hours' work a day, although they may have to remain at the post office subject to call for 12 hours a day; so that, as far as their civil employment is concerned, they lose their day's pay, and they may not get more than half a day's pay from the Postal Service. Even if they get the whole day's pay, it is only 30 cents an hour, or $2.40, which is less than is being paid the laborers in the post-office service under present conditions.

I think these are ample arguments why this pay should be at least 40 cents an hour, and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, not as a committee amendment but at the suggestion of the Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 11, strike out "$1,750,000" and insert "$2,000,000," so that if amended it will read:

For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, $2,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 17, strike out "$325,000," and in lieu insert "$350,000," so that if amended it will read:

For miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second class, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will now be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 10, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,300,000," so that if amended it will read:

For horse-hire allowance, the hiring of drivers, and the rental of vehicles, $2,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 22, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,225,000," so that it will read:

For fees to special-delivery messengers, $2,225,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I make an inquiry of the Senator? Have these increases in the appropriation bill been recommended by the department?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have. These were the original estimates of the department. They were reduced in the House and the department is very urgent that this amount should be restored. I ask the Secretary to read the letter I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fees for special-delivery messengers (p. 13, line 20).

The amount should be increased from $2,000,000 to $2,225,000, as estimated by the department. Under existing law postmasters are authorized to pay messengers 8 cents for the immediate delivery of each letter or package bearing a special-delivery stamp or ordinary stamps to the value of 10 cents which have been attached to secure such delivery. The cost of this service during the fiscal year 1913 was $1,664,925, which was 13.31 per cent greater than for the preceding year. The public is using this service to a greater extent than formerly to secure immediate delivery of parcel-post matter, and it is believed the increased cost for the current fiscal year will approximate 15 per cent, while for the next fiscal year the ratio of increase will probably be about the same, if not larger. It is therefore believed that the amount provided should be $2,225,000, as estimated by the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have one more amendment that I desire to offer. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 8, insert as a separate paragraph:

For two delegates to the International Postal Union at Madrid, fiscal year 1915, to be appointed by the Postmaster General, from the Post Office Department, $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have here correspondence from the department. Will the Senator object to having it read, if he desires to discuss the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I will wait until the correspondence has been read. Then I desire to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letters which have been sent to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, February 20, 1914.

Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I wish to call your attention particularly to the ommission from the bill (H. R. 11338) reported to the Senate February 18, 1914, of the provision for two delegates to the International Postal Union, at Madrid, during the fiscal year 1915, to be appointed by the Postmaster General from the Post Office Department.

This provision has been carried in the appropriation bill for the year 1914, but no action was taken under it because the convention was postponed until September 10, 1914, which is during the fiscal year of 1915. The matter was presented to the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the provision renewed and included in the bill for 1915, but it went out on a point of order with other matters included in the bill. By letter of January 28, 1914, it was brought to your attention by the Postmaster General. I am inclosing a copy of that letter. I also inclose a copy of letters from the Embassy of Spain, this city, addressed to the honorable Secretary of State, and one from the Counselor of the State Department to the honorable Postmaster General, to which I invite your attention.

The provision is necessary in order to specifically authorize the participation of the United States postal administration in the universal convention and our agreement to the terms of such convention which will be entered into at that meeting. Will you kindly see that the following provision is inserted in the bill, and I suggest that it be placed after line 8, on page 21, namely:

"For two delegates to the International Postal Union at Madrid, fiscal year 1915, to be appointed by the Postmaster General from the Post Office Department, $5,000."

Sincerely, yours,
JOSEPH STEWART,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

JANUARY 28, 1914.

Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Upon examination of the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, etc., as it passed the House, it is noted that the bill omits the recommendation for the appropriation of $5,000 to cover the expenses of two delegates to the International Postal Union, at Madrid.

The explanation covering this item appears on pages 174, 175 of the hearings before the House committee. The existing law provides:

"For two delegates to the International Postal Union, at Madrid, 1913–14, to be appointed by the Postmaster General, from the Post Office Department, $5,000."

The convention has been postponed, and will not occur until September, 1914, in the fiscal year 1915, and it is very desirable that the United States be represented. As the present appropriation is not available for that year, it will be necessary to renew it. The following provision is submitted:

"For two delegates to the International Postal Union, at Madrid, 1915, to be appointed by the Postmaster General, from the Post Office Department, $5,000."

Very truly, yours,
A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 11, 1914.

The honorable the POSTMASTER GENERAL.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose, for your consideration and for suggestion as to reply to be made thereto, a copy of a note from the Spanish ambassador, conveying an invitation from the Royal Spanish Government to the Government of the United States to be represented at the seventh congress of the Universal Postal Union, which is to be held at Madrid on September 10 of the present year.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
J. B. MOORE, Counselor,
(For the Secretary of State).

(Inclosure: From Spanish ambassador, Feb. 5, 1914.)

[Translation.]

EMBASSY OF SPAIN,
Washington, February 5, 1914.

To the Hon. WILLIAM J. BRYAN,
Secretary of State of the United States, etc.

MR. SECRETARY: By order of His Majesty's Government, I have the honor to inform Your Excellency that as the Seventh Congress of the Universal Postal Union is to be held at Madrid on September 10 of this year, and as word has been received from the international bureau of Berne that some countries are waiting for an invitation to designate their delegates before appointing their representatives, I have received instructions to extend to the Government of the United States His Majesty's Government's cordial invitation to take part in the aforesaid Congress and to designate the delegates that will represent it.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Excellency the assurances of my highest consideration.

JUAN RIANO.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield in just a minute, if the Senator will permit me to proceed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am utterly opposed to appropriating money to send delegates from this country to foreign countries or to any part of our country to attend conventions. I have called this matter to the attention of the Senate a good many times. I do not believe that any good has ever come from any such international convention, and in many, many cases it has been nothing but a junketing trip pure and simple at the expense of the Government of the United States.

I remember when the last appropriation bill which carried an item of this kind, to pay for delegates to a convention in a foreign country, was up for consideration, it was for delegates in which it was distinctly understood that the delegates appointed were to pay their own expenses, that the Government of the United States would not be put to one cent of expense; and yet, after the trip had been made, the delegates asked for an appropriation to cover their expenses. I gave notice to the Senate at that time that hereafter I would object to any appropriation made by Congress to send delegates to any convention anywhere, whether it was in this country or in a foreign country.

Mr. President, I feel constrained at this time to make a point of order against the amendment under Rule XVI.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield, gladly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I understand this postal convention is to be held, and its object is very extensive in its scope. All the foreign countries have been invited to send delegates to the convention to consider questions with reference to the conduct of postal matters. I presume the question of parcel post perhaps will be very extensively considered in this convention. The United States has been invited formally, through the Secretary of State, to send delegates. That invitation has been accepted; and it seems to me, it being a small appropriation and being so important as it might be in its results, the Senator from Utah should not make a point of order at this moment, but let the amendment be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. The happy way in which the Senator from Alabama pleads almost convinces me that I am wrong; but, Mr. President, when this invitation was extended and authorized by Congress I have no doubt but that it specifically stated that there should be no expense whatever on the part of the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will state that the bill last year carried this identical appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. For some reason, I do not know what, the convention was postponed, and the invitation was renewed this year for the convention to be held some time in September. It seems to me that the invitation having come from one of the great Governments of the world and having been formally accepted by the Secretary of State, for this time, it seems to me, the Senate should adopt the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I said the last time that that was the only item of the kind I would allow to pass through this body, if I could prevent it. I want to say also to the Senator that the $5.000 here proposed to be appropriated is not all that is involved in it. I have no doubt but that if we make this appropriation there will be a deficiency asked for in one of the appropriation bills, as has been done in almost every case where delegates have been sent to conventions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I promise the Senator from Utah that if that should prove to be the case, I will join him very heartily in resisting any such appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. In order to make my word good to the Senate, because I warned the Senate I was going to do it, I must make a point of order against this item under Rule XVI, that "no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator read the exceptions?

Mr. SMOOT. I will read the exception, if the Chair desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator pleases.

Mr. SMOOT (reading)—

Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "Or." The present occupant of the chair is not familiar with this point, and the Senator will continue reading.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well—

Or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Utah permit the Chair to ask whether or not this has been proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand that there has been an estimate. I understand that there is a recommendation from the Postmaster General in the form of a letter calling attention to the question, stating that it is very desirable that this item be included in the appropriation bill as it was in the last appropriation. This same item went out on a point of order in the House.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any question but that the point of order will lie against the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will say that this is not a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not a committee amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not a committee amendment. It has not been authorized by the committee. I simply offer it as an individual Member of the Senate at the request of the Post Office Department, just as every other Senator offers an amendment to a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama hold that it is proposed in pursuance of the estimate of the head of some one of the departments?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, an estimate was made of the amount required.

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate that is spoken of in the rule is the estimate that was sent in by the Postmaster General under the law before the 1st day of December last, and in that estimate the amount of $5,000 for these delegates was not mentioned.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There can be no doubt about the fact. I think that the $5,000 was estimated. It was recommended by the Post Office Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it was recommended by a letter, but that is not what the rule says. The rule says under an estimate of the department, and the estimate of the departments as made by law. The departments must send their estimates to Congress for all the items that are covered under this rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate but a moment. I rise for the purpose only of correcting the RECORD. Yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] read an editorial from some paper in which that paper saw fit to criticize certain members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for proposing a certain amendment to the bill under consideration. In discussing the matter the Senator from Massachusetts said:

> I do not know for what reason they have changed their position, if that be true, because I was not present when the vote was taken in the committee.

Whereupon I arose and asked this question:

> Will the Senator repeat the names of Senators who are mentioned in the editorial? I did not hear him distinctly.

The Senator replied:

> The Senator from Mississippi was mentioned in the editorial as having voted for the amendment in the committee.

To which I replied:

> I am accustomed to being misrepresented by newspapers.

That remark was not caught by the reporter. So the RECORD appears as though I pleaded guilty to the implied charge that I had voted for this amendment in the committee and then came upon the floor of the Senate and opposed it.

Mr. President, I only care to maintain that consistency which is the consistency of doing what I believe to be my duty. If on to-morrow I should discover that the views I entertain to-day on any question were not correct, I should not hesitate to change. I want to be consistently honest and candid, true to myself and faithful to my convictions.

But it so happens, Mr. President, that I was not in the committee when this amendment was proposed. If I had been present, I should have opposed it there as I have opposed it here. It is generally known to those with whom I am intimately associated that I have been all the time in favor of enlarging the functions of the parcel post even to the extent of having it take the place of the express companies in all matters of transportation, and for that reason, as I stated in the beginning, I desire that my position be known. The express company is a kind of economic parasite, which has preyed upon the people, increased the cost of living, added to the profits of the great public-service corporations without giving the people adequate compensation in return. If the post office shall do the work of the express companies for the actual cost of transporting goods, it will be an immense saving to the masses. But I did not arise to discuss the merits of the measure, but rather for the purpose of keeping the record straight. It is enough to suffer for the wrongs we do, and I submit that we should not be held responsible for the errors and mistakes which exist alone in the minds or imagination of the newspaper reporter.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be inserted at the close of line 22, page 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be read.

> And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in carrying packages of more than 50 pounds in weight unless the rates therefor shall be just, fair, and reasonable, shall be the cost of the service as nearly as can be ascertained, and shall not unjustly discriminate either between persons or communities, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall specifically so find before it approves the same.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether there will be opposition to this amendment. It is so eminently fair and is so entirely in accord with the principles which we have announced in other legislation of a similar character that I hope it will be adopted by common consent. If, however, there is to be opposition to it, I desire to address the Senate with regard to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand under the present law there can be no change either in rates, weights, or zones without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does that provision of the present law, substantially at least, embrace the provision of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. I have remarked many times as we have gone through this subject that the difficulty is that the Interstate Commerce Commission has no rule to guide it in approving or disapproving these rates. It has so declared in its report. It has asked to be relieved of the duty which the law imposes upon it, largely, I suppose, or partly at least, because Congress has not provided for it any guide for the performance of this additional work.

I am not opposed to the increase in what is termed here the scope of the parcel-post law. I am quite willing to extend it to all freight, to all weights, but we have a bounden duty to perform when we enlarge the function of the Government in that way. We must see that it is enlarged so that justice will be done to all the people who are to be affected by it. I am simply putting upon both the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission the rule which is recognized everywhere, I think, in the distribution of freight, with one exception, namely, that the United States shall move freight at the cost of service without any remuneration for any capital that may be employed in the business. I hope the amendment will not be opposed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It occurs to me that under the law as it is now written the Interstate Commerce Commission has the same power and the same duty imposed upon it that is proposed to be imposed upon it by this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The amendment of the Senator states that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall "specifically so find before it shall approve the same." The Interstate Commerce Commission has to specifically so find that the thing the Postmaster General proposes to do is proper and right before the order of the Postmaster General is put into operation.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the proper thing to do under the present law?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is first to get the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but when the Interstate Commerce Commission comes to approve or disapprove the rate suggested by the Postmaster General it has no rule of law to guide it with regard to that duty. It is not told by the law that the rates must be fair and just and reasonable. It is not told that they must represent the cost of the service. It is not told that they must not be unjustly discriminatory. Now, these are the rules that we have given to the Interstate Commerce Commission for fixing rates that are to be observed by common carriers, and why should they not observe the same rules in fixing freight rates for the United States?

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of course it is just as incumbent under the present law upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to go into a thorough investigation of the question. That is the reason why the law put that responsibility upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was to guide, to assist the Postmaster General in doing this. You might just as well say that a court shall administer the law justly, that an officer shall execute the law justly and properly. It is presumed when this power is given the Interstate Commerce Commission that it will go into the subject exhaustively and do the right thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. The Senator from Mississippi fails entirely to understand my position. I am not trying to increase the sense of duty on the part of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but I am trying to give that commission a rule or a guide which it is to apply to the facts of the particular case.

I ask the Senator from Mississippi, suppose we had said in organizing the Interstate Commerce Commission, "Proceed and fix the rate of common carriers as you think best or as you think proper," does the Senator from Mississippi think that a law of that kind would have been effective or even constitutional? Plainly not. In order to make the law constitutional, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that we must have given, as we did give to the Interstate Commerce Commission, a rule to be applied. The Senator from Mississippi says that there is a law of that kind. I say there is no law of that kind applying to rates of freight carried by the Government through the parcel post.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator maintain that under the law as it exists it is not the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate these matters thoroughly, to ascertain whether or not the Postmaster General is wisely using the discretion vested in him?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt of that. It is unquestionably the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate thoroughly, although it says to you that it did not and could not do so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Interstate Commerce Commission said this——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. But when the Senator from Mississippi goes further and says that it was the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain whether the Postmaster General had acted wisely, he confesses the whole case that I am trying to make in this amendment. I maintain that we have no authority to say to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "Investigate the matter and ascertain whether the Postmaster General has acted wisely." That is beyond our authority and beyond the authority of any legislative body in the world acting under such a Constitution as ours.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I probably should have used the words "acted within the authority" or "exercised prudently the authority vested."

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but the trouble is that we have imposed no rule upon the Postmaster General; we have not given him any guide for the performance of this very delicate and difficult duty. I am not one who criticizes the Postmaster General; I do not know whether the rates he has already fixed are right or wrong; but I know that he acted according to his judgment, and I have no doubt it was a conscientious and intelligent judgment.

There are, however, certain rules which ought to be applied to the freight business when the United States enters into it that we should impose on whoever investigates and attempts to issue a rate sheet. That is all I propose to do here. Is the Senator from Mississippi opposed to these rates as being——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Not in the least. I think that duty is imposed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission now under the present law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, my amendment will do no harm.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But it occurs to me that this amendment is an effort in another form to restrict and to limit the power and circumscribe the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President. Now, I am quite willing to discuss it concretely. This is an effort to prevent the mail-order houses being so favored in freight rates that they will be able to drive the country merchant out of business. That is one of the reasons I have offered the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That objection was urged by the country merchants when the parcel post was first suggested.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, it is not material whether it was urged or not. It may have been urged without avail and without basis against the original parcel-post law. It may be that it can be urged justly against the rates that have been fixed by the Postmaster General and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission; but when we increase above 50 pounds the weight of packages that shall be carried by the United States the rates may be so adjusted that the country merchant will find it impossible to continue profitably his business. Therefore, assuming that we draw an arbitrary line along the 50-pound package, and say that above that is freight and below that is express or parcel post, I want that field above 50 pounds at least to be protected by the fundamental principles which we all recognize in the transportation of freight.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say—finishing what I was about to say—that this same objection was urged to the parcel post by the friends of the small country merchant when the matter was first proposed. It has worked very differently from what its opponents thought it would. As a matter of fact, it has been a great help to the country merchant; but I insist, Mr. President, that we are legislating for the people, and not for any special class; and when the Senator from Iowa speaks of the abuse of the parcel post by the great mail-order houses, I will say to him that you can not benefit the great mail-order houses in Chicago or in any other city of this Republic without at the same time helping the man who sends the order to the house.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think we can.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And my observation has been—and that is an evidence that I am correct in my conclusion—that no measure that I have any knowledge of was ever passed by this Congress that had so universally the approval of the American people as has the parcel post. That time, opportunity, and experience will vindicate the wisdom of the originators of the system I have no doubt.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is usually logical; he is usually—I withdraw that—he is always fair; his mind ordinarily operates with great precision; but he must instantly see that what he has just said has no application to the amendment which I am proposing. When the parcel-post law was first brought into Congress I held the same views then that I now hold, that there could be a form of parcel post that would be most injurious to the country mechant, without in any wise benefiting any other class of people, save the distributors in large centers of population. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads took that into account, and they brought into the Senate a plan that did not injure the country merchant, that did do justice to all the people, and there was no such opposition to it made in the Senate. Everybody recognized that the parcel post as established by Congress would not have the effect of injuring the country merchant, and, therefore, the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi that because people thought that some possible law might be injurious and because they had been disagreeably disappointed in that respect, therefore the amendment that I have proposed is simply invoking the same old objection, is entirely illogical.

There can be a parcel post that will help the country merchant and help all the people; but the Government of the United States can enter the freight business in a way that will not benefit the people of the United States and that will be disastrous and destructive of business as it is now established.

What do I propose to do? I propose that whenever the Postmaster General increases above 50 pounds the weight of the package to be transported, and we will all agree that then, at least, the Government is going into the freight business when it does that, and I am not objecting to that—whenever the weight is increased above 50 pounds, then the rates shall be fair and just and reasonable. I do not want the Government of the United States to charge a rate on freight that is applicable or reasonable on a book or on a letter. Do you not believe that the Government ought to transport freight, when it enters that business, for very much less than it transports the ordinary articles of the mail? The plan that we have already adopted of paying the railroad companies so much per pound for all the matter carried as mail matter will have to be abandoned. The railway companies have no right to charge the United States for carrying its freight any more than they charge the individual for carrying his freight. The express companies are bound to disappear; the express companies ought to disappear; they have always been an excrescence upon the body of the freight-carrying instrumentality; there never was a reason for their existence, and there is no reason for their existence now. The railroads must carry the freight. No matter what the size of the package may be, no matter what the weight of the package may be, as it is now the Government must employ the railroad companies to do the actual carrying.

What will the railroad companies charge the United States for the freight business? The railroad companies will charge the United States a rate that will be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, a rate based upon certain well-recognized principles—the cost of the service, the value of the service to the public, the reasonable reward upon the capital or value of the property through which the service is rendered. That will be the charge made to the Government of the United States for carrying the freight.

Now, let us see. Here is one man who employs, or is in such situation that he can employ, the railroads, and he has his freight carried by the railroads. He distributes it from his country store to the surrounding community. Here is another man who is so situated that he can have his freight carried through the parcel post by the Government, but it is carried over the same railroad; it is carried to the same point, and the only difference is the manner of its distribution. The man who contends that there ought not to be a fair and a just relation between the rate of the railroad company and the rate of the Government for doing the same business is an enemy to the parcel post and he is an enemy to the people of this country, although unconsciously so. The man who believes that we can carry on a freight business by the Government and allow the railroads at the same time to carry on the freight business, meeting constantly in competition, without a fair and proper relation between these rates, is simply a disturber of the commercial tranquillity of the Nation. I can not understand—it is utterly impossible for me to understand—how anyone can refuse to put upon the freight business done by the United States practically the same rules, as nearly as may be, as are imposed upon the freight business done by a common carrier. I shall never cast my vote for an adjustment that makes it possible for the Government of the United States, or for one officer of the Government of the United States to destroy a structure that has been built up with infinite sacrifice and with, I was about to say, almost infinite intelligence; that has been the evolution of a hundred years of struggle.

I can imagine no greater disaster for the United States than such an adjustment of our freight rates that it would destroy the country town, with all the advantages that it confers upon the surrounding community, and I can easily perceive an adjustment that will have such effect. Therefore, we should provide this legislation at the very threshold at the very moment that we begin this venture. Mark you, I am not against the venture. As I said the other day, I believe the time will come when the Government of the United States will carry all the freight of the country; it may not own the railroads; it may not even operate the railroads; but the railroads in that case will simply be the instrumentality for the performance of this additional function on the part of organized society. We are entering that field at this moment. I think we have entered it when we increase the weight of the package to 50 pounds, but very plainly we have entered it when the weight of the package goes beyond 50 pounds. That being true, will any Senator be able to give a good reason why the rate established for that freight should not be fair and just and reasonable? Will any Senator give any good reason for voting against the proposition that the rate shall represent the cost of the service?

I know that we are carrying second-class mail matter at much less than the cost of the service, and the only justification, so far as I have ever heard, for doing that is that we are promoting education; that we are diffusing intelligence among the people through the magazines, the books, and the newspapers; but those reasons do not apply to fourth-class matter, and is there a Senator here who is not willing to say that the rates shall represent the cost of the service? Is there a Senator here who is not willing to say that the rates shall not unjustly discriminate either between persons or communities? If there be such a Senator, he but advises the country that he is legislating for a class, and not for all the people.

The spirit of the interstate-commerce law is to prevent unjust discrimination; and yet apparently we stand here willing to publish to the world that, while we will not permit the railroads of the country, the common carriers of the country, unjustly to discriminate as between persons or communities, we are quite willing that an officer of the Government, who is intrusted in this instance with the privileges and powers of a common carrier, may unjustly discriminate between persons and communities.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. I am very much interested in the Senator's amendment, and, as I understand its provisions, I can see no objection to it. I, however, want to call the Senator's attention to this situation: It is a disputed question as to whether too much money is charged for the carriage of first and second class mail matter. As the Senator knows, the Post Office Department, in order to relieve itself of the loss on account of the carriage of second-class mail matter, has inaugurated what is known as the "blue-tag" system, by which, at the discretion of the Postmaster General, certain second-class mail matter is sent by fast freight. Perhaps it is very doubtful whether the railroads receive more than a reasonable compensation for the carriage of first-class mail matter, but the Senator can easily see that if fourth-class mail matter is carried in the expensive cars required for letters, necessarily a higher rate would have to be paid, because I have heard it stated—and I have no doubt it is true—that a railway post-office car as now equipped and built has in it the most valuable space of any space devoted to any kind of business. It is stated that the space in which these mail packages are handled by experts in the knowledge of railway stations, and so forth, is the most valuable space the Government deals with.

Of course, it is not for the best interests of the service that an expert in the handling of letters should have his attention and his strength taken from that work and devoted to handling large packages of freight; so I ask the Senator this question: If his amendment is broad enough to leave to the department the opportunity to equip a car which would not be so expensive to the Government in such a way that perhaps the Post Office Department could carry fourth-class mail matter in a car equipped in a manner similar to that in which an express car for the carriage of express matter is equipped?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment which I propose does not interfere with or restrict in any manner the authority of the Postmaster General in the respect just mentioned by the Senator from Florida. It relates only to the rate of freight on packages above 50 pounds. May I say to the Senator, so that he can get my view of it, that he is quite right with regard to the impossibility of the Government dealing with freight as it has heretofore dealt with mail matter. Possibly it is practicable to deal with small packages in that way; but, now that we are going into the larger freight business, I assume that the railroads will do that freight business precisely as they have always done freight business, only they will do it for the Government of the United States instead of for individuals; and packages above 50 pounds will be carried on freight cars and at freight-train speed. One can not conceive of a very large part of our freight business being done in the mail cars.

Mr. BRYAN. That is the way the fourth-class mail matter is being carried now, and it is an anomalous condition.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely, but we are just on the threshold; we are just moving in freight territory now.

Mr. BRYAN. As I understand, Congress has granted the Postmaster General permission to withdraw a part of the second-class mail matter and send it by freight; and without some corresponding provision the department will be bound to carry the fourth-class mail matter in the most expensive cars and give it the same protection and equipment that is provided for letters, the highest class of mail matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be a defect in the present postal law, but it is not at all interfered with by the amendment which I have offered. If there is that requirement, it must speedily be removed, for I assume everybody knows that when we come to move a ton of railroad iron we are not going to move it in a mail car, or when we come to move a ton of potatoes we will not move them in mail pouches. We will move them just as such freight has from time immemorial been moved.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa for his construction of the amendment which he has offered. As I read it it would limit the rate on packages weighing more than 50 pounds to the cost of the service. Is that the intention of the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. As nearly as can be ascertained, that is the intention.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That there shall be no profit?

Mr. CUMMINS. No profit. I do not believe the Government ought to do business in order to make a profit. It is a public agent, and it ought to do business certainly at not more than cost.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand it might be necessary to make a profit upon some packages and some rates in order to make the entire service pay the cost of the service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly; and my amendment refers to the entire service. It does not refer to a particular package.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But it refers, does it not, only to packages above 50 pounds?

Mr. CUMMINS. Above 50 pounds.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So that that would be a class by itself?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; a class by itself. I have not attempted to affect the existing situation. In a measure, the same rates ought to be applied; but that has been done, and I feel disposed to regard the packages below 50 pounds as fairly falling within one class, namely, the express package or parcel post proper, and packages above 50 pounds as fairly falling in the class which we know as freight. Therefore, my amendment only applies to that class.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What objection would the Senator have to considering the entire Postal Service, or at least the entire Parcel Post Service, as one class, for the purpose of considering its expenses and profits?

Mr. CUMMINS. Because I think, Mr. President, the range of value and the range of cost of service are too great.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Senator one other question, if he will permit me: Would there not be a greater probability of making a success of the system as a whole, and of that portion of it which carries parcels more than 50 pounds in weight, if the department were allowed in estimating its expenses and its profits to deal with it as one system rather than taking the large packages alone, and requiring that on them the rate should be sufficient to pay the cost of the service?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is very difficult, Mr. President, to answer the question just propounded by the Senator from Washington. I would have no great objection to that; and yet there is an element of injustice in it. The cost of the service would depend largely upon the character of the article, the care that must be bestowed upon it, and the labor that must be expended upon it, in order to transport it from place to place. If I deliver to an express company a diamond ring, worth a thousand dollars, for transportation from one point to another, in justice I ought to pay more for that transportation than though I were to deliver to the express company a peck of coal for transportation, first, because of the risk that is involved in it, there being a liability in the case of a common carrier; and, second, because of the care that one must bestow upon the article of higher value. We can not divide those things with mathematical nicety; but we have to draw rather broad lines of classification. I think there can be a just classification in the parcel-post matter or in the business that is now being attempted to be carried on by the United States that will divide with some degree of fairness these articles, and this amendment divides them at 50 pounds, not because 50 pounds may be the best point, but because we have reached that point now, and I have no desire to require a review or a reconsideration of the rates already established, but I can not understand why the railroad companies shall not be required to carry goods for the United States at the same rates at which they carry goods for a merchant. Why should the railroads charge more, or less?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In many instances they ought to charge less, because the rates they charge the merchant are excessive.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I am reposing all that authority in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that is the very thing I want the Interstate Commerce Commission to do. When the commission comes to approve the rates proposed by the Postmaster General, I want it to compare those rates with the rates that are charged by the railroad companies; and if the rates charged by the railroad companies are too high, I want the commission to reduce them, so that the business that is being done by the Government and the business that is being done by the common carriers will bear a proper relation to each other. We shall never arrive at any successful or satisfactory conclusion until these rates do compare properly with each other.

I assume that the very moment the present contracts with the common carriers expire there will be no more contracts of that kind entered into; that distance will come in as an element in the charge to the Government as well as to the individual; that values will come in as an element in the charge to the Government as well as in the charge to the individual; and that the value of the service to the public will enter into the problem just as it now enters into the making of rates for common carriers.

To illustrate, take a carload of coal and a carload of tea weighing the same amount. It costs the railroad company just as much to transport a carload of coal 500 miles as it costs it to transport a carload of tea 500 miles, with one very negligible difference, namely, the added risk growing out of the value of the article if loss or damage should occur to it. That, however, is almost a negligible quantity. The statistics gathered by the Interstate Commerce Commission show that very little compensation is required for this added risk.

Why is a greater sum charged by the railroad companies for carrying tea or silk than for carrying coal or iron? Simply because the value of the service is greater. Simply because to attach a fair rate to the low-priced commodity in comparison with the high-priced commodity, tested solely by the cost of the service, would put the low-priced commodity beyond the reach of man to use or to consume. Therefore these rates are adjusted by the railroad companies, and are made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, having all these things in mind. I want the same rules to apply to the Government of the United States; and if you want to protect our people, they will be made to apply to the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I would agree with the Senator from Iowa if we could succeed within a reasonable time, either through the Interstate Commerce Commission, or through any other tribunal, or through any law that it might be possible to enact, in securing reasonable rates from the railroads to private shippers. I think the Senator will agree with me, however, that notwithstanding the fact that the rates are supposed to be made upon a reasonable basis, as a matter of fact they are not reasonable; they are discriminatory.

Of course there ought to be some difference, as the Senator says, between the freight upon a carload of coal and the freight upon a carload of tea, for instance. I suppose fundamentally it is based upon the difference in the value of the carload, and that the rule which the railroads apply universally, to a greater or less extent, of levying upon the traffic what it will stand, enters into it.

For instance, a railroad in Alaska which carries ore principally, and hardly anything but ore, charges one rate for low-grade ore and another rate for high-grade ore. Both are carried in the same kind of cars. The identical kind of service is rendered.

Mr. CUMMINS. The risk is a little greater; that is all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The responsibility is greater. The contingencies of loss are the same in both cases.

If we should compel the Government or the people who receive service from the Government to accept the conditions that now exist as between the shippers and the railroads, we should be compelling them to submit to conditions which seem practically intolerable, and which I am inclined to think are back of the tremendous force of public opinion which is crowding forward the development and the extension of the Parcel Post System. That is really the motive which gives power and influence to this movement. It is seeking a new avenue which is offered to escape from the extortions and the discriminations which now exist in the transportation rates of the country.

While it is needless to cite instances, if the Senator will permit me just one moment further, speaking of the cost of the service, from the town of Puyallup in the State of Washington great quantities of berries are shipped to St. Paul and to Chicago. The rate was $2.50 per hundredweight. They were shipped by express in carload lots. The express companies increased the rate to $3. The railroad gets $1.50 of that and the express company gets $1.50 of the charge on 100 pounds. The railroad furnishes the car; the railroad furnishes the motive power and hauls the car. The express company has one man in the town of Puyallup, who accepts these shipments and bills them out, and the cost to the express company in that business is one-tenth of 1 per cent of what it receives. Why not allow the Government to go, in its rates, under such a condition as that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Surely. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has made a most forcible and persuasive argument for my amendment. I think he has intended it to be against my amendment, although I am not sure of that. Does not the Senator from Washington see, however, that I am trying by this amendment to avoid the creation of just such discrimination in the parcel post, extended into the freight business, as has already grown up in the railway service?

I know that there are not a few, but a great many, instances of these discriminations—discriminations largely in favor of or against communities. There are now very few discriminations so far as individuals are concerned. It is to be assumed that the Interstate Commerce Commission will break them down and remove them as rapidly as it can reach them, but it has a vast work to perform. It will require years and years before it has reviewed the entire rate structure of the country; and these discriminations and injustices will not be removed until practically the entire structure has been reviewed in one form or another by the commission.

I beg the Senator from Washington to help us to see that these same discriminations do not grow up in the freight service that is about to be entered upon by the Government. Let us see that from the very beginning the rates are fair and just, and not discriminatory, and we will have none of the evils, so far as the Government is concerned, against which we have been contending for years in rates made by the railway companies.

The rule I have attempted to put upon these rates is the rule of common sense; it is the rule of equity as between the Government and the people whom it is trying to serve, and it is the rule of justice as between the people of the country whom it affects.

I very earnestly hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the foot of page 15, after the numerals, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in carrying packages of more than 50 pounds in weight unless the rates therefor shall be just, fair, and reasonable, shall be the cost of the service as nearly as can be ascertained, and shall not unjustly discriminate either between persons or communities, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall specifically so find before it approves the same.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, before voting on the amendment I desire to state that the only objection I have to it is the limitation that there shall not be charged upon this class of business rates exceeding the cost of the service. So far as the remainder of it is concerned, I think it is simply a restatement of existing law. The Interstate Commerce Commission and the Postmaster General are now required by law, express or implied, to fix reasonable rates and to avoid discrimination; and before any of these rates go into effect they have to be allowed by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, just as is provided in this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want it to be perfectly clear that I dispute the proposition that existing law requires the Postmaster General or the Interstate Commerce Commission to find either of the elements I have named in my amendment. There is nothing in the existing law that requires the Postmaster General to make the rates fair and just and reasonable; nothing that requires him to ascertain the cost of the service; nothing that requires him to ascertain whether or not the rates discriminate; nor is there any law obligatory upon the Interstate Commerce Commission which requires that commission to enter into an investigation concerning any one of these several factors. I agree that possibly a man's common sense, by which we are guided sometimes, would require these things, but there is no law that requires them.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it seems to me this amendment presents a proposition whereby we are to turn over to the Interstate Commerce Commission the control of half the Parcel Post System and leave the other half to the Postmaster General. I would rather turn it over entirely to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and say that they shall specifically define every rate, and take it out of the hands of the Postmaster General. It seems to me the amendment ought to be defeated from that standpoint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to determine by the sound.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us have a division, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. A division will disclose the absence of a quorum, anyhow.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the number of Senators present is very small, and I ask the Senator from Alabama if he will not lay the bill aside in order that we may have an executive session. We ought to have an executive session to-day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true; but we ought to pass this appropriation bill, too. I do not want to inconvenience the Senator, but I want to say to him that there are certain items in this bill that I regard as extremely important, and if the bill should not be passed and approved by the President by the 4th of March, those provisions of the bill, of course, will have no effect.

That is the situation. Of course, if the Senator from Iowa is going to make a point of no quorum, it being evident that perhaps there is no quorum here, I shall simply have to submit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does not the Senator from Alabama think the discipline upon the other side is sufficient to defeat my amendment anyhow? [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to be an obstructionist. I do not want to prevent reaching a conclusion upon this bill by insisting upon a roll call, if in that way the absence of a quorum will be developed and therefore a postponement of the bill will result.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That could only result in the postponement of the consideration of the bill until Monday.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest that the Senator from Alabama help the Chair to decide the matter by voting on my side. [Laughter.] In that way, it seems to me, he would get rid of the embarrassment, and would have full control over the amendment in the conference committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should be entirely willing and very much pleased and gratified if the Chair, after listening to the viva voce vote, should decide it by the sound. I shall be entirely satisfied with that. Is the Senator from Iowa willing to have that done?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a way to reach the matter. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

There were, on a division—ayes 18, noes 11.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is perfectly evident that a quorum has not voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Overman	Shively
Bankhead	James	Page	Smith, Ariz.
Bradley	Jones	Perkins	Smoot

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent by reason of illness.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], on account of illness.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have been requested to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. JONES. I am requested to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and that he is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Before the vote is taken, I should like to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the foot of page 15, after the numerals relative to inland transportation by railroad routes, the following:

And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in carrying packages of more than 50 pounds in weight unless the rates therefor shall be just, fair, and reasonable, shall be the cost of the service as nearly as can be ascertained, and shall not unjustly discriminate either between persons or communities, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall specifically so find before it approves the same.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have just come into the Senate, and hence I am compelled to ask a question. Has the amendment passed beyond the point where it is open to debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is open to debate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can hardly understand this effort being made to hobble, to cripple, the Parcel Post Department, as it seems to me the effort is being made. Everyone must understand that in instituting a great enterprise such as the parcel post is there must be a period in its nature experimental. That would be true of any business about to be inaugurated, and the only way a good result could be hoped for in a business would be to permit the manager a reasonable degree of latitude in working out the plan of the business. Any attempt to circumscribe and confine the activities and the discretion of the Postmaster General is in its last analysis, in my judgment, bound to result in injury to the parcel post in lessening its ability to serve the people.

This contest between the express companies and the Post Office Department, this contest between the express monopolies of the country and those who have been making an effort to enlarge the activities and usefulness of the post office, is an old contest. For many years the express companies were able to defeat legislation in favor of the establishment of a parcel post. Their revenues have been severely impinged upon already by the parcel post, and they are very far from having yielded the fight.

Mr. President, if it is right and proper for the Government of the United States to carry a parcel that weighs 1 pound, it is just as right and proper to carry one that weighs 10 pounds; and if it is right and proper to carry one that weighs 10 pounds, it is proper to carry one that weighs 100 pounds. The whole question resolves itself into simply one practical problem: Is the business of such a character and nature that the Government may engage in it with benefit to the people of the United States? That is a question somebody must settle in each case.

If the Postmaster General of the United States, who is the center of all information upon questions of this kind—who must study them day by day, and week by week, and month by month; who is in close and intimate touch with the various agents of the Government—can not settle such a problem and settle it right, then I insist we ought to get a man who is capable of settling it. I know nothing in the history or character or in the public service of Mr. Burleson which indicates that he is not honest, sincere, intelligent, and capable.

Why is it, then, that we should say to him, "You shall not enlarge the usefulness of this department of the Government"? Who is to be injured and wronged? The express companies are still doing business. If the rate made by the Federal Government upon packages greater in weight than 50 pounds is an unfair or an unjust rate, the express companies are there to do the business. It is only when the rate is a rate that is less than the one charged by the express companies that the Government will do the business at all.

Who is prepared to say that the Postmaster General will make rules and regulations and will fix rates that will be unfair to the Government or the people of the United States? Why is it that all his acts should be supervised by the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other commission? Is he not of equal intelligence and experience with the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission? I think he is. Is he not qualified by experience? I believe him to be. Is he not honest? No one will challenge his integrity.

Why should we deny to the people of the United States this service that can be rendered to them by the department they have themselves established? Suppose we carried for a few months a little of this matter at a slight loss, it would be so equally distributed in its benefits that no great wrong could come, and when the loss is discovered it could be and would be speedily rectified.

Why is it that some gentlemen are so afraid the Government of the United States will do something for somebody? So far as I am concerned, I am rapidly approaching a point of view where I would be willing to see the Government of the United States carry much larger packages than can be hauled in the parcel post.

I have heard a good deal said on the floor of the Senate about no government being able to do business as cheaply as private parties. When I hear that argument I am constrained to ask my friends to look at the capitalization of the New Haven Railway, to look at the capitalization of all other railways, to look at the enormous amount of watered stock and of fictitious and fraudulent bonds that have been issued by the various companies engaged in the business of common carriers in the United States, and to remember that the people of the United States are paying an interest and a dividend every year upon that fictitious stock and those fraudulent bonds. I am constrained to ask these gentlemen if the day is not coming when we ought to be enlarging the activities of the Government and making it still more and more a service of the people of the United States.

I want to know why it is that gentlemen oppose the right of the people through their own representatives and agencies to carry to their doors and deliver into their hands that which they desire to send from one portion of the country to the other. The parcel post has been a magnificent blessing already to the people of the United States. The man who would propose to repeal it and to go back to the old express-company monopolies, in my opinion, would not get enough votes if that issue were squarely drawn in any State west of the Mississippi to warrant a returning board to take the time even to cast up the ballots.

Why should we not carry packages of more than 50 pounds? Do you say it is impractical? If it be impractical, certainly the Postmaster General will not do the impractical. This amendment seems to concede that it may be practical, but it proposes to put all the possible obstacles which can be devised by the genius of man in the way of the Postmaster General in carrying out an enlargement of the public service. He must submit first to one board and then to another board and then to another board.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And take up each item.

Mr. REED. He must take up each item, as has been suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], and have each item passed upon. He must be supervised. There must be an espionage established over him. He must take the position of a subordinate, of a clerk, and carry all he does to some other board.

Mr. President, in my opinion a proposition of this kind is simply a proposition to cripple the activities and usefulness of the parcel post. I want to see its sphere of activity enlarged. I want to see the time when if a man wants to send a package from San Francisco to New York he can have it hauled for something approximating its cost. I am tired of seeing the people of the United States mulcted by express-company monopolies. I believe the hour has come when the people of this country expect Congress to give to them a post-office service that is commensurate with that which is rendered by the post office departments of foreign countries. Nay, more, I believe the time will soon come when the telephone and telegraph services of this country will be taken from the grasp of monopolistic control and be put in the control of the people of the United States.

I understand this amendment is offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and I view it with especial astonishment because I have always felt that the Senator from Iowa was upon the side of the people and not opposed to the use of governmental functions where a genuine benefit will fall upon the people. So far as I am concerned, I want to see the Postmaster General allowed to work out this great problem in a practical way. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator withhold it for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well; I will withhold it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this amendment has been under discussion for something like two hours or more, and until now the debate has proceeded upon the assumption that the Senators who favor it as well as the Senators who oppose it are honest men; that the Senator who proposed it believed that it would promote the public welfare. I am very sorry, I regret exceedingly, to hear the note that has been introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I believe there are other men who are honest aside from the Postmaster General. I believe him to be honest. I believe him to be devoted to the public good. I believe that he is intelligent. I believe that he is entirely capable of discharging the duties of the office to which he has been appointed. But I am unwilling to sit here and without dissent and without protest listen to the implied charge that the proposer of this amendment has brought it forward in order to cripple the parcel post, to disparage the Postmaster General, or to deny to the people of this country a measure of relief. I am unwilling to sit here and listen to the charge, implied, that those of us who favor this amendment are doing so in order to promote the interest of the express companies as against the interest of the people of this country.

I am perfectly willing to compare what I have done with regard to the public service of this country, little as it may be, little as it has been, to secure for the people of this country fair and just treatment in the transportation of merchandise, of commodities, from one end of the country to the other, with that of the Senator from Missouri. I am willing to be judged by the record which I have made for fidelity or infidelity to the public good. I am not disturbed with respect to the implied charge now suggested that the proposer of this amendment is urging it for the benefit of express companies or that he fears that something will be done for the benefit of the people, for the advantage of the people, and that he is endeavoring to arrest that attempt. I am for the parcel post. I am for the enlargement of the parcel post. I believe that the Government of the United States should not only transport packages of 150 pounds or 100 pounds, but packages of a thousand pounds and of ten thousand pounds. I am one of those men who believe that the Government of the United States should enter into the transportation business and absorb it to the exclusion not only of the express companies but of the railroad companies as well.

I have rather a liberal view of the functions of government. I think it should do whatsoever it can do to promote the well-being of the people. The only point upon which I refuse to go further or refuse to concur with the policy of this bill is in reposing in any officer of the Government, I care not how patriotic, how honest, how intelligent, how progressive he may be, the powers that have been bestowed upon the Postmaster General.

The Senator from Missouri might just as well say that the vexed problem of the regulation and control of the trusts should be submitted to the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce; that we should say that he should take the business of the United States and impose upon it whatsoever regulation might seem to him wise in order to secure the public good. We might just as well say that in the formulation of the banking and currency law, which came from a committee of which the Senator from Missouri was a distinguished member, the Secretary of the Treasury should enact such regulations, should put into effect such rules, as he might think best for the government and control of the finances, the currency, and the banks of the country; that he could organize just such banks or series of banks as he might think best in order to carry on the business of the country and to supply the people with an abundance of safe circulating medium.

All this is not in harmony with the theory of this Government. I know it is the conclusion to which we apparently are drifting. I know it seems to be the popular mind at this time to allow one man to make our laws, to allow one man to exercise all the powers of government. I have protested against that tendency heretofore, and I intend to protest against it in the future on every occasion upon which it is appropriate for me to do so.

I believe that the legislative branch of the Government of the United States was intended by our forefathers to be the real governing power of the people of this country. I believe it is in the legislative branch of the Government that there ought to repose the authority for the establishment of principles, policies, and rules in the affairs of the Government. I believe, as our forefathers did, in the distinction between the judicial, the legislative, and the administrative departments of government. I think the liberties of the people of this country are involved in the maintenance of these distinctions and in the separation of the power exercised by each within its proper sphere.

I do not think that it is wise to say to the Postmaster General that he can fix whatever rates may seem to him best for the transportation of freight. I do not think it would be wise to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix whatever rates it may believe will best serve the welfare of the country. I do not believe in any abdication of the legislative authority of the Government.

We are rapidly, I fear, falling under the contempt of the people of the country. The Congress has been disparaged. The legislative branch of the Government has been derided. The people of the country just now seem to be applauding the one-man power, whether it be exercised by the Postmaster General, or by the Secretary of the Treasury, or by the Attorney General, or by the President of the United States. I am speaking of a condition that has not arisen since this administration came into power; I am speaking of a condition that existed in some degree before as it exists now. Congress will never take the place in the confidence of the people and in the respect of the people that our institutions intend that it shall hold until it guards with jealous care the power given to it not only by the Constitution of the United States, but given to every legislative body by the requirements of free institutions and representative government. Some time the Congress must assert its power and stand for its rights if we are to preserve the institutions of which our forefathers were so proud and to which hitherto the people have turned for protection and safety.

We are called upon here to say, because this is an experiment, because this is the beginning of a new venture, the Postmaster General, wise he may be, patriotic we know he is, intelligent we grant him to be, shall have more power than was ever before vested in mortal man. We did not allow our common carriers to fix their rates without governmental supervision. When we instituted the Interstate Commerce Commission we did not allow that commission to fix the rates of common carriers save upon certain rules that we laid down for the guidance of the commission.

The principle was of little importance so long as the parcel post was confined to small packages, the transportation of which served the convenience of the people to a great degree, but which did not interfere with ordinary commerce; but the very moment we pass into the field of freight transportation, then it becomes of the highest importance that we lay down the rule, the guide, which shall in the end determine the rates to be charged.

I can not but feel that the Senator from Missouri was not fully conscious of the character of the amendment which I offered. It is not to prevent the transportation of freight packages of more than 50 pounds in weight. I want to see it go beyond 50 pounds in weight. I am willing to see it go to carloads and trainloads, and I want it transported at just such rates as will keep the Public Treasury intact. I want the service to pay for itself. I do not want the Government of the United States to pay the railway companies the compensation which is now provided for carrying letters and small packages. I want the United States to pay the railroad companies for transporting freight just what it is worth, a reasonable compensation for carrying freight in the way in which freight is ordinarily carried. I shall never be content so long as we proceed upon the false, untenable theory of paying for freight at the rates that were determined upon for letters and other mail matter of that kind. When the Senator from Missouri says or implies that this amendment is intended to cripple the Parcel Post Service, I can only conclude that he had not carefully examined its scope or its meaning. I beg to say to him, as I say to the Senate, that it is intended to forward the transportation of freight by the United States, for I am a believer in constant advance in that direction.

It is intended, however, to make it sure that, as the government of the country advances in this direction, it shall so advance as not to interfere with the business of the tens of thousands of men, built up under a system of distribution already in force—not express distribution; for express companies will pass out of existence; their day is gone—and I do not intend, if I can help it, to have the United States charge either more or less for this business than it is worth. If the country merchant can not endure the application of the fundamental economic rules of transportation, then he must disappear, although I think it will be a sad day for this Republic when the country town has been blotted out of our civilization, and when our population is divided between the country and the great urban centers. I hope that day will never come; but if it must come under the operation of an incontrovertible economic law, we must submit. I do not, however, intend to see that it shall come under the operation of a false economic principle. I intend to do what I can to protect the country against the inroads of the city, unless the city makes those inroads according to the established rules of economic distribution, against which we can not contend.

If I had any suspicion with regard to motives—and I have none, for I know that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is just as devotedly attached to the public good as I claim to be; I know that he wants just such legislation as will best serve the general welfare—but if I were to suspect, to imagine, motives in trying to ascertain why this vast, almost unknown, power is to be bestowed upon the Postmaster General, I should suspect that there was some design against the country town, some design to blot it out of existence, and some hope that the business there done may be transferred to the large cities. That is the tendency anyway; I agree that is so. We ought to fight against it; we ought to stand against it as firmly as we can. The tendency of the time is to eliminate the small urban community, to consolidate this population of ours into two classes—the agricultural population and the dwellers in the great cities of the country. I do not think it is a good tendency; I think it is excited by artificial and ephemeral forces that will disappear, and I can not give my consent to the grant to a single man of the power to aid this tendency, all too strong as it is, even though I have perfect confidence in a given officer who occupies for the time being the position to which the power is attached. We ought to pursue the reasonable, fair rule of a Republic; we ought to exercise legitimate legislative power ourselves, and limit administrative officers to legitimate administrative authority.

Mr. CLAPP, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion of this subject for the last two or three days, and I very much regret one phase of the debate. I have voted against these amendments, and shall vote to sustain a point of order in this case, because I think it is beyond question that the point of order lies; and I should vote against the amendment itself, if it came to a vote, because I do not believe that this is the time or the place to interrupt the operation of a law which we deliberately set in motion.

The existing law does not give this unrestrained power to the Postmaster General; in the last analysis it gives it to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and until this experiment, if it may be called an experiment, can be fairly tested, I for one feel that it would be a mistake to interrupt it in any measure limiting the authority thus conferred. Nor have I ever been able to see how the parcel post would destroy the small towns. For a great many years, in my humble and feeble way, I have been allied with those who have been seeking to reduce transportation rates in this country. I believe that that effort has met the approval of the small traders in the small town, as well as the approval of everyone else. If to-day, in fairness, the transportation rates of this country could be cut in two, surely no one could complain that the effect of that would be to drive out of existence the small town and the small trader. The small trader has always, with others, regarded with satisfaction any effort to reduce freight rates in this country.

But, Mr. President, I rose to suggest that, for one, I deprecate the course of debate upon these questions. Upon one hand, the department store has been held up as the beneficiary, and, upon the other, constant reference has been made to the claim that the express companies would be the beneficiaries. In that the real issue, which is, Should the law creating parcel post be now and in this bill amended by restricting the authority of the Postmaster General? is more or less obscured. I for one regret, although I have no commission to administer lectures to anyone, that a debate can not proceed here confined to the merits of the real question. I know as to the Senators who have favored these amendments, as everybody who knows them realizes—and they are known Nation wide—that no sinister or questionable purpose could in the slightest influence them, and I regret and feel it is unfortunate, for this character of debate creates an impression outside that ought not to be created; it lends the influence of debate here to an impression in a form and manner in which such influence ought not to be lent. It is enough if those outside confuse these issues with false issues; but it seems to me that it is to be deprecated that we can not discuss this question of amending the law relating to the power of the Postmaster General without, on the one hand, constantly having the department store held up and, upon the other hand, the express companies held up. If out of this discussion there has grown the thought in the mind of the Senate that to depart from the merits of an issue is unfortunate, the debate will not have been without service to the Senate and to the country.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am so unfortunate as not to be able to vote upon the side advocated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] upon this amendment. I have heard here for three or four days charges being made of an effort to cripple the parcel post. The Senator from Missouri asks, "Is not the Postmaster General honest?" I hope he is, Mr. President, and I believe he is, because I do not want the Senator from Missouri to get lonesome. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I shall not be lonesome, Mr. President. So long as the Senator who has the floor is in the Chamber I shall be sure that I have good company.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, is not the President honest and capable? Why, then, not delegate to him all legislative power and lodge all legislative power in the executive departments? Will any man rise up and say that the justices of the Supreme Court are not honest and sincere? Then why not leave to them all functions now exercised by Congress in so far as they relate to the judicial department of the Government? Why, indeed, Mr. President, are we here at all? It is easy enough to make an attack; it is easy enough to originate theories, but facts are stubborn things.

The Senator from Missouri seems to have more confidence in the Postmaster General than he has in the Interstate Commerce Commission. He says the pending amendment would leave some part of the jurisdiction to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and he is opposed to that; yet the law in effect to-day prescribes that the Postmaster General can not make any change without the consent and approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission can not give that consent and approval until after an investigation. Are not the Interstate Commerce Commission honest? What do they say?

One of the general duties of the commission is to regulate the practices and charges of express companies. It has not felt called upon to consider the interests of these companies in any respect when considering applications of the Postmaster General to change parcel-post rates. The rates of the express companies have been recently revised by this commission, and a very substantial reduction therein has been made. The commission feels that it should be relieved from the duty of determining the extent to which the parcel post should supersede the express system, which it has regulated. It is easily conceivable that a proposition for reduction of parcel-post rates might seem to the commission to threaten the destruction of the existing express companies before adequate provision has been made by the Government for taking over all of such business. In such case the commission would be in grave doubt as to its duty under the present law.

It is recommended that the commission be relieved of all duties in connection with the parcel post. If that is not done, the duties to be performed by the commission, as well as the standards to be applied to it, should be more clearly stated.

How are they stated in the law they are undertaking to administer? In this language: They are to revise the weight limit, rates, zones, or conditions, or either, "in order to promote the service to the public." That is one purpose, and that is very general.

The other purpose is:

To insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

Either to make it pay the cost of the service, as this amendment would do, or, in general language, in order to promote the service to the public. Of course, Mr. President, the cheaper the rate the more the service to the people is promoted. It is easy to say that the changes made by the Postmaster General have been beneficial to the service; it is easy to say that the rates established by him are self-sustaining; it is easy to say that the rates prescribed by Congress were ineffectual and had to be changed; but what are the facts? The facts are that in 1912, when the weight limit was 4 pounds, there were 273,000 parcel-post packages carried. In the first six months under the parcel-post act, before the Postmaster General had laid his hands upon it, there were 300,000,000 packages carried, and it is estimated that the receipts exceeded the expenditures by $4,500,000. It is estimated that in the last six months of 1913 the Post Office Department carried 300,000,000 packages. As many packages, then, were carried during the first half of the year as in the latter half of the year; but the size of the packages has grown, an increase in the weight limit has taken place, a zone has been abolished; and I call attention now, because——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I could not hear the Senator, for he turned his face away, and, if he will pardon me, I should like to ask him to state again the amount of parcel-post business done in the last six months.

Mr. BRYAN. It is estimated by the department at 300,000,000 packages, as I understand the report. There was a surplus last year in the Post Office Department; but will there be one this year? If so, it will be in spite of the rates established by the Postmaster General, when before it was because of the rates established by Congress. It is said now by those who claim to be experts that we lose on the rural routes and we have got to make it up on the railroads; and yet it is admitted, on the other hand, that the railroad rates are so high that in many instances the actual expense to the Government for transportation exceeds the cost to the express companies. Then it is said that the Government ought to have the benefit of the same rates that are given to the express companies. I agree to that and will vote for any amendment that will make that possible; but here is the difficulty, as we will perceive if we will be reasonable and consider the situation as it is: We are paying to-day for the carriage of large packages up to 50 pounds, from gold dust in Alaska to sacks of salt—any kind of package you can imagine—not as the express companies carry parcels in reasonably cheap cars, but we are paying for their transportation in post-office cars, made of steel, provided for men who are hired not because of their physical strength and ability to handle large packages, but because of their skill in handling the letters and newspapers of the people of the country.

When you get the fourth-class mail matter separated from the high-class matter in this small but expensive space, I can see no reason why the railroad companies would not be willing, or at any rate why they should not be forced, to carry it as cheaply for the Government as for any individual. But, Mr. President, it seems that the Postmaster General will have the power in the case of fourth-class mail matter, as he has in the case of second-class mail matter, to send part of it by fast freight. It seems to me it is bound to be true that if the second-class mail matter, newspapers and magazines, carried at practically the same rate as fourth-class mail matter, can not be carried except at a loss of 5 cents a pound under the revised estimates, it necessarily follows that you can not carry merchandise except at a loss, and that it will be as necessary to carry fourth-class mail matter on fast freight trains as it is to carry second-class mail matter in that way. If second-class mail matter were being carried so as to pay expenses or at a profit, does any Senator here believe that Congress would allow the Post Office Department to take that mail matter out of the mail cars and put it in freight cars?

I was much impressed by what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] said as to the importance of keeping separate the three branches of this Government; but if whenever we undertake to limit an appropriation in any department that action is to be construed as an attack upon anybody, in order that these gentlemen may never be offended, had we not better strike out all of this bill except a mere provision appropriating $310,000,000 to the Postmaster General and let him do the rest?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. BRYAN. I will.

Mr. CLAPP. I, for one, would take the position that the effort of Congress to regulate matters of this kind can not and should not be construed as a reflection upon the Postmaster General or upon any other officer of this Government. The trouble is, as every Senator knows, that such amendments as the one now pending are subject to a point of order, and, knowing that a point of order is likely to be made, they will not, and from the very inherent weakness of human nature can not, give to a subject of this kind that consideration in debate which it ought to receive and can only receive by being the subject of separate and distinct legislation. It seems to me most unfortunate that in this appropriation bill, under those circumstances, we should seek to interfere with an experiment that we ourselves have authorized; and until there is some information on the subject, until we have reached the point where we know more about it and can debate it more generally, it is a mistake to proceed along the line proposed. For one, I have taken that position and have voted against all these amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. The effect of this amendment, Mr. President, would be simply to do what was intended to be done when the original parcel-post provision was incorporated in the Post Office appropriation act of August 24, 1912, because that provision required the change to be made only on experience by the Postmaster General, with the consent and approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission after investigation. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as has been stated upon this floor, said before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not consider that an instruction by Congress to hold hearings in order that they might become acquainted with the changes, but thought it was merely a formal consent which they were expected to give. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as I understand, simply provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission must examine and approve the rates, as they have to do now, with the further provision that they must make an examination and find affirmatively that the rates are reasonable and just. Do Senators object to rates being reasonable, fair, just, and self-sustaining; or is it the intention here to carry cheaply, no matter what the cost may be? If it is the intention to carry the merchandise of this country at losing rates—and it is not contended that some of these rates are not losing rates—then where is the limit? If you say it benefits the people of this country to have goods carried at a loss of $10,000,000 a year, why would it not benefit them to carry goods at a loss of $20,000,000 a year? Would it not be a still greater benefit to the people who ship to carry their goods free?

Mr. President, I do not believe that is the function of the Government. I am willing to stand the criticism of men who have not studied this question, of men who, without much thought, assume for themselves all honesty and deny all sincerity of purpose to other men, and I am willing to let the results determine whether we are wise in undertaking to say that inasmuch as this Government appropriates the money it ought to know how it is going to be spent. I have not any doubt in my own mind, gathered from the statements of the experts of the Post Office Department, that the rates can not be sustained at anything but a loss to the Government. Feeling that way about it, Mr. President, although it may be unpopular—and, of course, it is unpopular—I shall vote to limit——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting, it never ought to be unpopular for a man to do what he thinks is right.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall vote to limit the appropriation as provided by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and to restrict authority to create a deficit in this branch of the Postal Service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator had concluded; I do not want to interrupt him.

Mr. BRYAN. And if I be mistaken in my position, Mr. President, it is an honest mistake, and the Senator from Iowa and myself, if nobody else feels that way about it, can console ourselves with the sentiment of Horace:

Be this our wall of brass: To feel no guilt within; no fault to turn us pale.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am a little astonished at the course of this debate, and particularly at the broad innuendo of my friend from Florida that I assumed to pose in the character of a specially honest individual. I think if there is anybody in this Chamber who entertains a profound contempt for a Pharisaical pretense, it is myself, and I have not assumed to be better than my friend from Florida or better than any person who occupies a seat in this Chamber. I might reply in a good deal more pointed phrase, but I do not choose to do so.

In the few remarks I made, I discussed this question from the standpoint of results, and not from the standpoint of motives. I was discussing the question as to the effect of this amendment, not the reasons actuating its author; and I expressly said that I was surprised that the amendment was offered by the Senator from Iowa, because its effect, as I understood it, was the contrary of the position he had always maintained.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. The reason I said what I did, the reason I rose at all, was because, as I understood the Senator, he said this was an effort to cripple the parcel post that had been going on here for two or three days.

Mr. REED. No; I did not say the latter part of that, because I did not know how long this particular matter had been under discussion.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course the time is immaterial.

Mr. REED. At least, I did not intend to put the phrase in the way the Senator now puts it, and I had no idea of the Senator's position. I am not standing here to apologize, but I am standing here to say that in the discussion of this matter I had in mind the effect of this amendment and not the motives of Senators, and, Mr. President, I am still of the same opinion in regard to the effect of this amendment that I was when I had the floor before.

We have listened to a most eloquent dissertation upon the necessity of maintaining the independence of the correlative branches of our Government, but, in my opinion, that has about as much to do with the question now at issue as the story of the fall of Sodom and Gomorrah has to do with the Constitution of the United States.

There is no proposition here that Congress shall fix these rates, and that that power, being assumed by Congress, shall be taken away from an officer who is connected with the executive branch of the Government. If that proposition were before us, the argument that Congress should undertake to do all these things might be sound. It might be claimed that we should not delegate that authority to a branch of the executive arm of the Government.

The proposition we are discussing, however, does not propose to retain in Congress the right of regulation, but expressly grants away the right of regulation. The only difference is that it proposes to give a somewhat enlarged power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is not a legislative body, in the same proportion decreasing the power or discretion of the Postmaster General, he not being a legislative officer; so that the whole argument about the division of the functions of the Federal Government seems to me to be completely and absolutely aside from the case.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Missouri probably did not fully understand my position, or does not fully understand it. The legislative authority is to make the rule of conduct, is to prescribe the guide either for its citizens or for its officers; but I said we had reposed this power in the Postmaster General and in the Interstate Commerce Commission without any law or guide or rule which they could, in an administrative way, apply to actual conditions. The whole purpose of my amendment is to supply that rule. That is a legislative function. The other is administrative.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the trouble with that argument is this: If that be a sound, good reason, then why is the amendment limited in the application of this legislative rule to packages over 50 pounds in weight?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer that.

Mr. REED. Why is it not made general, so that it will cover all packages? What magic is there in 50 pounds weight that legislative functions and capabilities and wisdom should be applied at 50 pounds but not below 50 pounds?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is no difficulty about replying to that.

The rule is just as applicable in principle to packages below 50 pounds as to packages above 50 pounds; but the Postmaster General has already acted with reference to packages of 50 pounds or less. The Interstate Commerce Commission has acted upon the recommendation of the Postmaster General. It did not seem to me to be wise or necessary, or at least not imperative, that we should overturn what has already been done. I wanted to avoid that field of controversy and the point of order that possibly might arise out of that inclusion.

The future is, of course, before us, however, and nothing has yet been done with regard to packages of more than 50 pounds. Therefore the amendment was limited to that class of merchandise.

Mr. REED. It seems to me the trouble with that argument again is that if the rates below 50 pounds have been already established by the Postmaster General and by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the general provision of the law as it now stands, and if those rates have been justly fixed and properly arrived at, then the same rule and the same law which enabled a just fixing of rates up to this time would enable the same result to follow when we get above 50 pounds, and there is no reason to adopt a new or a different rule. On the other hand, if the rates heretofore fixed by the Postmaster General and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission have been unjust, then there is so much the more reason to make this amendment apply to all shipments. In my judgment the Senators do not occupy a logical position upon this matter.

This amendment expressly reads:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in carrying packages of more than 50 pounds in weight unless the rates therefor shall be just, fair, and reasonable—

And so forth.

It is expressly made applicable at the 50-pound limit. Now, either one of two propositions is true. Either the Postmaster General has acted with wisdom and the law as it now stands has been justly and properly administered or it has not. If it has, we ought to be willing to trust to the same discretion when we go above 50 pounds. If it has not, then this amendment ought to be made to apply to all classes of parcels regardless of their weight.

Mr. President, a good deal has been said here about reposing an enormous power in the Postmaster General. There is already upon the statute books the provision, which I am about to read, which will apply to packages of over 50 pounds in weight, if the Postmaster General concludes to carry them:

The classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission after investigation, to re-form from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

Now, that section applies. The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission that was read here by the Senator from Florida says, in effect, that that body feels that it ought to be relieved of these duties, as I understood the reading of it.

Mr. BRYAN. They state that they believe the duties to be performed by the commission, as well as the standards to be applied, should be more clearly stated. I apprehend they had reference to the cost of the service to the public.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will say that my amendment is intended to carry into effect the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. REED. Then why does not the Senator make it apply all down the line?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will accept an amendment of that kind. I believe the Senator from Missouri is right about it; and if he will join in the effort to adopt this amendment, I will very gladly concur in an amendment proposing to cover the entire parcel post, although I have given the Senator from Missouri the reason I did not embrace it all in the amendment I proposed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is very evident that we can not pass the bill this afternoon. We want to have a short executive session. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the bill go over until Monday morning, when we can probably agree on these matters, and that we have a short executive session and then adjourn. I know we can not get a quorum to-night.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not so sure about that. We probably shall not get a quorum on Monday morning until we call for it. I think we might be able to get one to-night.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to say, Mr. President—it may help to settle the controversy in regard to the present disposition of the bill—that in view of what has taken place, I expect to have a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. There will have to be a yea-and-nay vote. It has already been called for.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has not a point of order been made?

Mr. CUMMINS. A point of order has been just faintly suggested. It may not be presented, however.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I made the point of order, and was proceeding to state the grounds of it when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who had been animadverted upon in the debate, requested me to withhold it. It was only upon that request that I did so. Before a vote is taken I shall seek an opportunity to state the grounds upon which I made the point of order and ask that it be ruled upon.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true; and I publicly acknowledge my gratitude to the Senator from Washington for giving me the opportunity to discuss the merits of the amendment. He did make the point of order, or was proceeding to do so.

Mr. REED. The remark of the Senator from Washington leads me to say that if I have not already made it plain I want to make it plain now that I was not attempting to reflect upon the motives of the Senator from Iowa. If the Senator from North Carolina desires an executive session, I am willing to yield the floor for the purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was simply making a suggestion to the chairman of the committee. I think it would be wise for us to have an executive session and then adjourn.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the Senate ought to know, when it is considering the matter of adjournment, that there is a provision in this bill which continues for another year three commissions which will expire on the 4th of March unless the bill is signed by the President prior to that time. One of those commissions is very important. It has been studying for a year the question of railway mail pay. It is a commission composed of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, serving without salaries. If that commission has to suspend its work on the 4th of March, which comes next week, we shall very largely lose the value of the work it has done. The Hughes Commission, the last commission which investigated the matter, spent considerable time and considerable money, and yet this commission has called to its assistance the experts of the Post Office Department and of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

That is the reason why it is important that this bill should be passed to-night. It seems to me Senators can afford to remain here a sufficient length of time to attend to the public business.

Mr. REED. I do not think this bill is likely to pass to-night, unless we stay here all night. So far as my remarks are concerned, they will be concluded in less than three minutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the bill is passed Monday, the conference committee can get together Tuesday and settle it, I think. There are very few matters of difference between the House and the Senate. So far as my observation goes, there have been very few amendments adopted; so we can undoubtedly agree on the bill and have it signed by the 4th of March.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, one objection I have to adjourning until Monday is that we have been discussing this bill for four days on the same question. If we adjourn now until Monday and come back here then, no man can tell how many more days of discussion we shall have. Senators will have rested up by that time [laughter], and other Senators who have not been here and who do not know anything at all about this question will come in and want to discuss it in order to get information.

Of course, I want to oblige Senators. I do not want to be ugly about this, but I do think, after the statement made by the Senator from Florida, that the Senate ought to go on and complete the consideration of this bill to-night.

I understand, however, that if the Senator from Washington has in mind the purpose to make a point of order, it is likely to develop the absence of a quorum. I do not know, of course, what the Vice President's ruling will be on the question; but if the point of order should be overruled, it would not help us very much.

So I am in a situation that I very often get in. I do not know exactly what to do. I do want to get through with this bill; but if we are not going to be able to get a quorum, and a situation arises where a quorum must be developed, I should like to inquire if there is not some way by which we can develop that question right now?

Mr. OVERMAN. Then we could not get an executive session.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator from Washington is going to make a point of order, I should be glad to have him make it and have it ruled upon. Has the Senator from Washington made the point of order?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes, Mr. President; I have made the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought the Senator had withheld it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withheld it at the request of the Senator from Iowa; but if the Senator will yield the floor, I will renew it now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. President, on the ground that it is general legislation, in that it changes the existing law as to the discretion of the Postmaster General in fixing rates, in that it establishes a different rule as to parcels above 50 pounds, and in that, according to some constructions of the amendment, it would prevent the establishment of the zone system as to parcels above 50 pounds. It has been argued here with a great deal of cogency by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] that there is a discrimination owing to the fact that different distances are required to pay the same rates in zones——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator stating his point of order or arguing it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am stating the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the Senate has already voted upon this very amendment, and it was declared by the Chair to have been adopted by the Senate. Then a division was asked for. I think it is too late now to make a point of order on an amendment that has been already declared by the Chair carried by this body.

SEVERAL SENATORS. It has not been carried.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Do I understand the amendment has already been adopted?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. The yeas and nays were called for.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it was declared that the ayes appeared to have it, after which a division was asked for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this question.

Mr. SMOOT. Then all that can be done, if that is the case, is to call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] called for the yeas and nays. The Chair inquired whether the request was seconded by a sufficient number. The yeas and nays were ordered. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] then received the recognition of the Chair and proceeded to discuss the pending question.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the yeas and nays have been ordered?

Mr. CUMMINS. The yeas and nays have been ordered; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not know that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CUMMINS. The last time I called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and then immediately the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] rose to address himself to the amendment.

Mr. President, with regard to the point of order made by the Senator from Washington, I never debate a point of order unless the Chair invites the debate, and therefore I shall not do so in this instance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is too late now to make the point of order, but the Chair will rule on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that while the yeas and nays are stated to have been ordered—I do not recollect the record myself in that regard—yet the roll call had not commenced, and under the rule the question before the Senate was still subject to debate and still subject to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the Congress of the United States may pass a law either imposing duties upon or granting privileges to an administrative body of the Government; and it is common knowledge that neither can the duties be discharged nor the privileges taken advantage of without an appropriation from the Congress of the United States. The Chair believes that a subsequent Congress may prevent the discharge of a duty or the exercise of a privilege by failing to make an appropriation, without any express repeal whatever of the statute.

The Chair believes, whatever may be the advisability of such a course, that it is the privilege of the Congress to limit the purposes for which any appropriation made may be used by an administrative officer. The Chair thinks that this Congress could simply make an appropriation for carrying letters, and it would be a legitimate exercise of legislative power if there were an amendment proposed that no money voted by the bill should be used for any other purpose than to carry mere letters. It would not be general legislation, but would be a limitation upon the use of the money. It is not repealing the statute. It is simply leaving it to the Congress hereafter to make additional appropriations for carrying out the statute, or, if an appropriation is not made, the statute will sink into innocuous desuetude.

The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order against this amendment, on the ground that it is general legislation, is not well taken; and the point of order is overruled.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. If there is no further discussion, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after the amendment already offered by Mr. WEEKS, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the rate of pay authorized in this paragraph shall apply to substitutes performing the duties of carriers or clerks.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to explain that the amendment which was adopted this afternoon by the Senate raising the pay of substitutes simply applies to substitutes for carriers and not carriers and clerks. The amendment which I now offer will cover both classes of employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was impressed on yesterday with the contention that the rural carriers who are traveling more than 24 miles, which is the standard route, some of them traveling 35 miles, are not being treated justly in not being allowed an additional sum for the additional travel. In view of that fact, I offer an amendment. I trust the amendment will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after line 16, add the following proviso:

Provided, That in all cases where the rural route exceeds the standard route of 24 miles the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, make such additional allowance as he shall deem just and proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the amendment been submitted to the committee? I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he approves of the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was asking if this amendment had been submitted to the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has not, Mr. President. There is so much confusion in the Chamber I could not hear the amendment. I ask that it be again read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I presume it is competent for any Member of the Senate to offer an amendment to a pending bill without submitting it to a committee. I simply exercise my right under the rules to submit an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 16, after the words "per annum," insert:

Provided, That in all cases where the rural route exceeds the standard route of 24 miles the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, make such additional allowance as he shall deem just and proper.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise a point of order on the amendment, that it has not been estimated for and has not been submitted to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is, under the first clause of Rule XVI?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; the first and second.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the first and second clauses of Rule XVI. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order. If there is no further amendment to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. BRADLEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SHIVELY. I yield for a statement as to what the Senator desires to bring up.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, during the discussion yesterday morning of Senate joint resolution No. 1 I gave notice that immediately upon the passage of the Post Office appropriation bill I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

If the Senator from Indiana will indulge me for a moment, I wish to make a short statement. As I said before, I do not have any intention of pressing the joint resolution to a vote short of 25 or 30 days, because various Senators wish to speak upon it. I nevertheless now enter that motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. SHIVELY. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, which is a privileged motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHIVELY. I will withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish simply to give notice now that I shall move as an amendment to and substitute for the motion of the Senator from Arizona that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that that can not be done under our rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire is sustained by the Chair.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 2, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 28, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, that the world has not only been contracted by the use of steam and electricity, but that the world of mankind has been brought closer together in the bonds of fraternity; that our religious conceptions are taking a wider sweep in the truths enunciated by the Master—fatherhood, brotherhood; that the ethics which underlie the Christian religion are more generally recognized and practiced; that a clean life is set above the price of rubies, and what is true of the individual is true of the national life and character, and we most fervently pray that these great principles may continue to grow until all men everywhere shall recognize them and put them into practice. In the spirit of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTION TO VACANCIES ON COMMITTEES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of the gentleman to standing committees of the House whose names and the committees I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARCHIBALD C. HART, sixth district of New Jersey, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

FRANK PARK, second district of Georgia, to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

HENRY VOLLMER, second district of Iowa, to the Committee on Claims, Committee on Invalid Pensions, and Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that these gentlemen be elected to the standing committees.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. (H. Rept. 314.)

Mr. BUTLER reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois submitted views of the minority on the naval bill, which were ordered printed with the majority report.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4437. An act to give effect to the provisions of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on April 11, 1908; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. 494. An act to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, Cal.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 417 (H. Rept. 331).

Resolved, That for the purpose of compiling and arranging the data concerning direct primaries the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress is hereby authorized to employ expert, clerical, and other help, the cost not to exceed $300, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Election of President and Vice President have before them an entirely new subject, and they desire to make a compilation of such information as they can gather on that subject. It requires some expert labor, and the committee deems it necessary to have authority to employ that help.

Mr. COX. Will he gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Is it their intention to employ counsel?

Mr. LLOYD. No; and it is not to exceed a cost of $300.

Mr. COX. What is the nature of this expert work?

Mr. LLOYD. To gather such data as may be had on that subject. There has been no compilation of any kind, either by States or in any other manner.

Mr. COX. I can not conceive of any data except as to the various States that have a uniform primary law.

Mr. LLOYD. That is one of the things they want a compilation of, and I do not know what other matters.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this a unanimous request of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; and the resolution is offered by the chairman of that committee.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a unanimous request, is it?

Mr. LLOYD. I understand so.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will state that it is a unanimous request.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 410 (H. Rept. 330).

Resolved, That all expenses that may be incurred by the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, in the employment of expert and other assistance required in the transaction of its business, as heretofore authorized by House resolution No. 191, to an amount not exceeding $3,000 in addition to that heretofore authorized by House resolution No. 191, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee or subcommittee thereof, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides that the Committee on Banking and Currency may expend not to exceed $3,000 in making investigation of various subjects before them. In the last session of this Congress there was an authorization of $5,000, and they have expended out of that fund about $4,900, leaving on hand about $100. They have several important subjects to investigate. They will have hearings and will require some additional help. They feel that they will need to expend as much as $2,500 or $2,800.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman informed as to the nature of these investigations and inquiries?

Mr. LLOYD. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, to make a statement as to what they desire to do.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the subcommittee on rural credits, I will say that that subcommittee has been actively at work since early in December. We have held a number of hearings on the subject, most of the witnesses appearing voluntarily without any expense to the committee. We are now bringing in witnesses representing national farmers' organizations and other men of special qualifications, coming from distant parts of the country, who could not fairly be asked to pay their own expenses. The subcommittee is now holding sessions jointly with the rural-credits subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Up to date all the vouchers for expenses of witnesses have been signed by the chairman of the Senate subcommittee. Now, in fairness, the chairman of the House subcommittee ought to sign a few vouchers to put us on an equal basis.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this a unanimous request of the committee?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And the major portion of the sum will be used for the purpose of getting witnesses for further investigations and inquiries in regard to the important question of rural credits?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; that is the purpose. It includes also the employment of assistants for the same purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. There will be no payment for attorneys out of this sum?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; we will not need any attorneys.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13453, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

For pay of 40 hospital matrons, at $120 each, $4,800.
For pay of 42 veterinarians, at $1,700 each, $71,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if he has had inserted in the RECORD the very excellent and informing statement that I find in the report of the committee, beginning on page 4 with the words "the estimates submitted," and so forth, and continuing on to the end of the report.

Mr. HAY. I have not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that is an exceedingly comprehensive and, I think, accurate and highly informing statement, and I hope the chairman will insert it in the RECORD at an appropriate place.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the report to which the gentleman has referred may be inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the portion of the report referred to may be inserted as a part of the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The portion of the report referred to is as follows:

The estimates submitted to your committee called for appropriations to pay and subsist an army of 85,000 men, exclusive of Philippine Scouts, Hospital Corps, and Quartermaster Corps men. Your committee has not been able to see the necessity for this material increase of the Army; nor in the opinion of your committee was any good reason given for an increase of the Army over what it was last year; and therefore the committee recommends that the same number of men be appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year as were appropriated for in this fiscal year, to wit, 77,560, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts, Hospital Corps, and Quartermaster Corps men. From the reports of The Adjutant General of the Army it appears that the average strength of the Army for the last 10 years has been, exclusive of Philippine Scouts, Hospital Corps, and Quartermaster Corps men, 68,075 men.

Average actual enlisted strength of the Army, excluding the Hospital Corps, Quartermaster Corps, and Philippine Scouts for the 10 years given, and the average of those averages for the same period.

1910	75,409
1911	72,530
1912	77,966
1913	81,001

Average for 10 years, 68,075.

This bill therefore provides for nearly 10,000 more men than the average strength for the above period. Moreover, the Secretary of War in his testimony before the committee stated that (see p. 730 of the hearings) he proposed to place on the Canal Zone 8,305 men, and in the Hawaiian Islands 15,665 men. The Adjutant General of the Army in his report for 1913, page 8, states that there are 11,209 men in the Philippine Islands. Thus there will be out of the country 35,179 men, leaving in this country 42,821 men, an ample number to deal with any normal condition which may arise here. If for any reason more men are needed either at home or abroad, it is assumed by your committee that the Congress will grant the necessary money to pay, subsist, and equip any number of men which may be called for by the President.

It may be pointed out that besides the American troops in the Philippine Islands we constantly maintain there a body of Philippine Scouts of more than 5,000 men.

Your committee herewith exhibits a table showing the amount of money which has been appropriated for the military establishment during the last 10 years:

RECAPITULATION.

Army appropriations, fiscal years 1905–1914.

Permanent appropriations (including Pacific railroads transportation and enlisted men's deposit fund)	$11,999,271.00
Fortification acts, armories and arsenals and military posts in sundry civil acts, and deficiencies for military establishment in deficiency acts	113,071,133.17
Army appropriation acts	868,536,993.31
Military Academy acts	13,802,873.00
Total	1,007,410,270.48

This shows an expenditure of $1,007,410,270.48 for that period. It is not necessary to comment upon the expenditure of this enormous sum of money. But in view of all the facts your committee felt obliged to keep down expenditures, nor in doing so have the interests of the country been imperiled. For notwithstanding the alarming statements which have been made, and which seem to be always coincident with the consideration of the Army bill, we have in reserve large supplies of ammunition, stores, and equipment, nor has the Army ever been more efficient than it is to-day. Besides having the Regular Army thoroughly equipped with guns, ammunition, and supplies of all kinds, we have our militia, so far as it is organized, equipped in the same way, a body of 120,000 American soldiers equal to any emergency and ready to respond to any call of duty. But beyond this we have in reserve 206,000,000 rounds of small-arms ammunition, 800,000 rifles, and a large reserve supply of clothing and equipage. Much has been said of our lack of reserves of field artillery guns and ammunition, but when we consider the evidence of the chief ordnance officer of the Army we find that we have in reserve 57 per cent of artillery guns desired for an army of 570,000 men, and 20 per cent of ammunition for their guns, and the appropriations carried in this bill will serve to increase materially this reserve.

In view of our relations with all the great powers of the world, your committee believes that it is making ample provision to accumulate reserves of ammunition and guns, and that it would not be the part of wisdom to expend more money in any one year for this purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers, dental surgeons, and veterinarians and pay clerks on duty without troops at stations where there are no public quarters, $450,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 15, add after $450,000 the following:

"Provided, That hereafter the persons mentioned in this paragraph shall receive no part of this appropriation unless the aggregate of the number of rooms to which the officers already assigned to that post, station, fort, or school are entitled by law shall exceed or equal the whole number of rooms at such point or points."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, in the hearings, at page 60, Gen. Aleshire was questioned as follows by the chairman of the committee, Mr. HAY.

The CHAIRMAN. General, when an officer is ordered to Chicago or to any city where there is a post near by, is there any reason why he should not have quarters assigned to him at the post, or are they all occupied?

Gen. ALESHIRE. They are all occupied, Mr. Chairman, and commutation of quarters in such a case would be necessary to avoid the renting of buildings for use of officers at the post. Take, for instance, Fort Bliss. We consider the number of rooms in the buildings, and if there is a shortage of sets of quarters an officer is assigned only the number of rooms allowed him by regulations.

I challenge that statement. I have no information about all of the Government posts, but I do have information about 15 of them, and I think that a further prosecution of this inquiry would show that they all stand on about the same footing as the 15, and that information is that at every Government post in the United States Army officers are occupying from two to three times the number of rooms that the law allows them. That is a pretty strong statement, but it is true, and yet in this bill a little further on you will find an appropriation of two or three million dollars to build additional quarters. A colonel is entitled to seven rooms, I believe, and a captain to four rooms, and so on up to a major general, who is entitled to 10 rooms.

I make the assertion that right down here in Washington at the Washington Barracks, there are nearly 200 rooms being occupied by officers who are not entitled to more than 100 rooms, and that is going on not only at the Washington Barracks and at Fort Myer, but at every post in the United States, and yet the Congress of this country continues to build quarters under those circumstances. That is why I offer this amendment—in order to compel the Quartermaster's Department to assign to officers the lawful number of rooms they are entitled to, and not give a man who is entitled to six rooms a house of 16 rooms, and give him in addition to that heat and light for the entire quarters. It is not right or fair to the taxpayers or to the Congress that that sort of thing should go on, and I protest against it and shall continue to do so until it is stopped.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a list which I have had made for the Washington Barracks in order to prove the assertion which I have made. Here are the quarters furnished, from January 1 to July 8, 1913, Washington Barracks. Take the case of Charles R. Reynolds. He occupies a house of 12 rooms. He has the rank of a major, which entitles him to 5 rooms. Then there is the case of William F. Endress, a captain, who is entitled to 4 rooms, and who occupies a home of 12 rooms.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he does not refer there to the quarters at the post?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. I am referring to quarters at the Washington Barracks.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this item does not have anything to do with the quarters at the post. This is an item providing for commutation of quarters of officers stationed where there are no posts.

Mr. WEBB. I understand, but Washington City has not a post, you might say, and yet they will bring officers here and pay commutation of $12 a room, with heat and light and all the rest thrown in, when there are barracks within the limits of the city unoccupied or occupied by men who are not entitled to occupy them.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman to the further fact that the post of the Washington Barracks, for example, is set aside for an Engineer battalion, I believe. An Engineer battalion is stationed there, and those officers to whom the gentleman refers are officers of that battalion and are stationed in that post. Now, there are a number of officers on detached service who could not under the law be stationed at Washington Barracks.

Mr. WEBB. Why could not they, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HAY. Because Washington Barracks is set aside for the use of the battalion command which may be ordered there.

Mr. WEBB. Is that the way they fill up great big barracks they have with a few men in violation of law? I will show the gentleman that in the very barracks I speak of officers are entitled to 99 rooms under the law and that they have occupied 189 rooms and then the Committee on Military Affairs comes to Congress and asks for appropriations for rent and for building additional quarters for officers.

Mr. GOULDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman find the same condition prevailing with the 46 others of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. WEBB. Practically so, and I will come to the other barracks in the country in a moment. The point I am making is we are wasting money, it seems to me, upon rent of quarters when we have as fine Government houses as anybody could wish right in sight of this Capitol. My contention is that if they are detailed here they ought to stay there instead of renting quarters at the Highlands and other fine apartment houses here in the city and have the Government pay fancy prices for them. If they are assigned under the law to quarters at the Washington Barracks where they have heat, light, and furniture and all the rest of it, they ought to go there. I will not read this entire list which I have here, but will ask to insert it in the RECORD, which is as follows:

I could go through the entire list and show how rooms and quarters are being squandered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for five minutes additional. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in this connection that I am in perfect good faith in offering this amendment. There is no man in the House who has a higher regard for the Committee on Military Affairs, and especially for its chairman, than myself. I think the House of Representatives and the country are to be congratulated that this committee has as its chairman a man of his courage, courtesy, capacity, and character, and I am making no criticism of this committee in making these suggestions or offering this amendment; but I tell you, gentlemen, a system has grown up whereby even the Committee on Military Affairs sees these questions through the eyes of officers of the Army. The civilian does not come to testify before this great committee. Gen. Aleshire and other officers come and they put their side of the question to this committee, and the civilian is not heard because he knows nothing about how matters are run, like most Members of the House and myself in many instances.

Now, as I have said, down at Washington Barracks there are 189 rooms, under the law intended to house officers, and yet men instead of occupying 99 rooms to which under the law they are entitled occupy these entire 189 rooms. Now, something ought to be done to stop this squandering of rooms and rent we are paying in the way of commutation of quarters, heat, lighting, rent, and so forth, when there are already ample quarters provided by the Government.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am asking this only for information.

Mr. WEBB. I am sure of that.

Mr. GOULDEN. How are these rooms divided, into houses of 10 or 12 rooms separate for each man?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOULDEN. It strikes me there might be a difficulty sometimes arise in the case of two or three officers with their families occupying one building.

Mr. WEBB. In some cases it might, but a number of the officers are unmarried. However, the proportion of officers in the United States entitled to 15 rooms is nil, but we are going ahead with this bill providing for the building of houses which will contain 15 or 16 rooms when the highest officer is only entitled to 9.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is not the mistake made in building too large houses?

Mr. WEBB. I am coming to that. That is so.

Mr. GOULDEN. By whose authority are they built?

Mr. WEBB. By the War Department. There is an appropriation in this very bill that continues the building of public quarters, to which I have an amendment, which I propose to offer later, to confine this building to four, five, and six room quarters.

I will state this, that there are already in existence sufficient fine houses with legal quarters for every officer of the United States above the rank of major, and consequently there is no necessity for any additional homes to be built that have more than four or five rooms in them.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. How much of additional room is it proposed to build?

Mr. WEBB. You do not know and I do not know. There is a lump appropriation for that purpose, and the War Department will spend it as it sees fit.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Is that $450,000 additional appropriation?

Mr. WEBB. No. sir. My amendment is for the purpose of compelling Army officers who come here to take quarters in the Government barracks provided for them by the Government of the United States, instead of coming to Washington and taking quarters in hotels or apartment houses, and the Government paying for them in addition.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Does the gentleman assert that there are more homes assigned to these officers than they are entitled to?

Mr. WEBB. I have just so stated. Here is Fort Myer, Mr. Chairman. I find in the decision by the assistant comptroller of August 18, 1913, at page 90, the following list:

Officer.	Number of rooms occupied.	Number of rooms entitled to.
Maj. Gen. Wood	16	9
Col. Garrard	13	7
Lieut. Col. Johnson	11	6
Maj. Rhodes	11	5
Second Lieut. Rumbaugh	9	2
Capt. Lambie	9	4
Capt. Gallup	9	4
Chaplain Brander	9	4
Capt. Dean	9	4
Capt. Lindsey	9	4
Capt. Smither	9	4
Capt. Berkeley	9	4
Maj. Summerall	9	5
Capt. Austin	9	4
Capt. Eltinge	9	4
First Lieut. Johnson	9	3
Capt. Newbill	9	4
Maj. Allen	9	5
Veterinarian Williams	7	2
First Lieut. Shepherd	7	3
First Lieut. Chilton	7	3
Second Lieut. Patton	7	2
Mrs Gilman, P. M	7	None.
First Lieut. Russell	7	3
First Lieut. Downer	7	3
Capt. Kirkpatrick	7	4
First Lieut. Tate	7	3
First Lieut. Graham	6	3
Mr. Swan, Q. M. Agt	6	None.

In other words, at Fort Myer these 29 men are actually occupying 252 rooms, whereas the law only allows them 108. No wonder we must go on spending money for quarters when the law is being disregarded in this flagrant manner. It ought to be stopped and will be stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more. I think that ought to go into the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEBB. I do not mean to weary the patience of the committee, Mr. Chairman. I think it is my duty as a public citizen and as a Member of this House to give this information not only to the committee but to Members who vote our taxes away, and, of course, I have no apology to make for my course.

And here is Watertown, Mass., and I believe I will put this in the RECORD. The report is as follows:

Officer.	Number of rooms occupied.	Number of rooms entitled to.
Lieut. Col. Wheeler	16	6
Maj. Shinkle	7	5
Maj. Wesson	10	5
Maj. Williams	9	5
Sergt. Bluste	6	1
Sergt. Tanner	6	1
Sergt. Noon	5	1
Sergt. McSween	4	1
Corp. Collins	6	1
First-class Pvt. Nickerson	6	1

You will observe that here 10 officers are occupying 75 rooms, when the law of Congress allows them but 27. You will find this condition exists generally in all the Government quarters at the various posts throughout the United States.

That shows you, gentlemen, how the law in one way and another is being violated. We have ample room here in Washington at the barracks to house these officers, and they ought to be compelled to occupy these quarters or show the reason why to the taxpayers of the country and to the Committee on Military Affairs. There is method in this, too. It is not an accident. It is a system that has grown up in the War Department. It has been the practice for many years.

They say that out here at Chicago they station a man in Chicago when the car fare from Chicago to Fort Sheridan is only 5 cents, or a trifle.

Mr. MADDEN. Excuse me. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I would like to correct him.

Mr. WEBB. How far is it?

Mr. MADDEN. It is 37 miles from Chicago to Fort Sheridan, and the fort is not in Chicago at all. So you can not expect that they are going to be transported for 5 cents to a place that is not within the jurisdiction of the city.

Mr. WEBB. That may be so; but how about Indianapolis? These men are quartered in the city at Government expense, when Fort Benjamin Harrison is within 5-cent car ride of the city.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know anything about Indianapolis.

Mr. COX. I would like to hear from Indianapolis. That interests me very much.

Mr. WEBB. I have not any specific data on that, but conditions prevail there just as they do at Washington Barracks, at Watertown, and at Fort Myer, I am informed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask a question in regard to the barracks now provided. Do I understand that there are quarters already provided that are now vacant, and that these officers should use, and that the Government is renting buildings outside for them?

Mr. WEBB. That is the case; that officers are using 189 rooms, when under the law of Congress they are entitled to occupy only 99 at the Washington Barracks.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Are they renting any rooms here in the city in apartment houses?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; the town is full of them. I will show you them a little later. About 200 officers are detailed to Washington for duty and the Government is paying for rooms, heat, and light for them at big prices.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Are there other quarters in the barracks vacant that they could use?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know whether they are vacant or not. I know there are officers who are entitled to occupy only 99 rooms there and they are actually occupying 189; so there ought to be vacant at least 90 rooms at this barracks.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Have you any data there to show how much the commutation of a brigadier general is in case he had the rooms furnished to him that the Government was authorized to furnish him? What is the amount in money?

Mr. WEBB. I will give that to the committee a little later on under another section. I have it.

The officers are insistent on these assignments of quarters, too.

I have a copy of an order here dated March 1, 1913, as follows:

SPECIAL ORDERS, NO. 50.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1913.

11. First Lieut. John C. H. Lee, Corps of Engineers, is relieved from duty in this city, to take effect upon the completion of his duties in the office of the Chief of Staff, and will then proceed to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., for temporary duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. I read further:

And upon completion thereof—

That is, the temporary duty—will proceed to Galveston, Tex., and report for duty with Company M, Third Battalion of Engineers. The travel directed is necessary in the military service.

By order of the Secretary of War:

LEONARD WOOD,
Major General, Chief of Staff.

That was on March 1, 1913. Now, on March 3, 1913, they changed that order and issued the following order:

SPECIAL ORDERS, NO. 51.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1913.

16. Paragraph 11, Special Orders, No. 50, March 1, 1913, War Department, is so amended as to direct First Lieut. John C. H. Lee, Corps of Engineers, to proceed to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., take station at that place, and after arrival proceed to Galveston, Tex., as directed in the order cited. The travel directed is necessary in the military service.

By order of the Secretary of War:

LEONARD WOOD,
Major General, Chief of Staff.

Now, the records show that this man left Washington on the 11th of March, arrived at Leavenworth, Kans., on the 13th, and left Leavenworth on the same day, and arrived at Galveston, Tex., on the 15th; and there is no other possible explanation of that except that the order was changed simply to give this man quarters for his family at Leavenworth, Kans., so that he could go on to Galveston and get quarters for himself there, too.

I submit that Congress ought to look into this quarters business. We are paying out hundreds of thousands of dollars for rent in fine hotels and apartment houses when the Government has quarters already built for these men.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LEVY. Does not the gentleman know they have to pay much more than they are allowed, and that the Government can not supply all the quarters necessary? I think it is too small to talk about little things like this in the House of Representatives of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEBB. I see it is touching my friend, and it must not be so small after all. It amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars every year to the taxpayers.

Mr. LEVY. I am talking about little things being discussed in the House of Representatives of the United States.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I can not allow the gentleman to make a speech in my time. I think he knows little about this matter and does not understand it at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman, I know, tries to be fair. Is it unfair for the Government to order that officer out to his post in Kansas and require him in traveling to go out farther? There is nothing unfair in that. He ought to live in Galveston while performing his duty there, and if he had a family, was it not all right to leave his family at the post?

Mr. WEBB. He had to have quarters at Galveston if he was located there.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman, when he read the order, said that the order had been changed assigning him permanently to the post at Kansas, and then ordering him to go on and take temporary duty in Galveston.

Mr. WEBB. It ordered him to "take station." That means much. It means commutation and heat and light and quarters and all the rest of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood that is a permanent assignment of duty—to take station.

Mr. WEBB. He is not permanently assigned at Leavenworth, Kans. He is assigned to Galveston, Tex., but "takes station" at Leavenworth.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HELM. This officer whom the gentleman has mentioned as traveling to Forth Leavenworth is entitled to mileage, is he not?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. I have a memorandum of that.

Mr. HELM. Is his family entitled to mileage?

Mr. WEBB. No; but he gets enough to cover his family and enough to take with him his furniture and library of "technical" books and his automobile and everything else in the way of household goods, and all freight and crating free.

Mr. HELM. One question further. Is this route to Galveston, Tex., a longer or a nearer route?

Mr. WEBB. I can not tell, but I know it is a little unusual to change an order like that within two days and order a man to permanent quarters at one post and assign him to duty at another. I ask that these Government quarters shall be assigned according to law before additional quarters are built and paid for by the Government of the United States.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the provision in the bill to which the amendment is offered provides—

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers, dental surgeons, and veterinarians and pay clerks on duty without troops at stations where there are no public quarters, $450,000.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] is as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the persons mentioned in this paragraph shall receive no part of this appropriation unless the aggregate of the number of rooms to which the officers already assigned to that post, station, fort, or school are entitled by law shall exceed or equal the whole number of rooms at such point or points.

Mr. Chairman, if the amendment were adopted, it would not accomplish what the gentleman from North Carolina thinks it would. His amendment refers to posts and schools and stations, whereas the appropriation refers only to such places where there are no posts and no schools and no forts; in other words, where there are no stations; so that the gentleman has offered an amendment which, in my judgment, is out of order, first, because it is not germane, and secondly, because it changes existing law, and which, if it were adopted, would not effect what the gentleman desires.

The law provides that commutation of quarters shall be given to those officers who are stationed at a place where there are no public quarters, and if this amendment were adopted it would not at all affect that law. It would not change it at all; and this appropriation would be paid out under this bill and under this amendment in the future just as it has been in the past.

So much for that. Now, the gentleman complains that officers stationed at Washington Barracks and other military posts are occupying more rooms than they are entitled to. While that may be true, it has nothing on earth to do with this appropriation. When a regiment is ordered to a post the officers of that regiment are entitled to the quarters provided for them at that post. Each one is entitled not to so many rooms, as the gentleman seems to think, but he is entitled to quarters in accordance with his rank. There is no law with which I am acquainted that confines the officer at a post to any specific number of rooms.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. WEBB. This assistant auditor expressly gives the law, and states that out here at Fort Myer——

Mr. HAY. Oh, the gentleman does not understand. The law is that where an officer is stationed at a place where there are no public quarters he can have commutation of quarters for so many rooms. That does not apply to a post. That does not apply to a place where they have quarters already provided.

Mr. WEBB. Undoubtedly it does. The auditor has passed on that very point several times.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HAY. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. And at a post where they have quarters the ranking officer takes the best quarters?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly; and so on down the line. I said before, and say now, that the gentleman can not find a law which provides how many rooms an officer shall be confined to at a post.

Now, the law does provide how much shall be paid for rooms when he is ordered to a place where there are no quarters. That is what the law provides.

Mr. WEBB. Then this Auditor for the War Department missed the mark entirely with regard to the law, because he quotes the cases where the law has been violated.

Mr. HAY. I am acquainted with the decision of the auditor to which the gentleman refers, and that applies entirely to the case of an officer who is given commutation of quarters. For instance, a second lieutenant is entitled to two rooms, a first lieutenant to three rooms, a captain to four rooms, a major five, a lieutenant colonel six, a colonel seven, and so on. They are entitled to receive so much in money for each room when they are stationed at a place where there are no public quarters, and this appropriation does not apply to the grievance complained of by the gentleman from North Carolina in any possible way. The only way in which he can reach it, if he desires to reach it, is to provide that they shall not have as many rooms as are now allowed by law. I want to say to the gentleman that in the Committee on Military Affairs they have gone into this question of commutation of quarters and commutation of heat and light very carefully, and we are convinced by the evidence given to us that there has not been any abuse, except in very rare instances.

Mr. KAHN. Gen. Aleshire, whom the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] was inclined to criticize, is an exceedingly fair officer, as the chairman of the committee knows. Gen. Aleshire made this statement before the committee:

> I do not want to say anything here that would lead anyone to believe that I am not satisfied with what the Government does for its officers and enlisted men, but I would like to call attention to this fact: In looking over the reports from the Bureau of Labor, of the Department of Labor, I find that a large number of mining concerns, manufacturing establishments, and other large business concerns which provide quarters for their employees, that the number of rooms in the buildings vary from three or four for the ordinary laborer to a considerably larger number for foremen, clerks, superintendents, etc., and that the average number of rooms furnished, considering all employees of those various establishments, was six.
> That is to say, those corporations provide as many rooms for their employees, on an average, including the laborers, mechanics, clerks, etc., as the Army Regulations allow a lieutenant colonel.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has expired.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Now I yield.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman has made a statement as to how much is allowed for each room, I have not heard it, because I have been out at the lunch counter. How much does the Government allow officers now for each room in the way of rent?

Mr. KAHN. Twelve dollars a month.

Mr. HAY. Twelve dollars a month.

Mr. COX. What can the gentleman say as to whether these rooms can be rented any more cheaply than $12 a month? Has the Committee on Military Affairs ever gone into that investigation?

Mr. HAY. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that when the committee and the Congress determined upon the amount of rent which should be paid for these rooms in cities like Washington, Chicago, San Francisco, and places like that, they did go into that question. The law was fixed many years ago.

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman was on the committee?

Mr. HAY. Long before I was on the committee.

Mr. COX. Since the gentleman has become a member of this committee has he conducted any investigation along that line?

Mr. HAY. I have not, because I am satisfied that in a city, for instance, like Washington or Chicago you can not get a room for $12 a month.

Mr. COX. Oh, I beg leave to differ with the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman might get a room somewhere that he would not live in himself, and that he ought not to ask anybody else to live in.

Mr. COX. Oh, you can get many rooms in Washington for less than $12 a month. As I understand, this room rent is paid to the officer in a lump sum, whether he actually occupies his full quota of rooms or not.

Mr. HAY. Not at all. We asked that question in the hearings on this bill, and the evidence is that he receives no more than for the rooms he actually occupies.

Mr. COX. Let me put this question: I do not remember how many rooms a colonel is entitled to.

Mr. HAY. Seven.

Mr. COX. At $12 a month he is entitled to $84 a month house rent?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. COX. Suppose in truth and fact he does not occupy seven rooms, but only occupies five.

Mr. HAY. Then he only gets $60.

Mr. COX. The gentleman says he has brought that out in the hearings since he has been a member of the committee.

Mr. HAY. It may have been brought out before I was chairman. I do not know.

Mr. COX. But since the gentleman became a member of this committee?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. As a matter of fact, the committee reduced the estimate submitted by the department for this item $50,000. They asked for $500,000 for this purpose, and the committee reduced the amount to $450,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I should like to ask the chairman if this practice prevails: Some years ago, when a court-martial was to be held in this part of the country, it was called to meet at Fort Myer, and officers from different parts of the country were called from their stations to constitute that court and carry on the proceedings. Of course they were allowed no commutation for quarters, because they occupied quarters already provided at Fort Myer and were supported at the expense of the Government. For that very reason it is said that the practice of the department has been changed and courts-martial are now called to hold their sessions in the city of Washington, and when officers are called from different parts of the country they come here; and, of course, there being no quarters for them, they are allowed commutation for quarters, but they actually carry on their proceedings at Fort Myer, and actually live at Fort Myer, and are supported at the expense of the Government at Fort Myer while they are drawing their allowances for quarters in Washington.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that I do not know from whom he gets that information, but, in my judgment, it is erroneous. I do not believe that officers ordered here for a special duty are allowed commutation of quarters while living in Government quarters at Fort Myer. I do not believe that is the fact; and if the gentleman has any evidence that that has occurred, I think he ought to give it to the committee.

Mr. LEVY. These officers have to furnish their quarters, do they not?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman means those who get commutation of quarters?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Yes; they do.

Mr. LEVY. Is it not true that in many cases they are compelled to pay more money than they receive?

Mr. HAY. I know that, of course. In many instances a man can not get suitable rooms for the amount which the Government allows him.

I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair was assured after consideration of the matter submitted for and against the amendment, that it would reduce expenses, he would hold that it was in order.

Mr. HAY. Does the Chair think the amendment is germane; it does not deal with it——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not disposed to hold the amendment in order. The Chair stated that if he was satisfied that the amendment would reduce expenses, he would hold it to be in order, but after hearing the discussion and considering the amendment he is not so satisfied. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEBB. I have pointed out the abuse complained of, but for the life of me I can not find any other place in the bill where I could offer it to stop it.

Mr. HAY. I can tell the gentleman where he can offer it. The gentleman can offer his amendment to that paragraph of the bill dealing with barracks and quarters. But he could not offer it there without a change of existing law.

Mr. WEBB. That is what I know. I would like to see if you could get at it, so as to correct the abuse.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment may be offered at any point in the bill where it would be germane, and if in that connection it would reduce expenses it would be in order, even should it operate to change existing law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on soldiers' deposits, $90,000, and so much as may be necessary to pay back such deposits.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman a question. The words, beginning in line 18, "and so much as may be necessary to pay back such deposits" are new words and new legislation?

Mr. HAY. No; I think that has been in the bill for some time.

Mr. WEBB. I make a point of order against those words, because they are new—new legislation. The law provides that the soldier may deposit with the Government his earnings and draw a certain amount of interest; that it shall be kept as a separate trust fund for such officers or men, and if it has been kept properly that money can be called in by the officers and enlisted men from this particular fund at any time. Now, so much of this item as provides for the soldier's interest is all right, but I can not see why we should appropriate to pay back money which is held in trust for soldiers.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to having those words stricken out.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as I recall this item, the department officers contend that the soldiers sometimes draw out the entire amount of their deposit, and the department must have some money with which to pay the soldier when he makes a demand for his own money. For years the bill has been carrying an item of this character. It is not new legislation. The amount of interest appropriated for and contained in this item does not amount to $90,000.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from North Carolina only objects to the words "and so much as may be necessary to pay back such deposits."

Mr. KAHN. It is immaterial whether those words are in there or not.

Mr. WEBB. Well, I make the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman will reserve it. There may be a question as to whether, under the language that will be left in the paragraph, they can pay back the amount of the deposit, regardless of the question of interest.

Mr. WEBB. This is the first time that I ever saw the language in any previous bill. It is new.

Mr. HAY. The bill last year read "for interest on soldiers' deposits, $90,000."

Mr. WEBB. That is all, and it does not carry the language that I have made the point of order against.

Mr. HAY. The Quartermaster General in the hearings on page 197 says they can pay $90,000, and anything beyond that they would use if called upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina insist upon the point of order?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to officers, dental surgeons, veterinarians, and contract surgeons, pay clerks, expert accountants, Inspector General's Department, when authorized by law, $500,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 14, as follows: Strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For mileage of officers, dental surgeons, veterinarians, contract surgeons, pay clerks, expert accountants, Inspector General's Department, when authorized by law, $357,428. And hereafter all officers, dental surgeons, veterinarians, pay clerks, extra accountants, Inspector General's Department, shall be allowed only their actual expenses while traveling, to be paid out on vouchers duly rendered by said officer."

Mr. HAY. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. COX. I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the criticism which was made against the gentleman from North Carolina, I will say——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, can we not have the amendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the words "under orders" after the word "traveling," so as to read "when traveling under orders."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the words will be inserted.

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it is understood that the point of order goes to the new language also.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is subject to a point of order. I think it comes squarely within the meaning of the Holman rule not only in spirit but the very letter. The item carried in the bill is $500,000, and my amendment reduces it to $357,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this amount pays all the expenses that the officers incur while traveling in all departments of the Government?

Mr. HAY. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. COX. Whether it pays train fare and hotel bills?

Mr. HAY. It does.

Mr. COX. All of them?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, with due deference to the statement of the chairman of the committee, he is mistaken or else the War Department is mistaken. It has been argued time and time again on the floor of this House that this 7 cents a mile is a matter of economy. Another argument has been put up on the floor of the House for mileage that this is questionable bookkeeping. I hold in my hand "Rules and Regulations of the War Department," which I think will explode both those arguments. If anyone who has investigated the whole mileage question will go out and read the statutes for a moment he will readily see the struggle the Army officers have had in order to maintain this mileage.

Time and time again it has ranged from 3 to 10 cents a mile backward and forward, 3 cents, 4 cents, 5 cents, 10 cents, 8 cents, 7 cents, until at last apparently they have got it where they want it—7 cents a mile. As to the question of economy, I strenuously take issue with that proposition. We all know from past experience and observation that if this was not exactly what the Army officers wanted, that if it was an economy to the Government to pay mileage instead of actual traveling expenses, the War Department would be besieging the committee, would be besieging the Congress in order to pay actual traveling expenses. Last October I put a few remarks in the RECORD upon this subject, and a captain of the Army, whose letter I have in my hand, but whose name I promised not to divulge, came to my office and said, "I have read your remarks in the RECORD. You told the truth about the matter. What ought to be done is to put these Army officers traveling under orders on actual expenses, and when you do that, you will save not less than $250,000 a year."

In response to the answer made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HAY] a few moments ago that this mileage paid all expenses, I hold in my hand an Executive order dated October 28, 1908, furnished me by the captain of the Army, signed by J. Franklin Bell, Major General, Chief of Staff, and Henry P. McCain, Adjutant General. This is in response to the argument that is made on the floor of this House, that out of this mileage the officers traveling under orders pay all their expenses, train fare, berths, hotel tips, porter tips, and everything else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Let us see whether that is true or not. I read the order:

Officers of the Army detailed to inspection duty under the provisions of the militia act of January 21, 1903, whose expenses are in excess of the mileage accruing for such inspection travel, will forward to the Paymaster General of the Army two signed mileage accounts, two copies of the orders and approved itinerary, etc., and duplicate detailed statement of the actual and necessary expenses incurred, using the following as a basis of what is allowed.

Then follows six different regulations. I will read the fifth:

The actual cost of meals while traveling, where same are not included in the travel fare, the actual cost of meals and lodgings at hotels, and the cost of baths and laundry will be allowed to an aggregate of not to exceed an average of $6 a day for the time actually and unavoidably consumed in making the inspection, the period to be determined by the terms of the officer's orders and the approved itinerary, counting from the day of departure from his station to the day of return thereto, both days inclusive.

I read further from the body of the circular:

The Paymaster General of the Army will in each case arrange for the payment of the statutory mileage—

That is, 7 cents a mile—upon one of the signed mileage accounts as reimbursement of part of the expense—

I call attention to the remainder of this paragraph—and will certify the other account to the proper State disbursing officer for the payment of the excess expenses by check to the order of the officer signing the account, to be transmitted to him through the office of the Paymaster General of the Army.

First, Mr. Chairman, they are required to charge themselves with the amount of actual mileage, at the rate of 7 cents a mile, and then they are required to make out a second account and turn that over to the pay department, and that is paid from funds appropriated by Congress, and then turned over to the States in order to enable the militia to retain their militia maneuvers.

Here is the letter of the captain to which I referred:

Referring to the conversation I had with you in your office not long ago on the subject of traveling allowance for Army officers, I inclose herewith the order of the War Department I promised to send you. My delay in sending this has been entirely due to my having mislaid it among some other papers. The inclosed circular, you will see, was issued five years ago; hence there has been ample opportunity for testing the practicability of the system of actual expense. Particularly is this true when it is borne in mind that traveling accounts of something like 250 officers, more or less, are handled annually under the provisions of this circular, and that these accounts involve traveling in every State in the Union. It may, therefore, be fairly stated that the system works. Furthermore, it is not only fair to pay the actual expenses but liberal and not at all inconvenient, as anyone will say that travels under it.

Thanking you for your interest in this matter, etc.

Mr. Chairman, there is the letter written by an Army officer holding the rank of captain, and the statement has been made on the floor of this House time and time again that the 7 cents a mile pays all the expenses of the officers while traveling under orders, and yet the circular which I have read here shows that it does not do it. The circular I have read here shows that 250 officers of the Army are traveling under a double allowance—first, their mileage, and, second, if that is not sufficient, then the residue is paid. I have read the hearings on this question before the Committee on Military Affairs, and, with all due deference to the chairman of the committee, I must say that I have never seen that question developed before that committee since I have been a Member of this House to exceed two or three pages. I have read what Gen. Aleshire had to say about it the other day—a matter of economy—a matter of economy! Let us try it out. The chairman of this committee said yesterday they get 7 cents a mile coming from Manila to this country. I was under the impression that they did not. Mr. Chairman, I can buy a round-trip ticket from Washington City to Manila——

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Is it not a fact that the transport charges to Manila are at the rates of about a dollar or a dollar and a half per day?

Mr. COX. I do not know. I can buy a round-trip ticket from the city of Washington to Manila and return, stateroom on the boat, meals on the boat, train fare from here to Seattle or San Francisco, everything paid except meals on the train, coming from the west coast to this place, at a total cost of $285. I do not know the exact distance it is from here to Manila, but I suppose it is 7,000 or 8,000 miles, and at 7 cents a mile it would get to $700 on the trip. Is that economy?

Mr. GOULDEN. One way or both ways?

Mr. COX. One trip.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I desire to know if this 7 cents per mile is supposed to pay for transporting the officer's family, and so forth?

Mr. COX. I do not know; they are allowed so much pay for transportation of household goods.

I ask unanimous consent to insert the circular from which I have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The circular referred to is as follows:

CIRCULAR NO. 85.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 20, 1908.

Circular No. 10, War Department, February 15, 1907, is rescinded and the following published in lieu thereof:

Section 2 of the act approved June 22, 1906, being an act "To promote the efficiency of the militia," reads in part as follows:

"SEC. 2. * * * Provided also, That the sums so apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be available for the purposes named in section 14 of the act of January 21, 1903, for the actual excess of expenses of travel in making the inspections therein provided for over the allowances made for same by law; * * *."

The Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury, under date of January 19, 1907, decided in relation to such act, "that Congress, by said section 2 of the act of 1906, when enlarging the objects for which the appropriation can be used, intended that the disbursing officer provided by section 14 of the act of 1903 should be the disbursing officer to receive and disburse the money for the objects contemplated by section 2 of the act of 1906 as well as for the objects contemplated by section 14 of the act of 1903."

In pursuance of this law and decision the payment of excess expenses to inspecting officers of militia shall be made by State disbursing officers upon accounts certified to them from the office of the Paymaster General of the Army.

Officers of the Army detailed to inspection duty under the provisions of the militia act of January 21, 1903, whose expenses are in excess of the mileage accruing for such inspection travel, will forward to the Paymaster General of the Army two signed mileage accounts, two copies of the orders and approved itinerary, etc., and duplicate detailed statement of the actual and necessary expense incurred, using the following as a basis of what is allowable:

1. Fares upon railroads, steamers, or other usual modes of conveyance, including the actual cost of transportation of personal baggage not in excess of 150 pounds to each purchased ticket whenever an extra charge is made therefor.

2. Cost of seat in parlor car, one double berth in sleeping car, or customary accommodations on steamer, where same are not included in the travel fare, and fees to porters or to stewards, not to exceed 25 cents for each 12 hours or fraction thereof of actual travel.

3. Hire of special transportation, either by land or water, where there are no regular means of conveyance. Ferriage, tolls, driver's service, and horse keeping, when transportation is hired. Subvouchers, properly receipted, will be required for these items when they exceed $1. When not practicable to obtain such subvouchers the officer will so certify.

4. Transfer coach fare en route to and from depots and hotels, or, when there are no such conveyances, moderate and necessary hack hire not to exceed the authorized local rates, and the cost of transfers of baggage not to exceed $1 for each transfer. Items of hack hire require explanation as to the distance and the necessity for same.

5. The actual cost of meals while traveling, where same are not included in the travel fare, the actual cost of meals and lodgings at hotels, and the cost of baths and laundry will be allowed to an aggregate of not to exceed an average of $6 a day for the time actually and unavoidably consumed in making the inspections, the period to be determined by the terms of the officer's orders and the approved itinerary, counting from the day of departure from his station to the day of return thereto, both days inclusive. Subvouchers, properly receipted, will be required for the expenses at hotels. When not practicable to obtain such subvouchers the officer will so certify.

6. Fees to waiters and bell boys at hotels, not to exceed 50 cents a day or 15 cents to waiters for each single meal on trains or at restaurants, and fees to porters for handling baggage, not to exceed 25 cents for each transfer of same.

All items of actual expense authorized above are for travel by the shortest usually traveled routes and at places named in the order or approved itinerary, and in proceeding from point to point in the order stated therein. Expenses incurred by any deviation from the itinerary or shortest usually traveled routes can not be considered as actual and necessary expense of the inspection. The officer will certify on the detailed statement that the account is correct and just and that the amounts charged therein were actually paid by him.

The Paymaster General of the Army will in each case arrange for the payment of the statutory mileage upon one of the signed mileage accounts as reimbursement of part of the expense, and will certify the other account to the proper State disbursing officer for payment of the excess expenses by check to the order of the officer signing the account to be transmitted to him through the office of the Paymaster General of the Army.

[1433355, A. G. O.]

By order of the Secretary of War:

J. FRANKLIN BELL,
Major General, Chief of Staff.

Official:
HENRY P. MCCAIN, Adjutant General.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be recognized?

Mr. WEBB. I only want one minute to answer a question. I desire to offer an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman wants to offer an amendment, I think it would be better to dispose of this one first. Now, Mr. Chairman, what does what the gentleman from Indiana said amount to? The gentleman from Indiana insists that it is cheaper to provide that these people shall be paid their actual expenses rather than 7 cents per mile. Now, what evidence does the gentleman present that it will be cheaper? He reads a letter here from a man whom he says is a captain in the Army, but he does not give any information about it. He read an order issued by the War Department, which has nothing whatever to do with the question involved in this amendment and which shows conclusively on its face that 7 cents per mile is permitted to be paid out of this appropriation——

Mr. COX. I beg the gentleman's pardon; that is not what the order shows at all.

Mr. HAY. Give me the order and I will show you.

Mr. COX. The gentleman can have the order. Read it right at the top of page 3.

Mr. HAY. Why, this man was ordered to travel as an inspector of Organized Militia, and it was under this order, as I understood the way the gentleman read it, he was allowed 7 cents per mile from this appropriation, but the State could pay him under this order for his actual expenses while traveling in the State.

Mr. COX. But the State pays the residue out of a fund which Congress appropriates to aid the Organized Militia.

Mr. HAY. Not necessarily.

Mr. COX. That is what the order says; nothing else.

Mr. HAY. But that does not bear on the question; that does not say that he got more than 7 cents per mile, and the gentleman undertook to say from this order that the man got more than 7 cents per mile when traveling under orders.

Mr. COX. That order shows an entirely different state of facts——

Mr. HAY. No; it says this man would be paid this under another and distinct bill, under the bill approved June 22, 1906, an act to promote the efficiency of the militia.

Mr. COX. It does not make any difference from what fund it is paid out if it is a fund appropriated by Congress.

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman does not choose to be fair enough to admit that even under this order he can only get his 7 cents per mile under this appropriation. He does not get any more out of this appropriation than 7 cents per mile.

Mr. COX. Of course, I admit that that is true.

Mr. HAY. Then the gentleman admits the whole case.

Mr. COX. I do not admit the whole case, because he is paid out of another appropriation.

Mr. HAY. He is paid out of another appropriation for doing something for the State, but not for the United States.

Mr. COX. Do not these inspectors going around examining the militia travel under orders of the War Department?

Mr. HAY. They are traveling under orders of the War Department; that is true.

Mr. COX. That is traveling for the United States.

Mr. HAY. But this very law to which the gentleman refers provides "that the sums so apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be available for the purposes named under section 14 of the act of January 21, 1903, for the actual excess of expenses of travel in making the inspection therein provided for over the allowance made by the same law," so whenever he does that he does it under a law which provided for it, which permitted it, and it was not done under cover or for the purpose of getting more out of the Treasury than the man was entitled to. The law, the Congress provided for it. Now, the real question at issue with us is whether or not it is cheaper to give these officers 7 cents per mile or to pay them their actual traveling expenses. That is the whole question so far as this amendment is concerned. This is not the first time this matter has been up. It has been thrashed out on the floor and in committee over and over again and it has been determined over and over again that the mileage system was the cheaper. For example, in the hearings Gen. Aleshire, than whom there is no more disinterested or careful officer, said:

I think the mileage plan is the more economical to the Government. If you paid the actual expenses to the officers, I am of opinion it would cost a good deal more than the mileage.

I want to say that while I have a very high regard for the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana and for his desire to produce and bring about economy, I do say that Gen. Aleshire's judgment is better as to this question than is the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], and he has as great a desire to bring about economies as has any man on this floor. I asked him if he could give any instances of that, and he said:

I can refer to my own experience when I was buying horses and mules. I would be sent, for instance, from Chicago, my regular station, to St. Louis to inspect and receive horses and mules delivered under contract and would remain a month or more, and all I would receive would be the 7 cents per mile to St. Louis and 7 cents a mile for the return trip to Chicago. The expense while at St. Louis, say for a few days' time, at the most economical hotel, living in the most economical way I could, would exceed that mileage.

I have had similar experiences when ordered from Washington to Kansas City and points in Missouri. The mileage would not amount to as much as my expenses. It would pay my railroad fare and meals and Pullman berths, but generally I was behind.

Then I said to him: "You had to take money out of your own pocket?" to which he replied, "Yes, sir." He further said:

Gen. ALESHIRE. Mr. Chairman, as an illustration of what the cost would be if they paid actual expenses. A veterinary surgeon would accompany me on these trips. The Government furnished him his transportation, his Pullman sleeper, and they paid his expenses, not to exceed $3 a day. Three dollars a day was a big help. I would like to have had that $3 a day and transportation and Pullman expenses. He could always manage to come out even, and I rarely could come out even. That was just the difference.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Do I understand that the inspector of these mules received no expenses and the mileage was all he had, and that there was no provision for his railroad expenses other than that?

Mr. HAY. That is all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] objects to that?

Mr. HAY. He objects to that. He wants to have it the actual expenses.

Gen. Aleshire illustrated that by showing at that time a veterinarian was paid the actual expenses. They gave him his Pullman fare and his railroad fare and paid him $3 a day, and he came out even, while the officer who got only the 7 cents a mile was behind, and had to pay the money out of his own pocket.

As I said a moment ago, we have been over that question time and time again, and I am of the opinion that the mileage system is the cheapest, and this committee, in my judgment, would be making a grave mistake if they departed from that now. Not only is that true, but we have in the hearings an itemized statement showing how every dollar of this appropriation was spent. I am willing to admit that sometimes abuses creep in on this, as they will on anything else.

Take the proposition of actual expenses. Why, if an officer chose he could go to the city of New York and put up at the most expensive hotel and the Government would be compelled to pay him for it. There would be no alternative.

Mr. COX. Could not the War Department make regulations about those things?

Mr. HAY. They could make regulations, but your amendment provides for actual expenses.

Mr. COX. I take it that while you have Gen. Aleshire here he would look after that.

Mr. HAY. It is not his business to do it.

Mr. COX. Whose business is it?

Mr. HAY. It is the business of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COX. I take it, then, that the Secretary of War would do it.

Mr. HAY. And there has been talk here about Manila. It may be that some of the gentleman here have an impression that every officer who goes to Manila and comes back gets 7 cents a mile. But that is not true. It is only the officers who are ordered to go there for special purposes—a general, or somebody like that. The ordinary colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, or captain comes back on the transports. They are furnished free transportation. They are not given any 7 cents a mile at all. They are not traveling under what are known in technical terms as "orders." They are being carried from station to station, and it is only rarely that a man goes to the Philippines traveling under orders.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman if these officers who have families, and who are traveling under orders, are allowed anything for the transportation of their families and household goods.

Mr. HAY. They are not allowed anything for the transportation of their families. They are allowed so much for their furniture—I think so much per hundred.

Mr. COX. Eight thousand pounds.

Mr. HAY. They are allowed so much for that. It depends on the rank of the officer. They are not paid a dollar for transportation of their families. Even if a man had six children and a wife, he would not get a cent for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. What has been done with the point of order?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I withdrew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I present an amendment on this same line. I judge it will meet the same fate, but it embodies my views.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 14, after "$500,000," add the following:

"Provided, That hereafter when an officer is traveling in a mileage status his mileage allowance shall include the cost of packing, freighting, and transporting all of his personal goods or effects."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, originally when 7 cents a mile was allowed to officers in traveling it was on a war basis, where the officers did not have the opportunity or facilities to wire to headquarters and get transportation in kind. But since that act was passed we have had no wars where that particular necessity existed, because we have telegraphs all over the United States now, as well as telephones and other easy means of communication. However, the 7 cents a mile has been retained upon the statute books, and I think it is too much to pay an officer for travel, considering all his other transportation allowance. I am not niggardly, either.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Do you think the 7 cents would be too much, in view of the fact that the officer must transport his family besides, and pay the additional car fare for the other members of his family?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to the gentleman, the Government transports and pays for transporting practically everything that he moves, except his trunk, and the railroads carry that free.

I have in my hand a copy of the Army Regulations, which show that when a lieutenant general moves the Government pays the freight for him on 15,000 pounds on anything he wants to ship. The Government moves for a major general 10,000 pounds, and for a brigadier general 8,000 pounds, and for a field officer 7,200 pounds, and for a captain 6,000 pounds, and so on down.

Not only does the Government pay the freight on everything that an officer wants to carry, from an automobile to 4,000 volumes of books, or anything else, but when he comes to crate it, and he wants to hire some expert to go down to his house and crate it he will say, "Take charge of this furniture, whatever it is, and the Government will pay it. You go ahead and do it, and I am entitled to pay you $90."

Mr. HELM. How much?

Mr. WEBB. Ninety dollars. If he is a major general he gets an allowance of $63 on that account.

Mr. HELM. For the portion of his household or his furniture that he does see proper to ship or to move, he is either furnished storage or storage is paid for by the Government?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. I think there is a provision for storage here, and I think that is a fact.

Now, mark you, gentlemen, every bed, every bed spring, every bureau, every table, every comfort and coverlet and blanket, and practically everything else that an officer uses in the public quarters is furnished him by the Government. I believe he does furnish his own sheets and towels, maybe.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that he is mistaken when he says that the Government furnishes officers with blankets. It furnishes blankets to the enlisted men, but not to officers.

Mr. WEBB. My information is that it furnishes the officers with everything except sheets and towels.

Mr. HAY. And the Government does not furnish anything to the officers except heavy furniture. From whom does the gentleman get his information?

Mr. WEBB. I get it from a reliable source. The gentleman will not deny that the Government furnishes officers with beds, bureaus, mattresses, tables, chairs, and things like that?

Mr. HAY. It furnishes the heavy furniture. That furniture is in the quarters. But as to furnishing them with anything except the heavy furniture, it does not do it. That is all the Government does furnish.

Mr. WEBB. I want to ask the gentleman who is the chairman of this committee how an officer could have 14,000 pounds of freight? I will tell you how it is marked. Six thousand pounds are marked "household goods" and 8,000 pounds are marked "technical books," 4,000 volumes of books at Government expense. It is no such thing. It is something else. Maybe it is an automobile.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Has not the gentleman taken the maximum amount allowed to the highest officer of the Army? There are few of those officers in the Army. The gentleman has not, I think, presented a fair case, because he has not struck a fair general average. The gentleman does not contend that a captain or a lieutenant or a lieutenant colonel or a colonel is entitled to 15,000 pounds of freight?

Mr. WEBB. I said it was in accordance with the rank. In the case of a lieutenant general it is 15,000 pounds.

Mr. HOWARD. There is no such rank in the Army as lieutenant general.

Mr. WEBB. Well, I find it in the Army Regulations of the year 1913.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman put in the RECORD those provisions of the regulations?

Mr. WEBB. I will. A major general is entitled to 10,000 pounds. I have also read how much he is entitled to for crating.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman has stated that the officer is entitled to $90 for crating. Is that the maximum?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. That is 60 cents a hundred. That is the maximum.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Suppose he does not pay the man more than forty or fifty dollars. What becomes of the rest?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, I would not charge that he "knocks it down." I do not say that. I say that he is allowed everything for traveling, and I say that his mileage of 7 cents a mile is really more than he can possibly use, and as to his purely personal effects his 7 cents a mile ought to pay the transportation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman another question for information, not in the spirit of controversy. Does this $90 include cartage down to the train?

Mr. WEBB. No. It is extra. I have a bill here which a young captain paid out, $5.80 for packing and $10 for crating it and taking it down from Dana Street to Berkeley, Cal.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks that is an excessive charge?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know how much he had.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have had some experience myself in crating furniture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I say I have had some experience myself here in Washington, and I am sure that I have not a very large amount of furniture to pack and move, and it costs me pretty nearly what the gentleman has said is allowed to Army officers.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman must remember that the officers do not transport the heavy furniture. They have that provided for them at the end of the journey. What they transport is something lighter, and I cited a while ago an instance of an officer carrying 14,000 pounds and charging the Government for it, in violation of the spirit of the law. I do not claim that that is the average. It is not the average.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman think that is an average case of the abuse of the privilege that is extended to Army officers?

Mr. WEBB. I know it is not. I would hate to think that the Army officers of the United States would dodge and abuse the law in that way.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman admits, then, that he has taken an extreme case?

Mr. WEBB. I think it is an extreme case.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman answer this question: Is he of opinion that 20 cents a mile is too much mileage for a Member of Congress to draw?

Mr. WEBB. I am. It amounts to an increase of salary to some men. A man living at Alexandria, Va., for instance, gets practically nothing as mileage; but a man living 3,000 miles away, or 1,000 miles away, gets virtually what amounts to an increase of salary.

Mr. HOWARD. Let us take the case of a man living, say, 800 miles from the Capital.

Mr. WEBB. I will tell you, my friend, the analogy is not a good one. The Government of the United States does everything for the Army officer, and the major general gets $10,000 a year salary, and a colonel gets seven or eight thousand dollars, and he does not have to run campaigns and contribute to charitable objects and the like. His expenses are paid when he travels. His household goods are transported free. His horses are groomed and shod and doctored free. He gets everything free. There is not a Congressman in the United States who is half as well paid as a lieutenant colonel or a colonel in the United States Army.

Mr. HOWARD. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly about that; but I did not think the gentleman would contend that a lieutenant or captain, landing, say, at San Francisco and coming back home, to be assigned to a certain post, bringing his wife and children with him, and getting 7 cents a mile, was getting an excessive allowance for that.

Mr. WEBB. The average officer does not take his wife and children with him when he is going to a post.

Mr. HOWARD. Very often they do.

Mr. WEBB. A great many do not, and a man traveling to San Francisco, 3,000 miles, gets $210 mileage pay, and he can get his railroad transportation, sleeping-car fare, and meals for $75 or $80, and then he has got $140 to put in his pocket. The Government pays every other expense he can have.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. He can not do anything of the kind.

Mr. WEBB. What can he do it for?

Mr. KAHN. It will cost him the entire $210 if he travels in first-class style.

Mr. WEBB. Is that what it costs the gentleman from California? I can not imagine how he spends it. I do not care what style he travels in.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; it does, and more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman states that a lieutenant colonel in the Army gets better pay than a Congressman.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What is the pay of a lieutenant colonel in the Army?

Mr. WEBB. I can state it in a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am asking for information. I do not know.

Mr. WEBB. That is a perfectly germane question. The figures were put in at the hearing by Gen. Aleshire, I believe.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that there is no such officer as a lieutenant general.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am asking about a lieutenant colonel now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. A lieutenant colonel gets $5,918.27 and $200 to $300 per year additional, because he owns two or three horses, which the Government completely cares for.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is the total?

Mr. WEBB. That is the total.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think that is more than a Congressman gets?

Mr. WEBB. It is worth as much as $15,000 would be to a Congressman, because a Congressman has the expenses of his campaign to pay. He has contributions to objects of charity. He has to travel a great deal, and there are many other expenses to which a lieutenant colonel is not subjected. If a Congressman moves his household furniture, to the weight of as much as 30 bales of cotton, as some of these officers do when transporting their private automobiles, he has to pay the freight on it himself. I say a lieutenant colonel is a better paid man than the average Member of Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think that a lieutenant colonel is well paid. I do not want to be misunderstood about that, because he gets life pay and he is retired after a while; but he certainly does not get paid as much as a Congressman gets paid while he is a Congressman, because a Congressman gets $7,500 a year. In addition to that he gets 20 cents a mile for his mileage. In addition to that he gets $1,500 for his clerk hire, and in addition to that $125 for stationery.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman understands what I mean—that at the end of a year a lieutenant colonel can save more money than a Congressman can save out of his salary, and hence he is better paid and lives a far easier life.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not believe a lieutenant colonel can save any money on his salary. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. What can he do with it all? The Government pays all his expenses and sells him food at Government price. The average man with such a princely salary could save easily $5,000 a year when all his expenses are paid by someone else.

Mr. LEVY. How many pounds of freight is a lieutenant allowed?

Mr. WEBB. A lieutenant in the Army?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. A first lieutenant, contract surgeon, or acting dental surgeon is entitled to 5,100 pounds, transported free at Government expense.

Mr. LEVY. Does the gentleman mean to say that for that allowance of freight he can have the household goods of his family transported to his post?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; easily. I can not think of what he could have that would weigh that much. These men get splendid salaries. Why should the Government pay for moving their personal household goods? They do not ship any heavy furniture.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Government pays us 20 cents a mile when we are ordered to Washington for duty. When an officer is ordered to report at an Army post for duty, why should not the Government pay his mileage? [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. An Army officer gets 7 cents a mile every time he is ordered anywhere, while a Congressman only gets his 20 cents once a year, and that must pay for all his travel during the entire year for himself and family, or he must pay the additional travel out of his own pocket.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. He is only ordered to Washington once a year.

Mr. WEBB. He has to go back and forth more than once, if he has any business that is of any account and cares to see his constituents more than once a year.

Mr. HOWARD. He is supposed to have his business here in Washington.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman has cited the case of a lieutenant general, when there is no such officer.

Mr. WEBB. My friend will not put me in that light, because I am reading from the United States Army Regulations for 1913. I do not know whether that office exists or not, and for the purpose of this argument it makes no difference.

Mr. PLATT. There is no such officer. But suppose there were such an officer as a lieutenant general; does not the gentleman think he would be entitled to pretty high compensation? Why does not the gentleman cite the President of the United States, who gets a salary of $75,000 a year and $25,000 for traveling expenses besides?

Mr. WEBB. Some of these high officers are allowed more for heat and light than the President uses in his residence, I believe. I presume there are men in this House who would like to see a lieutenant general paid as much as the President of the United States. But I am not one of them.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I think this is subject to the point of order, for the same reason that the other amendment was, that it is not germane.

The gentleman is trying by his amendment to reduce the cost of packing, crating, and transporting the personal goods and effects of Army officers. The item of appropriation which we have under consideration has nothing to do with that. The transportation of goods and effects, the crating of them, and having them packed does not come out of this appropriation at all, but comes out of an appropriation under the head of transportation of the Army and its supplies, further on in the bill. Now, I know the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] wants to be fair, but it does seem to me that he has taken an extreme case and has undertaken to magnify what might seem to be an abuse. But I do not think it can be very much of an abuse when we take into consideration the fact that the entire amount spent for the transportation of the baggage and personal effects of all the officers and men of the Army for one fiscal year was $269,000. There are 5,028 officers in the Army to-day, including Philippine Scout officers. They are being continually ordered about from place to place. I do not think there has been any abuse in this matter. There may have been one or two instances of it, but the department tries its best to arrange these matters as equitably as possible. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment comes within the Holman rule and reduces expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. This section relates entirely to personal expenses connected with travel. The amendment relates to certain other expenses not a part of the traveling expenses, and the point made is not that it does not reduce expenses, but that it is not germane to this item. If the point was that it did not reduce expenses, the Chair would hold that the amendment was in order. The Chair merely holds that the amendment is not in order in this connection. The Chair sustains the point of order on this ground. It will be competent to offer it to another portion of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not see any other part of the bill to which I can offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no other place in the bill where it will be proper to offer this amendment, the Chair will hold that the same is now in order. The Chair understood that there was another part of the bill where the provision would be in order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, under the item for transportation of the Army and its supplies it may be offered. I hold a statement in my hand for the estimates of the fiscal year 1915. For that purpose transportation of baggage, officers, noncommissioned officers, and civilian employees on change of station. That item in the bill is on page 29.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be in order if offered to that item. The point of order is only sustained on the ground that it is not germane to the item under consideration.

Mr. HAY. The item reads as follows:

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including cost of packing—

And so forth.

Mr. WEBB. I understand that perfectly. But when I offer the amendment which affects the personal mileage of officers, the point of order will be made that I should have offered it to this item. I fear that when we get to that point my friend will make the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But the Chair has just said that it would be in order at this other place.

Mr. WEBB. I understood that the chairman of the committee said it, but not the chairman presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that if there was another portion of the bill to which this amendment would be in order, the point of order would be sustained, on the ground that the amendment was not germane to this particular item.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks the circular from which I quoted in those remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters to officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, $20,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I am not a parliamentary expert, and I do not know whether the amendment that I am about to offer is germane or not at this point, but the Chairman can rule on it. It affects the assignment of quarters.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 3, after the figures "20,000," add the following: "Provided, That hereafter the persons mentioned in this paragraph shall receive no part of this appropriation unless the aggregate number of rooms to which the officers are assigned to that post, station, fort, or school are entitled by law shall exceed the equal or whole number of rooms at such point or points."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will reduce the expenses of the Government of the United States. I understand that when National Guard officers are sent to a fort or a school, instead of being assigned quarters in the fort or school where there are quarters, they will rent quarters outside of the school, and the money of the Government pays for them, although there are in the houses surrounding the forts plenty of room to house them. The fact is that sometimes they are not exactly welcome in the quarters of the Regular Army officers.

If it is not germane under the Holman rule, then it is germane without the Holman rule. It limits this particular appropriation and says that it shall not be expended at all until certain things happen, to wit, the rooms for public quarters are all occupied. It is not fair to the taxpayers to quarter these officers who are sent away for training to a fort or school—it is not fair to spend $20,000 for room rent when there is ample room in public quarters for them. This amendment is to confine these officers to Government quarters as long as there is room enough to entertain them.

The following salaries are paid the following grades of officers, including heat and light and commutation of quarters, viz:

	Pay.		Commutation of quarters.		Heat.
	Per month.	Per year.	Per month.	Per year.	Per month.	Per year.

So it would seem that officers of the United States Army are rather handsomely paid.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, this item is for subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters to officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools.

That includes subsistence, mileage, commutation of quarters. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment which provides that there shall be no commutation of quarters paid the officers of the National Guard if there are rooms in the post, fort, or school to which they can be assigned.

An officer of the National Guard is not a United States officer. These quarters provided at these posts are for the officers of the Army, and when the National Guard officer is ordered to one of these posts it does not follow, indeed it is out of the question, that he should go to the quarters which are provided for the officers of the Army. For that reason I do not think this amendment would reduce expenditures, because it does not provide any way by which these National Guard officers can get these quarters in the event they are not occupied by the United States officers.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I do.

Mr. KAHN. As a matter of fact, the National Guard officer is not entitled to any quarters at all?

Mr. HAY. Of course not.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be permitted to say that he ought to be entitled to quarters when the Government has got them. The Government ought not to be required to hire quarters all around the post when the fort itself has ample quarters to entertain these men.

Mr. HAY. The trouble is that they have not got them.

Mr. WEBB. The trouble is that they have.

Mr. HAY. There are four or five service schools which are constantly full of officers from the Army, sent there for the purpose of instruction. These National Guard officers are permitted to go there to take part in that instruction, and they are given this commutation of quarters. It has been done for some time and has been carried in the bill, and they have been given commutation of quarters because there are no quarters for them. The gentleman's amendment does not provide that they shall have quarters there. It goes on and provides that if there are more rooms being occupied by some other officer or officers than they would be entitled to occupy under the law, then these officers shall have no part of this appropriation. There is no law which provides the number of rooms which shall be occupied by an officer at a post, as I said a while ago.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. There are no apartment houses at the posts?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. KAHN. Every house stands by itself and usually the officers occupy the entire house, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] would try to quarter upon every family some officers from the National Guard, whether it might be convenient for the members of the household to have strangers in the household or not.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, just a word in reply to that. The chairman of the committee says there are no vacant quarters——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. I said even if there were vacant quarters; that is, if an officer were occupying a house containing 12 rooms and did not occupy more than 4 of those rooms, that house would be occupied as a matter of fact by that officer, and under that amendment there would be no way of compelling that officer to give quarters to these National Guard officers.

Mr. WEBB. That is very true; and if I were to offer an amendment here providing for the care of National Guard officers at the public forts the point of order would be made that it was not in order because new legislation, and, consequently, the Government would go on paying these big rental and commutation expenses for housing officers when we have quarters already built for that purpose.

Mr. HAY. I want to say that I am just as much interested in the Government and the taxpayers as the gentleman is.

Mr. WEBB. I grant that.

Mr. HAY. And this constant talk about the Military Committee seeing through the eyes of officers, as I said a little while ago, I do not think is fair. If there is any great abuse, I would have been very glad if the gentleman from North Carolina or any other Member of the House had come before the committee when the bill was under consideration.

I have no doubt that the gentleman had these amendments in mind then, and if he had come before us and said to me, "Here are certain abuses being practiced which I think ought to be corrected," it would have given me an opportunity to inquire into them, and it would have given the members of the committee an opportunity to inquire into them; but the gentleman waits until the bill comes on the floor and then makes statements about this, that, and the other thing, without giving his authority for those statements, simply saying that the authority is reliable. I have no doubt the gentleman thinks that his authority is reliable, but that does not give us the authority, and we do not know what it is.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I am very glad to have the invitation to appear before the committee. While the gentleman was preparing the bill, as he knows, I was busy in another State on committee service, and I have only prepared these amendments since the bill was reported to the House. But I shall certainly accept the gentleman's invitation and next year will appear before him in behalf of some of the amendments that I have already offered and other amendments I propose to offer. He can be assured that the statements and information I have given the committee to-day are reliable, and he no doubt credits all I say about these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, there are two classes of officers referred to—one provided for in the bill itself and another referred to in the amendment. One class of these officers is entitled to rooms at these quarters and the other is not. The amendment provides that if the rooms which are set aside for the officers who are entitled to quarters exceed in number those in actual use by the officers entitled to use the same, then no part of this appropriation shall be paid out. It is very clear that the effect of this will be a reduction in expenditures, since it would eliminate the payment of money under this section. Therefore, from a purely parliamentary standpoint, the amendment is in order. Whether it shall be adopted or not is a question for the committee. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For six months' additional pay to beneficiaries of officers and enlisted men who die while in active service from wounds or disease not the result of their own misconduct, $60,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. The language is perfectly clear, but I have not in mind what is the real purpose of it and how long it has been carried. It is that language in relation to six months' additional pay. We pension some beneficiaries by six months' additional pay—that is, beneficiaries of officers and men.

Mr. HAY. When an officer dies or when a man dies previously, when he enters the service or afterwards, he makes a record as to whom he desires to be his beneficiary in case of his death.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And this provision has been carried in the bill for a good many years to provide a sum of money to meet that expense where he dies while in actual service from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct.

Mr. BUTLER. That is exclusive of any pension or other allowance which may be made his widow?

Mr. HAY. Yes; that is intended, I suppose, to pay his widow.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest exception to it, but I could not for a moment recall the facts in the case.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order that I may get the RECORD straight. I want to call the attention of Chairman HAY to what I asserted this morning in reference to assignments of officers at public posts. I asserted that the law gave them a certain number of rooms, according to rank, and my friend asserted that there was no such law on that subject; that the officer took whatever rooms were assigned to him by the quartermaster or whoever has that matter in hand.

Mr. HAY. The commandant of the post.

Mr. WEBB. Now, I read the following law, quoting from the decision of Assistant Comptroller Warwick, August 18, 1913. It is as follows:

Provided further, That section 9 of an act approved June 17, 1878 (20 Stat. L., p. 151), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "That at all posts and stations where there are public quarters belonging to the United States officers may be furnished with quarters in kind in such public quarters, and not elsewhere, by the Quartermaster's Department, assigning to the officers of each grade, respectively, such number of rooms as is stated in the following table, namely: Second lieutenants, 2 rooms; first lieutenants, 3 rooms; captains, 4 rooms; majors, 5 rooms; lieutenant colonels, 6 rooms; colonels, 7 rooms; brigadier generals, 8 rooms; major generals, 9 rooms; lieutenant general, 10 rooms:" Provided further, That at places where there are no public quarters commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay Department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceeding $12 per month per room.

There is the law therefore, Mr. Chairman, confining these officers to a certain number of rooms at these public posts, and instead of their being so confined, down here at the Washington Barracks and at Fort Myer and at 13 other posts they are occupying almost twice as many rooms as they are entitled to under the law. I just want to put that in the RECORD, so as to keep the record straight and confirm my statement made an hour or so ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay to officers below the grade of major required to be mounted and who furnish their own mounts, $150,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman if what I understand from Gen. Aleshire's statement is that these horses are only furnished by the Government with forage and that the officer does the rest; is that correct?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not think so. I do not think Gen. Aleshire said that.

Mr. WEBB. Gen. Aleshire, on page 215 of the hearings, I believe of this year, says:

One hundred and fifty dollars a year to an officer who furnishes himself one mount. He has to have that horse taken care of, pay the men to take care of him, furnish his own equipment, and keep that equipment in order. Where the Government furnishes a horse to an officer the Government takes care of the horse and takes care of the equipment.

Mr. HAY. This is a case where the officer furnishes his own mount?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Gen. Aleshire says, further, the officer who owns his mount has an additional expense, and the additional expense to the Government would be forage. Now, turning to Army Regulations of 1913, page 209, it provides:

Such public mounts will ordinarily be assigned one to the exclusive use of each officer, and will be foraged, stabled, shod, groomed, fed, watered, and furnished with veterinary treatment and medicine at Government expense. Authorized private mounts of officers will similarly at Government expense be stabled, shod, foraged, and supplied with veterinary treatment and medicine.

Now, I want to know when an officer buys a horse from the Government at $150 or $175 and then gets $200 a year for expense, or whatever it is, I want to know if the Government shoes the horse, stables the horse, and so forth.

Mr. HAY. Well, I do not know a thing but what I am told about this. The gentleman has read what Gen. Aleshire said. Mr. MCKELLAR asked him:

Do you allow them that $150 for that same service?

Gen. ALESHIRE. No, sir. We feed the horse. We give them the forage for the horse, but they have to pay a man to take care of it and they have to maintain their equipment, their saddle, and their bridles.

Mr. KAHN. Do they have to pay for shoeing them?

Gen. ALESHIRE. No, sir; they are shod.

That is, the Government shoes them.

Mr. WEBB. The Government does the shoeing for them?

Mr. HAY. He says that.

Mr. WEBB. And I think the Government pays for the stalls, too, for private horses and shoes them, furnishes medical attention and everything that is necessary to care for a horse or horses of officers.

Mr. HAY. Well, I do not know, except what Gen. Aleshire said; I only know what Gen. Aleshire said.

Mr. WEBB. I have seen a voucher from Seattle, I believe, from an officer for a lease at $10 each of two stalls for two horses. That is $20 a month or $240 a year. And he also sent in a bill of $10 for shoeing these two horses all around with cushioned shoes. These horses belong to that man individually, absolutely his private property; and I understand this is the general practice.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask what is the purpose of private mounts if the Government furnishes the mounts necessary? What is the object?

Mr. HAY. Because they can get much better horses—much better mounts.

Mr. WEBB. The officer selects the best horse he can buy out of the Government drove. If the Government buys two or three thousand horses, an officer can go out and pick his mount and pay the average price, I think, for it, and then he is allowed $150 per year, but I have never known how he spends this allowance, for the Government pays all expenses.

Mr. HAY. Whenever he buys his mount this way he buys it wherever he can. They allow him only the $150.

Mr. WEBB. They allow him $150 on the purchase, but if he wants to buy it out of a drove of Government horses he can do that, and receive $150 yearly after that time just because he bought a horse, though the Government takes care of it for him.

Mr. HAY. I think not.

Mr. GOULDEN. I did not understand why they were buying private mounts, and I wanted the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount required to make monthly payment to Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, late major and surgeon, United States Army, as per act of Congress approved May 23, 1908, $1,500.

For amount required to make monthly payment to Mabel H. Lazear, widow of Jesse W. Lazear, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, as per act of Congress approved May 23, 1908, $1,500.

Amount required to make monthly payments of $100 to John R. Kissinger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, also late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, $1,200.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, merely for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what these appropriations are for.

Mr. HAY. As to these appropriations I will say to the gentleman these three claims were allowed originally on the Army bill and have always been carried on the Army bill since. They are persons who were experimented upon down in Cuba for yellow fever.

Mr. KAHN. They sacrificed their lives.

Mr. HAY. Two of them did, and the other is a cripple.

Mr. MOORE. The sum total is a yearly payment?

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is $1,500 in two cases and $1,200 in the other.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, composed of two battalions of four companies each:

Pay of officers, $67,100.

For additional pay for length of service, $10,237.01.

Pay of enlisted men, $141,060.

Additional pay for length of service, $30,220.12.

Provided, That the present captains and lieutenants of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry shall be recommissioned as captains and lieutenants of Infantry, in their present respective grades, to take rank on the lineal list of officers of Infantry immediately after officers of the same grade whose total commissioned service is equal to or exceeds theirs.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if this is not new legislation, and, if so, why it is put in the bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is new legislation; and I will say to the gentleman the reason for it is this: These officers now in this Porto Rican regiment are a part of the Regular Army now. But under the provisions of law they are confined to the Porto Rican regiment and can not be transferred to any other command, can not be promoted, and have to remain captains all during their service. And the committee thought that that was a bad condition of affairs, and that these men, who are as much a part of the Army as are the other officers of the Army, ought to have the same rights and privileges in the way of being promoted as the officers of the Army at large. And for that reason we transferred them so that they could be. It does not increase the officers of the Army at all. It does not cost a cent more. They have no ambition now and no reason to do anything more than to just perform their duty in a perfunctory way.

Mr. BUTLER. They are a regular part of our military establishment?

Mr. HAY. They are a regular part of the Army, and they occupy a very anomalous position.

Mr. BUTLER. I wonder why the law was passed depriving them of their right to promotion by reason of being officers in the Porto Rican Army?

Mr. HAY. My recollection is that when we took Porto Rico we raised this provisional regiment down there for the purpose more of education than anything else. And we detailed some officers—captains, and first lieutenants, and so forth—and the result has been that they have remained there from that time to the present. Now, the two majors and lieutenant colonel are detailed from the line of the Army, and they serve four years.

Mr. BUTLER. And their promotion occurs along with the other officers?

Mr. HAY. Along with the other officers, and we do not see why these officers should not have the same privilege as other officers of the Army.

Mr. WEBB. Who promotes these officers, Congress or the War Department?

Mr. HAY. They are promoted under the law of seniority.

Mr. WEBB. My information was that these officers were sent out there as first and second lieutenants in Porto Rico, and the War Department by an order advanced them to captains, and so forth, and they now want Congress to pay these promoted officers as captains in the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no. They get now exactly the same pay as do captains in the Regular Army. They get the same pay, the same allowances, and have the same right of retirement.

Mr. WEBB. Does not this provision increase the pay of these men?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. WEBB. Can you increase a rank without increasing the pay?

Mr. HAY. You do not increase the rank.

Mr. WEBB. Then what is the use of the legislation?

Mr. HAY. Because under the present law they can only be promoted to the grade of captain, and they can not go beyond that. The law provides they shall have the same rights as any captain now in the Army, but does not promote them. But when there is a vacancy in the rank, for instance, of captain, then one of these lieutenants may be promoted to a captaincy, in the Fourth Regiment or Fifth Regiment, or any other regiment where the vacancy occurs, and one of these captains, when there is a vacancy in a majority can be promoted to that majority, but it does not increase the number of officers at all.

Mr. WEBB. Nor increase their pay?

Mr. HAY. Nor does it increase their pay.

Mr. WEBB. If that is the case, I make no point of order against the new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the status of all officers of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry recommissioned in accordance with the provisions of the preceding section shall be in every respect that of all other officers of Infantry of like grades, and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and that nothing in these provisions shall be so construed as to increase the total number of officers now authorized by law.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Are any of these officers native Porto Ricans?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I think they are.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many?

Mr HAY. About 13 or 14.

Mr. GOULDEN. Have they made good records in the service?

Mr. HAY. Yes. That is one of the best commands in the Army.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that these men have a splendid standing in the Army. They draw down more extra pay for marksmanship than any other branch of the Army, these Porto Ricans.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am very glad to hear it. I understand they are excellent marksmen and good soldiers.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not clearly understand the section that has just been read as to the status of new appointments of officers to the Porto Rican Regiment. Will it follow, after these captains and lieutenants have been advanced, that the vacancies will be filled as vacancies in other regiments would be filled?

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. Would they be filled from the second lieutenants as vacancies in other regiments are filled?

Mr. HAY. Yes. It puts them on the same plane as all the rest of the regiments of the Army.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman certain of that?

Mr. HAY. I am. The provisions in regard to the recommissioning of these men are very clear there, but it seems to me the proposition as to the filling of the vacancies that would be created is not so clear. It puts these officers on the same status as other officers, and the vacancies would be filled as they are now, as I understand it. Second lieutenants of the Porto Rican Regiment are appointed after an examination, just as any other second lieutenant is appointed, and I take it that under this law a graduate of West Point could be assigned to a second lieutenancy in this regiment just as in any other regiment where there was a vacancy.

Mr. MONDELL. The only doubt I had in reading this language is this: It seems to relate to individuals who are now holding commissions in the Porto Rican Regiment. Query: What would be the status of the men hereafter commissioned in the Porto Rican Regiment?

Mr. HAY. Well, if the gentleman will observe, on page 17 it is provided there that—the status of all officers of the Porto Rican Regiment of Infantry recommissioned in accordance with the provisions of the preceding section shall be in every respect that of all other officers of infantry of like grades, and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed—

And so forth.

Mr. MONDELL. That is undoubtedly clear. That refers to those who would be recommissioned.

Mr. HAY. I think there is something in the gentleman's contention. I do not think this provision as framed——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman look into that question before the bill becomes a law?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that what the gentleman desires to do is to make provision for the men already in the Porto Rican Regiment?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And this language does that?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Query: Does it also establish a status in the regiment, so that officers hereafter going into the regiment will pass on up through the grades?

Mr. HAY. I do not think it does, and I am very much obliged to the gentleman for calling my attention to it; and I will try before the bill is passed to frame some provision that will meet that situation. It ought to be met.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask either the chairman [Mr. HAY] or the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a question. Was there not a sort of understanding here three or four years ago that this regiment was to be mustered out of the service?

Mr. HAY. I have never heard of it.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; the effort was made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know I tried to force the muster out several times.

Mr. KAHN. The House voted to continue it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know. I recall that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] was managing this thing, and he said that it was a good thing for a few years to train up these officers and have a regiment of Porto Ricans who could serve in the Army. Was not that the case?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. There was an effort, I recall, to muster out this regiment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The House voted me down twice. I recollect that.

Mr. KAHN. It was shown that the Porto Ricans were exceedingly proud of this regiment; that it had always acquitted itself with remarkable ability; that it was one of the fixtures of the island, and that the natives of Porto Rico would look with a good deal of disfavor upon the disbandment of that regiment; and the House voted to continue it. That is my recollection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I recollect they rolled me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendments will be considered withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

For pay of officers: For 52 captains, $124,800.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the Speaker in regard to the Porto Rican Regiment recalls the fact to my mind that there was some difference of opinion in regard to that regiment. I recollect the incident very clearly, because I was one of those who believed that we should continue this regiment, and the reasons I gave were practically the reasons that have been so well stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who has just spoken.

The people of Porto Rico have been very proud of this regiment. They like to think of it as their regiment. The Porto Ricans have shown what good and loyal and patriotic soldiers they are by their conduct toward this regiment, and the regiment has clearly demonstrated its right to continue as a part of our armed forces by the magnificent record it has made.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. This regiment stands in the same relationship to Porto Rico that the English shire regiments stand to the English Army. In England a certain regiment is located in a certain county or shire. It bears the name of that county, and the people of that county take a special pride in it. This Porto Rican regiment is held in the same esteem by the natives of Porto Rico as the English regiment is held in the county that gives its name to its military organization. The English regiment is recruited largely in the shire after which it is named, just as the Porto Rican regiment is recruited in Porto Rico.

Mr. MONDELL. The regiment has certainly reflected great credit upon itself and upon the people of Porto Rico, and I think has thoroughly justified the efforts that were put forth to retain it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question, in order that I may be informed?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. There are 52 captains, at $124,800. They are no part of our Military Establishment, are they?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; the Philippine Scouts are a part of the Army, and these captains were noncommissioned officers in the Regular Army before they were appointed captains of the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. BUTLER. You pay them here instead of paying them in another part of the bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Why are they not paid as the others are paid?

Mr. KAHN. These men were noncommissioned officers in the Regular Army. They hold commissions in this regiment, but not in the Regular Army, and they do not get the pay of captains in the Regular Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia: For paying the expenses of the Organized Militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1916, $1,250,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send the amendment to the desk, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 16, on page 18, insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter the allotment to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, from the annual appropriation made by section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, shall be available for the purposes specified by law only under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War to secure effective organizational, field, or camp service for instruction and generally increased field efficiency on the part of the Organized Militia."

Mr. KAHN. I reserve a point of order, and ask the chairman of the committee to explain the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, that has been suggested by the Secretary of War to meet a decision of the comptroller. I will read what the Secretary of War has to say about it:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
DIVISION OF MILITIA AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 3, 1914.

Hon. JAMES HAY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAY: Herewith I am inclosing a memorandum which may be of service to you as a résumé of the reasons for the legislation requested by the Secretary of War in his letter of January 29, 1914, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and about which I conferred with you this morning. With kind regards, I remain,

Very truly, yours,
A. L. MILLS.

(One inclosure.)

MEMORANDUM IN EXPLANATION OF THE NECESSITY OF ADDITIONAL LEGISLATION TO INSURE THE PROPER EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS APPROPRIATED UNDER SECTION 1661, REVISED STATUTES.

1. A late decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury reversing a contrary opinion of the Auditor for the War Department leaves the Secretary of War powerless to exercise the necessary control over the expenditure of Federal appropriations by the Organized Militia under section 1661, Revised Statutes, to insure their expenditure for the purposes specified by law.

2. That such supervision of the expenditure of these appropriations by the Secretary of War is necessary becomes evident from an examination of actual examples of expenditure by the State authorities in the past. A statement of striking examples has been compiled and many other similar, but less striking, cases are available.

3. Section 14 of the militia law provides pay, subsistence, and transportation for such portion of the Organized Militia as usually engage in actual field or camp service for instruction at State encampments. The purpose of this provision is to improve the field training of the Organized Militia. The field reports of this service submitted in compliance with the law makes frequent mention of the impossibility of giving proper field training, in many cases due to:

(a) The large number of recruits and uninstructed men with the organizations.

(b) The numerical weakness of companies.

(c) The consolidation of weak companies of regiments so as to bring companies to the strength which will permit of field instruction.

(d) The lack of control of officers and noncommissioned officers over the men of companies so consolidated.

(e) The presence at camp of officers of high rank, whose presence interferes with the performance of their duties by the commanders and staff officers of the organizations in camp, thus preventing the latter from getting that practical training in command and administration for which the camp was constituted.

4. In the very important matter of target practice the reports of the adjutant generals of the several States show that for five years prior to 1912 the average of enlisted men armed with rifles who participated in target practice was only about 66 per cent. The target-practice reports received for the year 1912, the latest on file, show that for this year the average was reduced to 57 per cent, and in this year in 19 States less than 50 per cent of the men armed with the rifle participated in target practice. It is also a fact that in a number of States in which there was little or no instruction in target practice generally among the enlisted men rifle competitions were held, in which an undue proportion of the appropriation allotted for target practice was expended on a few men engaged in try outs for these competitions, the result being that a large portion of the Federal allotment intended to develop target practice throughout the men in the Organized Militia armed with the rifle was expended in the payment of selected competitors. In these cases the end sought was the selection of a rifle team instead of such teams being the means to promote rifle practice generally.

5. These facts were presented to the National Militia Board, composed of officers of the Organized Militia. They formulated and submitted to the Secretary of War regulations to correct the above conditions. These regulations having been approved by the Secretary of War, were embodied in Circular No. 2, War Department, Division of Militia Affairs, series of 1913.

6. Issue was taken with these regulations, and the comptroller's decision referred to above practically nullified them.

7. Section 1661, Revised Statutes, provides the method for the apportionment of the appropriations of that section and the Secretary of War strictly complies with this law in making such apportionments, and such apportionment having been made, the expenditure of the same has been consistently and very properly held by the War Department to be a subject for regulation by the Secretary of War.

8. It is believed that this contention is sound. The decision of the comptroller referred to, however, practically denies it, and this being the case, the only recourse appears to be the amendment of the law referred to. Therefore, this item is submitted giving specific authority to the Secretary of War to provide regulations for the expenditure of the appropriations for the purposes contemplated by law.

Does the gentleman desire any further explanation?

Mr. KAHN. No; I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send the amendment to the amendment to the desk and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of War shall cause to be annually estimated the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of the act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1906, as amended by the act approved May 27, 1908, and no money shall be expended under those acts except as shall from time to time be appropriated."

Mr. KAHN. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HAY. I do not think it is subject to a point of order, because no point of order was made against the other amendment, which was subject to a point of order.

This amendment is not suggested by the War Department, but is my own idea. My purpose in offering the amendment is this: Under the present law we have a permanent annual appropriation of $4,000,000 a year for the Organized Militia. We do not know how this permanent appropriation is spent, and I think that it is a wise thing to have estimates made on that, just as they are made on every other appropriation for military purposes.

Mr. KAHN. If I recall correctly, the so-called Dick militia bill provides how that money shall be spent.

Mr. HAY. There was $2,000,000 under the Dick bill, and $2,000,000 added afterwards.

Mr. KAHN. On the amended Dick bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes. While it provides what the money shall be expended for, yet, as a matter of fact, Congress does not know how it is expended.

Mr. KAHN. I suppose the reports are in the War Department.

Mr. HAY. That may be; but if there were estimates made, then we would know what we were doing. I think it is a wise policy to have this estimated for every year, so that we may know just what we are doing.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the effect of this amendment be to repeal the permanent appropriation?

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. What purpose could be served by having the estimates made, if when they were made the committee had no jurisdiction over them?

Mr. HAY. The committee and Congress would have jurisdiction over them.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is a permanent appropriation, I do not understand that any estimate made by the department could be acted upon by the committee or by the House, except to report the permanent appropriation.

Mr. HAY. In effect this does repeal the permanent appropriation to the extent of requiring estimates to be made, instead of having the money spent now without the knowledge of Congress as to how it is spent.

Mr. MADDEN. Are not reports required to be made to Congress as to how the money is expended?

Mr. HAY. I do not think the law requires that.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, if the amendment of the gentleman is adopted and estimates are made in compliance with the law as proposed, it will then be within the power of the Military Committee and the House and Senate to modify the $4,000,000 appropriation in such manner as it chooses.

Mr. HAY. I think so.

Mr. MADDEN. So that, as a matter of fact, it in effect does away with the permanent appropriation.

Mr. HAY. I think it will result in a saving and in a more efficient Organized Militia, and it will result in our knowing just what this money is being expended for.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree with the gentleman entirely that we ought to know exactly what the money is being expended for in every instance, and I have always felt that permanent appropriations were dangerous things, anyhow.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. I was going to say to the gentleman from Illinois that, of course, if the estimates submitted to Congress show that the $4,000,000 was too much money Congress can change the law so that a smaller amount will be appropriated.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course Congress can change the law, anyway, without any such information. All I desired was to elicit the information of the chairman of the committee whether the purpose of the amendment was to give the committee jurisdiction over the estimates and appropriation now provided for in this permanent law.

Mr. HAY. That is the purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the amendment reported as it will read when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the entire amendment as it will read when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 16, on page 18, insert the following:

Provided, That hereafter the allotment to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia from the annual appropriation made by section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, shall be available for the purposes specified by law only under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War to secure effective organizational, field, or camp service for instruction and generally increased field efficiency on the part of the Organized Militia. Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of War shall cause to be annually estimated the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of the act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1906, as amended by the act approved May 27, 1908, and no money shall be expended under those acts except as shall from time to time be appropriated.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman one more question—whether the embodiment of this amendment into the law is really not intended to give the Secretary of War the power to withhold from the State militia the right to any of the funds appropriated except upon condition that they comply with all the requirements to keep up a standard of efficiency?

Mr. HAY. No; I had no such purpose. My purpose was to get under the control of Congress these permanent appropriations. I will say that the Secretary of War was not advised as to this amendment to the amendment that I have offered. I offered it simply for that purpose, and for the purpose indicated by the gentleman himself. I think with him that permanent appropriations are dangerous.

Mr. MADDEN. It will have the benefit of giving the Secretary of War broader powers in the distribution of the funds to the various State militias if they do not keep up the standard required by the regulations.

Mr. HAY. I do not think the amendment would do that.

Mr. MADDEN. I refer to the whole amendment.

Mr. HAY. The other amendment was offered for that purpose, and was sent down by the Secretary of War because of abuses which he shows in the communication.

Mr. MADDEN. Under the law, as it exists to-day, is the Secretary of War required to pay all State militia regardless of whether they keep up a standard of regulation or not?

Mr. HAY. That is the decision of the comptroller, and that is the purpose of this change.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the whole amendment is a salutary one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence of the Army: Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the Army as guides and scouts, and military convicts at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army: Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended for supplying meals or furnishing commutation of rations to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the Organized Militia who may be competitors in the national rifle match: And provided further, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress shall be incurred. For payments: Of commutation of rations to the cadets at the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration, at the rate of 30 cents per ration; of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in departments and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest, male and female nurses on leaves of absence, applicants for enlistment, and military convicts while traveling under orders; of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, at 40 cents per ration, and for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, and military convicts sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration and at other general hospitals 40 cents per ration are authorized for enlisted patients therein) to be paid to the surgeon in charge; advertising; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army, $9,139,666.39.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 21, line 2, by changing the period at the end of the line and insert a colon, and add the following proviso: "Provided, That the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps shall be permitted to purchase subsistence supplies at the same price as is charged the officers and enlisted men of the Army."

Mr. HAY. To that I make a point of order.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, this is no more than fair to the officers and men of the Navy and the Marine Corps. In Manila, where we have no Navy storehouses, officers and sailors are charged 10 to 20 per cent more than are the soldiers and officers of the Army. We ask that this be corrected. I will send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the Quartermaster's Department which will explain it.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF THE QUARTERMASTER CORPS,
Washington, February 28, 1914.

Hon. J. M. LEVY, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In further reply to your telephone call of yesterday, relative to the payment by Navy Department officers and enlisted men of 10 to 20 per cent more for supplies in Manila than is paid by officers and enlisted men of the Army:

It should be stated in the above connection that the law under which subsistence supplies are sold to officers and enlisted men of the Army as contained in the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stats., 108), requires "That hereafter all sales of subsistence supplies to officers and enlisted men shall be made at cost price only." But the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stats., 1047), under which sales are made by the Quartermaster Corps to other departments, bureaus, and employees of the Government, provides:

"That hereafter when, under the Army Regulations, subsistence supplies are furnished to another bureau of the War Department, or to another executive department of the Government or employees thereof, payment therefor shall be made in cash by the proper disbursing officer of the bureau, office, or department concerned or by the employee to whom the sale is made. When the transaction is between two bureaus of the War Department, the price to be charged shall be the contract or invoice price of the supplies. When the transaction is between the subsistence department and another executive department of the Government or employees thereof, the price to be charged shall include the contract or invoice price and 10 per cent additional to cover wastage in transit and the cost of transportation."

Trusting that the above information is what is desired,

Very respectfully,

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Chief Quartermaster Corps, United States Army.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman whether the officers of the Army have the privilege of buying subsistence supplies and other supplies from the storehouses of the Navy Department at the same price that they themselves have?

Mr. LEVY. I understand they do, but I can not assert it positively. I do not think the Government of the United States ought to charge anything in the nature of profit to the sailors and officers of the Navy.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prisons; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, in the field, and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, for contract surgeons and acting dental surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts, for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902; for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries, including bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto, and the repair thereof; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and officers at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; authorized issues of soap; for hire of employees; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; commercial newspapers, market reports, etc.; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage, salt, and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry, the batteries of Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted; for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, and for labor and expenses incident thereto; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Quartermaster Corps, certificates for discharged soldiers and for printing department orders and reports: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster Corps shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done at the Government Printing Office, or by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition, and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the purchase of material and hire of the necessary labor for the purpose. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, whenever the ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants shall not come in competition with private enterprise for sale to the public, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War it becomes necessary to the economical use and administration of such ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants as have been or may hereafter be established in pursuance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law; and any sums remaining after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid, $7,700,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, page 22, line 19, after the word "forth" and before the semicolon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 19, before the semicolon which follows the word "forth," insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter subscriptions to newspapers, magazines, periodicals, and other publications purchased from funds of the Quartermaster Corps may be paid for in advance."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, my attention was called to this by the gentleman from New York [Mr. UNDERHILL]. The fact is that funds provided in this paragraph can not be spent for newspapers, magazines, and so forth, because of this provision in the law, section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

No advance of public money shall be made in any case whatever. And in all cases of contracts for the performance of any service or the delivery of articles of any description for the use of the United States, payment shall not exceed the value of the service rendered or of the articles delivered previously to such payment.

They are unable to pay any subscription in advance. The result is that they can not get them at all, and this amendment simply cures that situation.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Also by paying in advance or in a club they could get them at a considerable discount?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. So that it is a great advantage to enable them to do so?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Page 21, line 21, amend by striking out the word "and" after the word "officers," and by striking out the word "for" after the word "men," and by inserting a comma after the word "officers."

So that the section will read:

For furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, enlisted men, contract surgeons, and acting dental surgeons—

And so forth.

Mr. Chairman, a year ago we had this same question up, and so long as I am a Member of Congress I am going to keep it before this House until I can get enough Members here to listen to me and pass upon it once and for all.

Mr. HAY. What does the amendment do? I do not see that it changes the present law?

Mr. WEBB. It simply provides for heat and light commutation where officers are stationed at public quarters, and would strike out heat and light commutation where commutation of quarters is allowed. A year ago I offered the following amendment, and it was adopted by the Committee of the Whole, and I thought at that time that it had the sympathy of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation or any other appropriation shall be expended in payment for heat and light for quarters of officers who receive commutation of quarters.

This amendment I now offer is simple, but it reaches the same end. My object is to confine heat and light commutation to those officers who occupy quarters at Government quarters, because when they are not stationed there they received $12 per month commutation for each room, the number of rooms varying according to the grade of each officer, a captain receiving four, at $12 a month; a colonel, seven; and so forth; and my contention is that they ought not to receive heat and light commutation when they have commutation of quarters. I feel, however, Mr. Chairman, that it is almost a travesty, a farce, that out of 435 Members of Congress I am compelled to discuss this question before 25 or 30, because that is all there are now on this floor.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, I think there are about 40 here.

Mr. WEBB. That is not much better. I have always contended that the act of 1907 meant just exactly what the Auditor for the War Department in 1908 said it meant, and that is that wherever an officer is stationed at a public barracks the Government furnishes him rooms and heat and light in kind—that is, it gives him those necessary things—but that wherever he is detailed to service in Washington or any other city without troops he receives $12 a month for room rent for each room, and that it was not intended that he should receive, in addition to that, commutation for heat and light. That was what the auditor decided in 1908, and I shall read what he said:

The authorized allowance for quarters of officers and enlisted men is the allowance of quarters actually assigned to them in accordance with law and regulations.

That is, at public quarters.

The light and heat to be paid by the United States is strictly limited by law to that which is actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men. Where there is no allowance for quarters, as authorized by law and regulations, there can be no payment for heat and light. I am therefore of opinion, and so decide, that there can be no legal payment by the United States for heat and light actually necessary and actually used for the authorized allowance, etc., unless quarters have been assigned to them, as provided by law and regulation, and that there can be no such payment for heat and light for quarters occupied by officers who have been paid or are entitled to be paid commutation of quarters for the same period.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. However, that very sensible ruling of the auditor was set aside by a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, I believe Mr. Mitchell, and ever since that day an officer has not only been getting his $12 a month per room for quarters, according to his rank, but in addition thereto he has been getting commutation of heat and light, which amounts to a tremendous sum all over the United States.

Congress never intended that sort of proposition. Congress intended to give heat and light and quarters to men occupying Government quarters. Men who do not occupy public stations, who are detailed to service in Washington or any other city where no public quarters are available, were intended to be paid, as a substitute for those things, $12 per month per room, according to their rank—for a captain four, for a colonel seven, and so forth—but this Comptroller of the Treasury ruled that officers were not only entitled to commutation of quarters, but to commutation of heat and light in addition, just as if they were at public quarters. At public quarters the Government, furnishing them heat and light in kind, actually gives it to them, but over here you pay them a certain amount of money for heat and light, based on the old cordwood proposition, and cordwood varies in price, according to these estimates, from $3.40 here to about $18 in Spain. I will come to that a little later. This Congress ought to make itself understood upon this question. If we intend to give these officers $12 a month for each room occupied and in addition thereto all of this heat and light allowance, we ought to say so. We ought not to have comptroller-made law. I assert that the Auditor of the Treasury Department put that proposition so clearly that any Member of Congress can read it and know that the act of 1907 never intended to give commutation of heat and light in addition to commutation of quarters.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my friend yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask if the gentleman has any idea what that amounts to? I heard him a moment ago say there is quite a large amount of quarters' allowance. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any idea what it amounts to, say, in 1913?

Mr. WEBB. I will state to my friend it is hard to estimate. This business of detailing officers has been growing from $303,000 two years ago to $500,000 now. It is the finest "pickings" an officer can have. In fact, a few years ago there was so much detail business in this city that Congress had to pass a law forbidding a detail for a term of more than four years. We have, I understand, 4,500 or 4,700 officers in the United States, and on the average 950 to 1,000 of them are taken away from their jobs and are put on this detailed service, when they get rooms, rent, light, heat, horse, and the rest of it.

Mr. GOULDEN. According to the gentleman's statement, it is a soft snap to be thus detailed?

Mr. WEBB. It is; it is a good job; it is fine.

Mr. GOULDEN. I heard something read or stated to the effect that an amendment of this character had been passed in the Committee of the Whole last year.

Mr. WEBB. It did. I offered it.

Mr. GOULDEN. What became of it?

Mr. WEBB. One afternoon, in the Committee of the Whole, we passed such an amendment. We voted upon it and passed it. Overnight I am informed—and I believe it is so—the Bureau of Engineers, or some one in that office, got busy and sent down a hurry call to Members of Congress; my friend, Mr. LEVY, I suppose, had one of them, and sent a statement showing what an injustice it would be—I know my friend over here, Mr. LEVY, showed me one out in the lobby—and when the Members walked in the next morning, when the final vote was being taken on roll call, when the Speaker asked if a separate vote was demanded, my friend from New York, Mr. LEVY, demanded a separate vote on the heat and light proposition. Then the roll call proceeded. My mouth was closed; no man could get up and say why the Committee of the Whole had put that amendment in, and as the men walked in the door, one man after the other, they were told to vote to sustain the Committee on Military Affairs, and they voted against the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GOULDEN. My friend would not insinuate that my colleague from New York, Mr. LEVY, had been seen overnight by some interested parties.

Mr. WEBB. No; I said overnight the Bureau of Engineers got busy because I saw some of the statements they issued.

Mr. LEVY. I desire to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that it was entirely my move. I noticed it in the papers, and no one ever asked me, no one made any suggestion to me in regard to it, but I knew it was so unfair and unjust that I made the motion. May I not ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question? Does not the gentleman know that these allowances are only granted when the Government can not supply these quarters?

Mr. WEBB. No——

Mr. LEVY. It is the case.

Mr. WEBB. I want to say——

Mr. LEVY. That is the case, and they have to pay if there are not other quarters; I know of some cases in the Philippines where they have to pay $75 for a house when they only receive $50.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. GOULDEN. If my friend will pardon me, I am delighted to hear my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from New York, state that he had not been seen by anyone, nor influenced by anyone, overnight, because I think he goes to bed early; therefore, he must have been seen, if at all, pretty early in the evening. Aside from this, my colleague is an independent sort of a man, who makes up his own mind.

Mr. WEBB. I know the Bureau of Engineers got busy with a statement—I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] had one—to the effect that this would be very injurious to that department.

Mr. LEVY. I had nothing from the department to influence me.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman desire to cut out of the bill the provision appropriating money for the purchase of light and fuel for the officers and men of the Army?

Mr. WEBB. No; I am limiting the purchase of light and fuel to officers of the Army who are stationed at public quarters.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman know that the provision for light and quarters there was promulgated way back in 1888?

Mr. WEBB. At Army posts, but not for men who receive commutation of quarters.

Mr. KAHN. And that ever since then the matter has been regulated by the department, and that it is absolutely necessary?

Mr. HAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. Has the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina been read from the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 21, insert a comma after the word "officers," and strike out the word "and" after the word "officers" and strike out the word "for" after the word "men," so that the lines will read:

"For furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, enlisted men, contract surgeons, and acting dental surgeons, when stationed at and occupying," etc.

Mr. WEBB. That is the same amendment in effect that the committee adopted a year ago.

Mr. HAY. I accept that amendment.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. LEVY. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] accept the amendment?

Mr. HAY. I accepted the amendment, because in my judgment it does not have any effect on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Then I move to strike out the last word. I have been very much interested in the heroic fight which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] has been making for the purpose of reducing the allowance to officers in the matter of commutation of quarters. He has offered an amendment which, as I understand it, is the culmination of this heroic contest, and I am reminded of a jingle I used to hear when I was a boy, to the effect that—

King Henry, with a hundred thousand men,
Marched them up the hill and then marched down again.

I have been very much interested in what the gentleman said, and had almost persuaded myself to agree with him. Imagine my intense disappointment when, after having read his amendment, I discovered it leaves the bill just as it was before the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman will read the bill again, he will find it does not do any such thing, because it confines heat and light commutation to officers stationed at public quarters.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the next time the gentleman makes such a heroic fight he will offer a really effective amendment, for I am well satisfied the amendment he has offered does not cure this evil at all, if evil it be, and I am rather inclined to think it is an evil.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. You can not get that kind on.

Mr. MONDELL. Somebody suggests this is the only kind of amendment that could be adopted, and in that event possibly the gentleman is justified in offering it. He had an amendment adopted at the end of his long and wordy contest, and if it pleases him I suppose the balance of us should be happy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I had an object in offering this amendment, of course, and if the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will read the bill he will see that by striking out the words "for" and "and," it provides commutation for heat and light for officers who are stationed at public quarters, and nowhere else, and that is what I am contending for. My contention is that when they are detailed away from public quarters and on detail duty the Government pays them $12 a month per room, according to rank, which is to take the place of heat and light and the rest of it. Now, I want to give my reasons for offering this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] that the discussion is irregular. The amendment has been adopted.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman has offered his amendment, and it has been adopted, and if he is satisfied with it I do not see the necessity for further discussion.

Mr. WEBB. I am satisfied with it and it does the very thing I want done; but I would like to make a five-minutes statement on why I urged it. I am not going to give you all the information I have, because it would take too long.

Mr. KAHN. Can not the gentleman insert it in the RECORD?

Mr. WEBB. No; I would rather the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] would hear it.

Take the quarters of 15 officers out here at the Highlands and see just what their heat and light and room rent amount to.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to inject myself into this thing, but I think the regular order ought to be called for, and I call for it.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, well, I hope the gentleman will not become so captious as that. I suppose there is no man in this House who has taken up so little time of the Congress as I have, and if the gentleman objects to me proceeding for five minutes I think we will stop further consideration of this bill for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rather regards this as proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman says he has some papers that will throw light on this thing, and which he does not desire to read. I suggest that he insert them in the RECORD.

Mr. WEBB. I want to show the gentleman some facts as gathered from the papers.

Mr. KAHN. We would like to read them.

Mr. WEBB. I want to show how these heat and light allowances have been abused. I do not think the gentleman would care to hear or read what I say. Out at the Highlands in this city there are 15 officers, whose total yearly salary is $59,028, and their total yearly allowance for heat and light is $4,800. They draw for heat and light $4,800 per year in the Highlands apartment house, and for room rent they draw $11,233, or a total of $75,000 for salary, heat, light, and rooms. This does not include allowances for horses.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Can the gentleman state what those officers pay for room rent at the Highlands?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know. There are 15 officers, and they are receiving commutation pay for 78 rooms, at $12 per month for each room, or $936 a month.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The 15 officers pay $900 a month?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know what they actually pay, but the Government allows them that, though they may occupy only 50 rooms or less.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think 15 officers can get rooms there for that much per month?

Mr. WEBB. I think that amount for heat and light would almost heat the entire apartment house.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. These officers get $50 a month for heat?

Mr. WEBB. No; they get $401.10 per month for heat and light. I think 15 men could live very well in 78 rooms at a cost of $1,337 per month to the Government for rooms and heat and light alone.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman believe they could get apartments at the Highlands for $50 a month?

Mr. WEBB. That is for a room.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman mean furnished rooms?

Mr. WEBB. No; unfurnished rooms.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The total paid there is $900 a month?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; $936.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think they can go there and rent apartments for less than that?

Mr. WEBB. I certainly do. These 15 officers are allowed by the Government $11,233 a year for room rent at the Highlands.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I lived at the Highlands for about seven years, and I can say to the gentleman that you can not rent any rooms at the Highlands for an average of less than $25 for each room per month. If they are allowed $12, they still pay $13 more than they get per month.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, you can get unfurnished rooms much cheaper than that; and while a colonel is allowed pay for seven rooms at $12 per month, not many of them have need for or use so many. At the Army and Navy Club 11 officers are paid $201 a month for heat and light alone. I want to insert in the RECORD an admirable, luminous, and unanswerable opinion of the present Comptroller of the Treasury, Mr. George E. Downey, on this subject.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 31, 1914.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: On the 23d day of September, 1913, a decision of this office was rendered on a submission by the Auditor for the War Department, which, for reasons therein stated, was not final as to the questions involved, and in that connection I now have your letter of December 31, 1913, transmitting, with your approval, a report made by the Chief Quartermaster Corps bearing on the subject.

The question presented was as to the validity of certain Army regulations authorizing the payment of designated amounts as the heat allowance of officers occupying quarters other than public, not heated by a separate plant or for which it is impracticable to furnish fuel in kind.

The auditor's submission of an original construction of a statute for approval, disapproval, or modification was as follows:

"In the examination of the accounts of disbursing officers of the Quartermaster Corps a question arises as to the legality of paragraphs 1052 and 1060 of the Army Regulations of 1910.

"Paragraph 1060 prescribes the quantity of fuel, measured in cords of oak wood, to which each officer occupying a number of rooms to which his rank entitles him is entitled to draw in kind, and furnishes the basis to commute such fuel allowance when not drawn in kind or measured by a separate heating plant.

"Paragraph 1052 reads as follows:

"'1052. Each officer or noncommissioned officer entitled to the occupying public quarters, or quarters other than public, which are heated by a separate plant, will be furnished at the expense of the United States with the quantity of fuel set forth in the table of allowances, paragraph 1060. This allowance may be considered accumulative within a fiscal year, and any excess of allowance appearing as overdrawn by an officer at the end of a fiscal year will be paid for at contract price. Where an officer or noncommissioned officer is occupying quarters other than public, not heated by a separate plant, or for which it is impracticable to furnish fuel in kind, the Quartermaster's Department will pay the owner or authorized agent of such quarters for the heat at the rate of $4 a cord for the fuel allowance for the number of rooms to which the rank of the officer or noncommissioned officer entitles him, as set forth in the table of allowances, paragraph 1060.'

"This regulation was amended by changes in Army Regulations No. 6, dated June 22, 1912, by adding the following:

"'Where an officer or noncommissioned officer on detached service in a foreign country occupies quarters other than public, the Quartermaster's Department will pay the owner or authorized agent of such quarters for the heat furnished in accordance with the prescribed allowance for the number of rooms to which the rank of the officer or noncommissioned officer entitles him, at the local rates at the place where he is serving.'

"Prior to March 2, 1907, the Army Regulations provided for the sale of fuel to officers for the authorized number of rooms occupied as quarters, as provided in paragraph 1051 of the Army Regulations of 1904. Paragraph 1043 of the Regulations of 1904 reads as follows:

"'1043. Officers may purchase from the Quartermaster's Department the fuel actually needed for their own use. For the quantity allowed them in the table contained in paragraph 1051 they will pay at the rate of $3 per cord for standard oak wood, or the equivalent thereof in other kinds of fuel as determined by the Quartermaster General. For any additional quantity they shall pay the contract price. Payment will be made at the time of sale.'

"The Army appropriation act of March 2, 1907, under the appropriation 'Barracks and quarters,' provided for an increase in the number of rooms to which each officer was entitled as quarters. (34 Stat., 1168). The same act, under the appropriation for 'Regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department,' provided 'that hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.' (34 Stat., 1167.)

"Immediately after the passage of this act paragraph 1051 of the Army Regulations of 1904 was amended by General Order, No. 61, dated March 22, 1907, to conform therewith, showing the increased number of rooms to which each officer was entitled and increasing the quantity of fuel to which each officer was entitled. Paragraph 1043 of the Army Regulations of 1904 was also amended by General Order, No. 61, dated March 22, 1907, to read as follows:

"'1043. Each officer or noncommissioned officer entitled to and occupying public quarters, or quarters other than public which are heated by a separate plant, will be furnished, at the expense of the United States, with the quantity of fuel set forth in the table of allowances, paragraph 1051. This allowance may be considered accumulative within a fiscal year, provided that the accumulated allowance shall at no time be exceeded. For any additional fuel the officer will pay contract price, payment to be made at the time of sale. Where an officer or noncommissioned officer is occupying quarters other than public, not heated by a separate plant, or for which it is impracticable to furnish fuel in kind, the Quartermaster's Department will pay the owner or authorized agent of such quarters for the heat at a rate of $4 per cord for the fuel allowance for the number of rooms to which the rank of the officer or noncommissioned officer entitles him as set forth in the table of allowances, paragraph 1051.'

"It will be noted that paragraph 1043 of the Army Regulations of 1904 provides for the sale of fuel to officers and fixes the rate to be charged therefor on the basis of $3 per cord for standard oak wood, and that immediately after the passage of the act of March 2, 1907, authorizing the furnishing of heat at the expense of the United States, the value of such wood was fixed at $4 per cord, thereby increasing the value of the officer's allowance for heat 33⅓ per cent, as well as increasing the quantity of fuel proportionate to the increase in the number of rooms to which the officer was entitled.

"The act of March 2, 1907, supra, authorizes the furnishing of the heat and light 'actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men,' and further provides that such heat and light shall be furnished 'under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe,' but nowhere does such law authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe regulations as to the quantity of heat and light that shall be furnished, that being fixed by the law as that actually necessary.

"It is apparent that when officers are in receipt of commutation of quarters and actually occupying quarters which are not heated by a separate plant it is necessary to fix upon some basis by which this allowance shall be paid. The law specifically states that they shall be furnished the heat actually necessary, and any regulation providing for commuting the value of such heat should be based on what experience has determined as a reasonable amount for the number of rooms which are actually occupied, not exceeding the officer's allowance.

"Paragraphs 1052 and 1060 of the Army Regulations of 1910, taken together, authorize a fuel allowance which, it is apparent, is largely in excess of that which is necessary to heat the authorized allowance of quarters for officers of the Army. This may be illustrated by taking the allowance for a lieutenant colonel stationed here in Washington. An officer of this rank is entitled to six rooms, and the maximum fuel allowance for six rooms in the latitude of Washington is 51 cords of oak wood, or 38$\frac{7}{10}$ tons of anthracite coal. The common experience of householders here in the District of Columbia demonstrates that no such quantity of fuel as that specified is required for heating and cooking purposes for living quarters consisting of six rooms. In some cases it is found that officers do draw approximately their full allowance of fuel, but in such cases the officers are found to be occupying quarters consisting of rooms largely in excess of the number authorized by the act of March 2, 1907, supra. I am informed at the Office of the Supervising Architect that the amount of fuel required to heat public buildings in the latitude of Washington is computed on the basis of 1 pound of anthracite coal per cubic foot per season, or in the case of dwellings it is computed on the basis of 1 ton of anthracite coal for each room per season, or 6 tons for six rooms.

"The commuted value of the fuel allowance of an officer of the rank of lieutenant colonel, as above given, and the amount paid to the officer's landlord, when the officer is occupying six or more rooms not heated by a separate plant, is $204. The actual value of 6 tons of anthracite coal delivered here in Washington would approximate $45. Allowing a reasonable amount for gas or other cooking fuel, it is apparent that the total cost of fuel for quarters of six rooms here in Washington would ordinarily not exceed $75 per year.

"While this office has no complete and specific data as to the kind of fuel used and the cost thereof at the various Army posts throughout the United States, yet from the data which has been obtained from disbursing officers' accounts it is apparent that under paragraphs 1052 and 1060 of the Army Regulations of 1910 the value of the allowance of fuel for officers' quarters is at least double that which is actually required anywhere in the United States for the number of rooms such officers are entitled by law to occupy.

"Paragraph 1052, of 1910, as amended by current Army Regulations No. 6, of June 22, 1912, provides that the value of the fuel allowance of an officer serving abroad shall be based on the local rates at the place where serving; hence it follows that the allowance which has been made to such officers since that change in the regulations has been based on the value of oak wood at the several foreign stations. As illustrating this I have before me vouchers in the accounts of C. C. Lansing, captain Fourth Field Artillery, acting quartermaster, military attaché at Madrid, Spain, for payments made to Pedro de la Gala for the fuel allowance of Capt. Lansing during the months of December, 1912, and January and February, 1913, which are based on the rate of 0.0256 centimes per pound, or at the rate of slightly in excess of $18 per cord, the total ammount thus paid being $78.88 per month.

"It is apparent from the price specified as the value of oak wood that oak wood is not a common form of fuel in Madrid, Spain. This basis would give this officer, who is entitled to four rooms, a total of $739 for his fuel allowance per year. That this amount is in excess of that actually necessary is so apparent as to need no argument.

"It has been the practice under the regulations of 1910 cited above to pay the landlord of an officer receiving commutation of quarters, and who is occupying quarters not heated by a separate plant, the full commuted allowance for the number of rooms to which he is entitled in monthly installments. Under the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury of May 26, 1913, and July 30, 1913, this payment is now restricted to the heat for the number of rooms actually occupied by the officer, not exceeding the number authorized by law. The question which has naturally arisen in connection with the amendment of Army Regulation No. 1052 is whether such regulation is a legal one, which the Secretary of War is authorized to promulgate. If the Secretary of War may by regulation legally increase the value of a cord of oak wood from $3 to $4 for officers serving in the United States, and to $18 for officers serving in Madrid, Spain, then there will appear to be no reason why he might not increase that value to $100 per cord. If the regulation prescribing an allowance of 5$\frac{8}{10}$ cords of wood per month to heat the quarters of a lieutenant colonel here in Washington for eight months in the year is legal, then the same authority may issue a regulation authorizing an allowance of 100 cords per month.

"The act of March 2, 1907, supra, provides that officers shall receive the heat allowance actually necessary for their authorized allowance of quarters; and section 1765 of the Revised Statutes provides:

"'No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation.'

"It is apparent from what has been said that the regulations quoted give to officers an allowance for fuel which is more than that actually necessary for heating their authorized allowance of quarters, and to that extent is an extra allowance or compensation, which is prohibited by section 1765, Revised Statutes. The question that is here raised is as to the legality of the regulations which have been issued, granting this allowance. It is conceded that it is ordinarily within the province of the administrative officers to issue necessary regulations, in aid of or to carry out the provisions of a statute. It is apparent that some regulations are necessary in aid of the act of March 2, 1907; but when such regulations are so framed as to give officers an allowance for fuel in excess of that actually necessary for their allowance of quarters, it is believed that such regulations are void and should not be accepted by the accounting officers in the adjudication of accounts involving disbursement of public funds.

"I am therefore of the opinion, and so decide, that paragraphs Nos. 1052 and 1060 of the Army Regulations of 1910, so far as they authorize the furnishing of fuel for the use of Army officers in excess of that actually necessary for the quarters they occupy, not exceeding the number of rooms to which they are entitled by law, are void, and that unless said paragraphs are amended by the administrative department so as to fix approximately the value of the heat actually necessary, it is the duty of the accounting officers to fix such allowance, regardless of the regulations in question."

In said decision of September 23, 1913, it was said:

"It has been held repeatedly by this office that the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1167), authorizes the furnishing, at the expense of the United States, of such heat only as is actually necessary to heat the quarters occupied by an officer, and that said act does not authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe an arbitrary amount to be paid in lieu of heat."

But with reference to the auditor's conclusion that, as a matter of fact, the fuel allowances prescribed in said regulation are largely in excess of the quantities actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters, it was also said:

"Upon the evidence now before me I do not feel justified in accepting the auditor's conclusions of fact in this matter, but the subject has been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, and he is investigating the matter with a view to determining whether the quantities of fuel prescribed in paragraph 1060, Army Regulations, 1910, do exceed the quantities actually necessary. Until the Secretary shall have had a reasonable time in which to determine this question of fact and to amend the regulation in question, if found necessary, the accounting officers will continue to assume that the quantities of fuel prescribed in said regulation do not exceed the quantities actually necessary, and that the regulation is therefore in conformity with the law and valid."

The point submitted with reference to the payment of the fuel allowance of an officer on detached service in a foreign country was disposed of as follows:

"Under the recent amendment to paragraph 1052, Army Regulations, 1910 (quoted in the auditor's decision, supra), authorizing the payment of the fuel allowance of an officer on detached service in a foreign country at the local rates at the place where he is serving, I understand that it has been the practice of said officers to compute the allowance at the local price of standard oak wood, regardless of the kind of fuel actually used for heating the officer's quarters or of the fact that such wood is not commonly used as a fuel at the place where he is on duty. This practice is based upon an erroneous interpretation of the regulation. While the only fuel specified in paragraph 1060 is wood, yet the Secretary of War has fixed, by regulation and general orders, the equivalent of a cord of wood in the various other fuels; and the only reasonable interpretation of the amendment in question is to compute the allowance, in a case to which it applies, upon the equivalent of his wood allowance in the fuel actually used to heat his quarters at the local price of such fuel.

"The accounting officers, in auditing vouchers for payment of heat allowances of officers on detached service in foreign countries, will ascertain the kind of fuel actually used in heating the quarters occupied and the local price of such fuel at the time and place of its use, and will allow credits in accordance with the views herein expressed."

In so far as the question submitted was left undecided, pending your investigations and amendment of regulations, if desired, it is now before me, and your letter transmitting the report referred to must be regarded as indicating your continued approval of existing regulations and practices thereunder and your conclusion that said report justifies them.

The paragraphs in question purport to authorize payment of fixed sums per month for the period from September 1 to April 30, according to latitude, the allowances for the zone between 36° and 43° north latitude being as follows: For 10 rooms, $32.50; for 9 rooms, $30; for 8 rooms, $27.50; for 7 rooms, $25; for 6 rooms, $22.50; for 5 rooms, $20; for 4 rooms, $17.50; for 3 rooms, $15; for 2 rooms, $12.50; for 1 room, $6.25. These sums represent the value of the quantity of hard wood prescribed in said regulations as the maximum allowance for the different quarters, respectively, at $4 per cord.

A part of the report of the Chief, Quartermaster Corps, is entirely irrelevant, as it is devoted to an attempt to show that the number of rooms fixed by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1168, 1169), as the authorized allowance of quarters for officers of the various grades is inadequate. That question has been settled by competent authority, and with it we have nothing to do. If it were up for discussion, it might be appropriate to inquire as to the extent to which the mandate of the law is being disregarded.

But a careful study of so much of the report as does tend to show upon what the allowances prescribed in paragraph 1060 were based has convinced me that said allowances were not based upon the quantities of fuel actually required to heat quarters at military posts consisting of the number of rooms which the law provides may be assigned to the officers of each grade, respectively. For instance, the quantity of fuel prescribed in the regulations as a major's authorized allowance is not the quantity which the War Department has by experience found necessary to heat a set of quarters consisting of 5 rooms (a major's authorized allowance of quarters), but is based upon the quantity of fuel required to heat the number of rooms a major is usually permitted to occupy at a military post, namely, from 9 to 16 rooms.

Table 8 of the report submitted (pp. 16 to 18) shows the actual consumption of coal at various posts—taking from one to four buildings at a post—in field officers' quarters for the period from September 1, 1911, to April 30, 1912, and the following averages are obtained:

	Pounds.
North of 43° north latitude (17 posts), per building	69,113
Between 43° and 36° north latitude (29 posts), per building	61,541
South of 36° north latitude (6 posts), per building	49,010

Table IX of same report (pp. 18 to 21) contains like data with reference to line officers' quarters (captains and lieutenants), and the averages shown are as follows:

	Pounds.
North of 43° N. latitude (17 posts), per building	46,659
Between 43° and 36° N. latitude (30 posts), per building	43,959
South of 36° N. latitude (7 posts), per building	37,318

I have before me reports showing the number of rooms in each set of quarters at 15 different military posts in the United States, and from an examination of them I find that field officers' quarters average more than 10 rooms per set, and that line officers' quarters (except bachelors' quarters) average more than 8 rooms per set.

The allowances prescribed in the regulations for the period from September 1 to April 30, north of 43° N. latitude (stated in hard coal equivalents) are as follows:

For two rooms (second lieutenant), 45,336 pounds; for three rooms (first lieutenant), 54,400 pounds; for four rooms (captain), 63,464 pounds; for five rooms (major), 72,536 pounds; for six rooms (lieutenant colonel), 81,600 pounds; for seven rooms (colonel), 90,664 pounds.

A comparison of these figures with those given in tables VIII and IX, supra, will show that the allowances prescribed in the regulations for line officers entitled to two, three, or four rooms exceed the quantities actually used to heat eight rooms and that the quantities prescribed as the allowances for field officers entitled to five, six, or seven rooms exceeds the quantities used to heat 10 or more rooms.

The fuel allowances prescribed in the regulations for eight rooms (which appears to be the average number usually occupied by line officers at military posts) for the season from September 1 to April 30, as compared with the quantities used in such quarters as shown by table IX, supra, is as follows:

	South of 36°.	Between 36° and 43°.	North of 43°.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Allowance	74,800	93,404	99,726
Used	37,318	43,949	46,659

It has also been observed in auditing heat vouchers of officers occupying quarters other than public heated by separate plant that the entire quantities prescribed in the regulations for the respective grades are seldom, if ever, used even when the officers actually occupy and heat several more rooms than their authorized allowance.

In a recent case before this office there was involved the cost of moving from the premises formerly occupied by a naval officer a quantity of coal remaining from that drawn by him during the preceding fiscal year within his allowance, and notwithstanding such coal had been used as was needed during two months of the next succeeding year—not heating months—there yet remained to be moved 19,900 pounds of coal.

But, reverting again to the report in question, I can not but note the peculiar division of the years and the fact that inferentially it requires four times as much fuel to supply the needs of an Army officer on the first day of September as is required on the day before.

Of course allowances of fuel can not be made to fit the needs of each day or week and possibly not accurately made as to each month, but common knowledge as well as common sense tells us that there is no justification for a "winter allowance" of fuel eight months in the year and a "summer allowance" four months in this latitude. When fuel is being furnished in kind this division of the year is not of particular consequence, for we may assume that an Army officer is not going to heat his house in September when he probably does not need any heat just for the sake of consuming the fuel, but when it comes to paying him for the fuel instead of furnishing it in kind the absurdity of the situation is apparent.

Why pay a man the hard cash as commutation of fuel on the basis of a winter allowance for eight months of the year when we know that in this latitude there are approximately three months of the eight in which he needs no heat at all? Much of that time nature gives us more than we care for.

And add to that the fact that, with slight modification, the same thing holds good in the southern zone (below 36° N. Lat.) extending into the country where the fortunate may bask in the sunshine during the winter months and go fishing most of the time unhampered even by a coat. Commutation of fuel, on the prescribed winter basis, in the sunny South approaches a gratuity.

But, getting back once more to the report in question, I can not but revert to one of its peculiar statistical arguments.

Much time and labor has been wasted, I think I may say, in determining, from the statistics of the Department of Labor, the amount of average expenditure for fuel by civilians earning from $500 to $1,200 per year and deducing therefrom a conclusion as to the percentage of the earnings of the average wage earner which is expended for fuel, from which is deduced the conclusion that, on the basis of a comparison of incomes, the fuel allowance of a given Army officer is in line with the expenditure for fuel of a mechanic or laboring man and is just about right, and this is said to be so "for exactly the same accommodations." This wonderful theory must mean that the greater a man's income the more fuel is necessary to keep him warm even in "exactly the same accommodations." Putting the conclusion in even figures and carrying it a little further, on the percentage and comparative income theory, we find that if the President of the United States changed domiciles with a $750-a-year mechanic it would take about $3,400 worth of fuel a year to keep the President warm in the same house in which the mechanic had kept comfortable on $34, a difference of a hundred fold in the quantity of heat necessary. These observations are simply for the purpose of demonstrating the value of the report submitted as a justification for the regulations in question.

The fuel allowance authorized by law (act of Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1167) is only that actually necessary to heat the authorized allowance of quarters. And any regulation which attempts to give a greater allowance than that authorized by law is invalid and of no force or effect.

Whatever construction of any part of the law may be attempted or whatever may be attempted by regulation, the plain facts are that Congress has authorized for officers specific quarters according to rank, with "the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters," and the furnishing of quarters in excess of those authorized or of more fuel or light than is "actually necessary" for those quarters is the furnishing of more than is authorized by law, and when commutation is paid on an excessive basis it amounts to an unauthorized increase of compensation.

The accounting officers of the Treasury have no jurisdiction over the assignment of quarters and the issuing of fuel at military posts, but in the settlement of claims or accounts involving payments for heat for quarters other than public they must observe the plain provisions of the law. And since, in view of the facts herein stated, it can no longer be assumed that an officer occupying quarters, other than public, not heated by a separate plant, actually and of necessity used the quantities prescribed in paragraph 1060, Army Regulations, 1910, for the number of rooms occupied and to which his rank entitled him, no allowance whatever can be made for heat in such cases in the absence of satisfactory evidence showing, at least approximately, the quantity of fuel "actually necessary" to heat the quarters occupied.

And in the case of an officer occupying more rooms than his allowance as fixed by law in quarters other than public which are heated by a separate plant, allowance will be made for only such part of the entire amount of fuel used therefor as the number of rooms to which his rank entitles him bears to the whole number of rooms actually occupied. For example, if a major occupies 10 rooms as quarters he would be entitled as his heat allowance to only one-half of the amount of fuel actually consumed, his authorized allowance of quarters being only 5 rooms.

The decision of this office of September 23, 1913 (66 MS. Comp. Dec., 1395), which was intended to remain in force only pending the investigation that has now been made, is superseded by this decision, except as to the holdings quoted with approval herein, and all former decisions of this office in conflict herewith are overruled.

Respectfully,

GEO. E. DOWNEY, Comptroller.

Over in Spain the heat and light privilege is being abused to an amazing degree. In a semitropical country an officer is being paid $78 per month for heat and light—the equivalent of 12 or 15 tons of anthracite coal per month to warm him in a semitropical country. That is why I am opposed to this thing being engrafted on the law by the Comptroller of the Treasury, as was done five or six years ago.

In the Burlington apartment house J. B. Martin, an employee of the War Department, rented a six-room apartment, at $95 per month, and then sublet to four lieutenants one room each. Just what was paid by each lieutenant does not appear, but it may be presumed that it was approximately $15 per month per room. The entire apartment was heated by a separate plant. Martin was paid $74.40 per month on account of heat and light presumably furnished by him. In this case the Government probably paid more for the heat and light for these rooms than the rental value of the rooms heated and lighted. In addition, each of these lieutenants was paid $36 per month for commutation of quarters. Their compensation by reason of this deal was increased to the extent of about $39 per month.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to assure the members of the committee and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] that there is no hidden, secret arrangement about this heat and light matter. It is perfectly clear when it is examined into. I went into the matter very thoroughly when we had it before the committee.

A captain gets as commutation for quarters $44.67 a month; he gets for heat $15.64, and he gets for light $4.16.

A major gets $60 a month as commutation of quarters; he gets $17.48 a month for heat, and he gets $5.20 for light.

A lieutenant colonel gets $72 a month commutation of quarters; he gets $19.32 for heat, and he gets $6.24 for light.

A colonel gets $84 for commutation of quarters; he gets $21.16 for heat, and he gets $7.28 for light.

Mr. WEBB. That is per month?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; per month.

A major general gets $108 per month for commutation of quarters; he gets $24.94 per month for heat and $9.36 for light.

These figures are taken from the records, and they are absolutely accurate, and they apply to all Army officers who receive commutation of quarters. I have read them just to show to the committee that there is nothing strange or hidden or secret about it. It is a matter of law, and it is open to anyone who wants to look into it. I think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] is straining over the matter a little more than he is entitled to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. I would suggest to the gentleman that he extend his remarks by inserting from the hearings pages 264, 265, 266, and a small portion of page 267, containing a full account——

Mr. WEBB. And include also page 268. That is the meat of the whole thing. That shows the salaries, and the commutation of quarters, and the heat and the light, and the horse pay, and everything.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to include as a part of my remarks extracts from the hearings, beginning at the top of page 264 to the bottom of 268.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that in the committee this matter attracted my attention. My recollection is that my attention was attracted to it by the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] here last year, when the military appropriation bill was being considered, and I went into it very vigorously and very fully to find out what the meat of it was. I think it appears from the statements of witnesses in the hearings, and I desire to clear it up before the committee.

Mr. WEBB. I will ask the gentleman whether he ever read the opinion from the Auditor of the Treasury Department as to the act of 1907, as to what was meant for heat and quarters for officers?

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. WEBB. I commend that to the gentleman.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this record shows what these officers do get, and it shows that it is not an unfair amount to be appropriated for commutation of quarters and heat and light for these officers. I am not so sure about forage. Here are the extracts referred to:

NOTE.—The Army Regulations of 1808 were promulgated pursuant to act of March 16, 1802, and were the first regulations in which the allowances of fuel and quarters were prescribed. The allowances were as follows:

Fuel and quarters' allowances for the Army.

Rank of officer.	Number of rooms.	Allowance of fuel in cords of wood per month. From Apr. 1 to Oct. 1.	From Oct. 1 to Apr. 1.	Increase of allowances north of 39° north latitude, from Oct. 1 to Apr. 1.
Commanding general	4	1½	2½
Quartermaster general	4	1	2
Field officer	2	¾	1½
Inspector of Army	3	1	2
Captain	1	½	1
Lieutenant	½	½	1

No compensation was to be paid in lieu of quarters or fuel. Commanding officers, the sick in hospitals, guards, and messes also had allowances

The commanding general was, in his discretion, authorized to increase or diminish the quantity of fuel furnished.

It will be noted (a) that provision was made for an increase for officers stationed north of 39° north latitude of one-half cord for field officers and one-third cord for each of the other grades, and (b) that the year was divided into two equal parts of six months each, the summer season being from April 1 to October 1 and the winter season from October 1 to April 1.

From actual experience it was found necessary to increase the basic allowance, as well as the additional allowances fixed for latitude. The first of these increases was made in 1812, only 4 years after the original allowance was published. Other changes were made at intervals of from 1 to 27 years, between 1812 and 1908.

The following summary shows the average basic allowances and the average percentage of successive changes in same at intervals of from 1 to 27 years, between 1808 and 1908, and also the relative percentage of each increase as compared with the original 1808 allowance:

Base allowances.

Year.	Cords of wood, average annual allowance.	Percentage increase.	Percentage decrease.	Compared with allowance of—	Period covered (years).	Relative percentage increase referred to 1808.	Period covered (years).
1808.....	13.69	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
1812.....	14.94	9	.....	1808	4	9	4
1813.....	17.22	15	.....	1812	1	26	5
1816.....	22.87	33	.....	1813	3	67	8
1821.....	22.00	.....	4	1816	5	61	13
1835.....	28.28	29	.....	1821	14	107	27
1857.....	27.84	.....	1	1835	22	103	49
1881.....	30.38	9	.....	1857	24	121	73
1908.....	39.50	30	.....	1881	27	188	100

Considering the changes in the allowances for latitude in the limits of the latitude which additional amounts of fuel were authorized, and all other changes, together with the basic allowances and changes made therein, the following table shows the percentage of total increase from time to time:

	Period.
1808. First allowances specified in regulations.
1812. Increase of 24 per cent above allowance of 1808	4 years.
1813. Increase of 12 per cent above allowance of 1812	1 year.
1816. Increase of 6 per cent above allowance of 1813	3 years.
1834. Increase of 72 per cent above allowance of 1816	18 years.
1857. Increase of 9 per cent above allowance of 1834	23 years.
1881. Increase of 12 per cent above allowance of 1857	24 years.
1908. Increase of 32 per cent above allowance of 1881	27 years.
1913. Increase of 0 per cent above allowance of 1908	5 years.

The above table covers a period of 105 years, and five of the seven increases were made prior to 1858, or before the Civil War.

The allowances for quarters and fuel are the results of gradual changes caused by the extension of the geographical limits of the country, the growth of the population, the changes in the conditions of service, and the increasing demands of modern life.

The principal changes in allowances of fuel were made between 1808, when the first specific allowances were published, and 1857, or during the first 49 years. From 1857 to 1880 there were no changes in such allowances, but in 1881 an average increase of 12 per cent in fuel was authorized. The next increase, in 1907 (Regulations of 1908), was an average of 32 per cent over the allowances of 1881. The present fuel allowances are the same as those of 1908.

NOTE.—The following table, showing the pay, commutation of quarters, heat, light, and forage allowances of officers, is inserted in response to the request of a member of the committee. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads and other constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for the United States military prison guard, of extra-duty pay at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of War for mess stewards and cooks at recruit depots, who are to be graduates of the schools for bakers and cooks, and instructor cooks at the schools for bakers and cooks; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to officers or agents of the Quartermaster Corps and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; authorized office furniture; authorized issues of towels; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster Corps, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government, and the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster Corps, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States military prison, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement, under court-martial sentence, involving dishonorable discharge; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of Cavalry, the batteries of Field Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the Cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules; chests and issue outfits; and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $1,833,127.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, on page 25, line 18, the word "then" ought to be "than." I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 25, line 13, by striking out the word "then" and inserting "than."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, etc.: For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, for remounts, for officers entitled to public mounts, for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, and for the hire of employees: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and, unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster Corps and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place, $500,000, and the sum of $200,000 of this appropriation is made immediately available.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 27, line 17, after the word "available," to add:

And provided further, That hereafter no part of this or any other appropriation shall be expended for defraying the expenses of officers, enlisted men, or horses in attending or taking part in horse shows.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 27, line 17, after the word "available," by adding: "And provided further, That hereafter no part of this or any other appropriation shall be expended for defraying the expenses of officers, enlisted men, or horses attending or taking part in horse shows."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California reserves a point of order.

Mr. KAHN. As a matter of fact, in my judgment, it is a good thing to have the officers of the United States Army participate in horse shows. They are thrown into competition with civilian riders, and of course it instills a spirit of emulation that naturally tends to increase the ability of the officers and enlisted men who participate.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman have any idea that any of this appropriation is spent for horse shows?

Mr. KAHN. I am quite satisfied it is not.

Mr. HAY. Then the amendment is not germane.

Mr. KAHN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; I think the amendment is clearly a limitation and has a tendency to reduce expenditures of the Government, and, therefore, under the Holman rule, it is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards the amendment as in order.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, the amendment does not affect this item at all. However, I do not think it is of any material importance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration and office buildings, sheds, shops, and other buildings necessary for the shelter of troops, public animals, and stores, and for administration purposes, except those pertaining to the Seacoast Artillery; for repairing public buildings at military posts; for hire of employees; for rental of the authorized allowance of quarters for officers on duty with the troops at posts and stations where no public quarters are available; of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available; of grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and of buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops, for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes; for the hire of recruiting stations and lodgings for recruits; for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War; for wall lockers in permanent barracks and refrigerators in barracks and quarters; for screen doors, window screens, storm doors and sash, and window shades for barracks, offices, and quarters, and for flooring and framing for tents: Provided, That no part of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel or quarters to officers or enlisted men: Provided further, That the number of and total sum paid for civilian employees in the Quartermaster Corps shall be limited to the actual requirements of the service, and that no employee therein shall receive a salary of more than $150 per month, except upon the approval of the Secretary of War, $2,123,997.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, add at the end of line 22 the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction at military posts of quarters for officers containing a greater number of rooms than the authorized number provided by law for officers of the various grades who are stationed there in the ordinary course of military necessities: And provided further, That in carrying out the foregoing provision the number of suites and the number of rooms in each suite of officers' quarters already provided for at each post shall be taken into consideration: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the construction of quarters containing more than five rooms."

Mr. HAY. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I promised that I would offer an amendment affecting the evil which I have pointed out to-day with reference to there being more rooms occupied by officers at 15 of the public Army posts of the United States than the law allows, where Army officers occupy anywhere from two to three times as many rooms as they are entitled to. For instance, at Fort Washington, Fort Myer, and at a great many others this evil practice exists. The department goes ahead under this lump-sum appropriation and builds 12, 14, and 16 room houses, when there is not an officer in the United States Army who is entitled under the law to occupy a house of 16 rooms, or even of 14 rooms or 12 rooms. And if there were there are already enough houses with sufficient rooms in them in the public forts and posts of the United States to house every officer above the grade of major. So we do not need any houses bigger than 5-room houses to furnish quarters for the captains and officers above that rank. We have a sufficiency of big houses already to house the gentlemen who are entitled to 8 or 10 rooms. We have enough 12 and 14 room houses. I do not think any more big houses should be built, because we have a surplusage of them. Therefore I offer this amendment, to limit the appropriation to the construction of houses of not exceeding 5 rooms. That is all I care to say.

Mr. HAY. If this amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] is agreed to, it will only affect, so far as this bill is concerned, certain quarters which are being built and which have been authorized to be built at Fort Bliss, Tex. I have not all the items before me, but my recollection is that that is the only post where they are proposing to build any officers' quarters. This appropriation carries not only construction, but repairs.

The gentleman's amendment would inaugurate a system under which, if the military necessities of the country required that a post should be built, they could only build houses containing five rooms each, which would be the most expensive way of building houses at a post. It would cost a great deal more, for instance, to build 10 houses of five rooms each than it would cost to build 3 houses containing the same number of rooms. If what the gentleman is after is economy, I think he is pursuing a very poor policy in this amendment. I do not think the amendment is practicable. I do not see what it is going to do, except to compel the construction of quarters that shall contain only five rooms.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to explain to him what I am driving at.

Mr. HAY. All right.

Mr. WEBB. The highest number of rooms which any officer is entitled to is 10.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman think Congress ought to appropriate for building 16-room houses when, under the law, no officer is entitled to occupy that house?

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why does not the gentleman limit the number of rooms to 10?

Mr. WEBB. I have stated that we already have enough 10 and 12 and 14 room houses.

Mr. HAY. We have not at Fort Bliss.

Mr. WEBB. That is something new. I am not going to controvert that statement, because the gentleman may be right.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Will the gentleman from North Carolina permit me?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. If the law now provides that they can not build houses with any more rooms in them than are provided in the gentleman's amendment, what is to be gained by offering the amendment?

Mr. WEBB. Because the law is being violated every day. At Washington Barracks, officers entitled to 99 rooms are occupying 189 rooms.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. If the law is being violated, does the gentleman think that the adoption of the amendment would prevent it?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think they would violate a plain provision of the law which limits the number of rooms to be put into a house. But if it affects contracts already made in relation to buildings at Fort Bliss, I will not insist.

Mr. HAY. "Two hundred and seventy-nine thousand dollars of this appropriation has been set apart for the construction of buildings at Fort Bliss, among which are officers' quarters." Unquestionably this amendment would stop the building at Fort Bliss of any officers' quarters.

Mr. WEBB. Are there not already officers' quarters at Fort Bliss?

Mr. HAY. No; these are new buildings.

Mr. WEBB. The first part of my amendment would permit the building, not to exceed the number of rooms the commanding officer needs.

Mr. KAHN. I think the chairman is in error; there are some buildings already in existence at Fort Bliss.

Mr. HAY. There are some, but they are building up the post, making it larger.

Mr. KAHN. This provides for $4,000 for a building. It seems to me that would not be very large quarters.

Mr. WEBB. They do not need them. We have large quarters enough now to accommodate all the officers in the United States.

Mr. HAY. Yes; but the gentleman must recollect that while there may be enough quarters in the United States to quarter all the officers of the Army, there may be a time when men have to go to a certain place and there will not be enough quarters there to quarter them.

Mr. WEBB. I do not think we ought to be lavish in expenditures of money. By the way, is not Fort Bliss the fort of which a former Secretary of War recommended the abolition?

Mr. HAY. No; Fort Bliss is at El Paso, Tex., across from the Mexican border.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose all the officers' residences at Fort Myer were to burn down to-morrow. You could not build a house, under this amendment, of over five rooms.

Mr. WEBB. We could transfer them to Fort Washington until the next appropriation came in, and then we would build them mighty fast.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is practicable, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEBB) there were 2 ayes and 14 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I want the RECORD to show how few Members are considering this great appropriation bill.

Mr. KAHN. But there were a number of Members present who did not rise either for the ayes or the noes.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; 10 or 15.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, while this is going on I want a note made of the fact that I am here. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water and of their baggage, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; for travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge; of persons on their discharge from the United States military prison or from any place in which they have been held under a sentence of dishonorable discharge and confinement for more than six months, or from the Government Hospital for the Insane after transfer thereto from such prison or place, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies furnished to the militia for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and other employees; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipment; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage tolls and ferriage; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the hire of employees; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, and other vehicles as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies, and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the hire of teamsters and other employees; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans: Provided further, That hereafter private mounts of officers in excess of the authorized mounts may be shipped on Government bill of lading with authorized mounts, and reimbursement collected for transportation charges on such excess mounts: Provided further, That authority is hereby granted the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of in accordance with law and regulations the United States Army interisland transports Seward and Wright, $10,064,645.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language, page 31, line 24, beginning after the word "further," which is as follows:

That hereafter private mounts of officers in excess of the authorized mounts may be shipped on Government bill of lading with authorized mounts, and reimbursement collected for transportation charges on such excess mounts.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like this policy, and I think it would not be workable. You could not enforce it except on a land-grant railroad. You could not give a private individual transportation. These officers would be entitled to some cheap rate by force of an act of Congress which would be ineffective.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAY. I suggest that you also strike out the words "Provided further," so that the whole proviso will be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What arrangement is there with railroads for the transportation of troops?

Mr. HAY. They make the arrangement when the occasion comes up. There is no permanent arrangement.

Mr. BALTZ. Is it let by contract?

Mr. HAY. I think so, where there are two or more competing roads that can bid.

Mr. BALTZ. I have been informed that where two railroads were bidding for a contract it was not given to the lowest bidder, and I wanted to know what this arrangement was.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman understands that this is done in the War Department, and we do not know anything about it. Of course, they ought to give the contract to the lowest bidder, other things being equal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage: For the construction and repair by the Quartermaster Corps of roads, walks, and wharves; for payment of extra-duty pay to enlisted men employed in opening roads and in building wharves; for the pay of employees; for the disposal of drainage; for dredging channels; and for care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $475,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what these roads and walks include.

Mr. HAY. They are roads and walks in the military possessions.

Mr. WINGO. Does it include any roads contemplated to be constructed which might be termed public roads and would be constructed under this appropriation simply because the troops might occasionally use them?

Mr. HAY. No; all this appropriation is to be expended within the reservation.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing, camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $5,700,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to direct the attention of the chairman to line 6, page 24. I have no doubt it is proper, but I want to know what the word "housewives" means.

Mr. HAY. They are little cases that contain needles, pins, sewing material, and various things, so that the soldiers can sew on their own buttons.

Mr. WINGO. Then the word "housewives" is the name of some inanimate thing?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And is not any marital contraption of flesh and blood? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire simply to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in this bill the item for subsistence of the Army and the item that has just been read carry about the same amounts as were appropriated last year. The Army has not been increased in number since the last appropriation bill for the military establishment was enacted into law. Of course, a promise was made to the voters of the country that the Democratic tariff law—the Underwood bill—would materially reduce the cost of living in this country. And, of course, on the strength of that promise, we had a right to assume that, by the reduction of the tariff, all of these supplies would be much cheaper this year; but that promise has not materialized, and that the majority membership of this House have no faith in the likelihood of its ever materializing is evidenced by the fact that we are still called upon to appropriate about as much for supplies this year, and a little more in the item of subsistence, than we appropriated for last year.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise on the part of that side of the House to give the tariff bill an opportunity to become effective so as to reduce the cost of living—to be fair in the matter?

Mr. KAHN. As a matter of fact, the amounts for subsistence have been increased, and therefore the gentlemen who were so sure that the cost of living would be reduced cast a decided doubt on the wisdom of their own statements.

Mr. GOULDEN. The tariff has been reduced, and it will affect the cost of provisions of all kinds, I am quite confident.

Mr. KAHN. And yet the majority of the committee have increased the amounts allowed for the purchase of these provisions over what was allowed last year.

Mr. GOULDEN. That was evidently under the influence of Republican membership.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; it was done because the cost of living has not come down.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $440,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire if that item for Hot Springs, Ark., includes any new work on sewerage?

Mr. HAY. I can not tell the gentleman offhand.

Mr. KAHN. It is referred to at page 670 of the hearings.

Mr. WINGO. I know there was a much-needed proposition, and in the absence of the Member who represents that district, who is now in Michigan on business of the House in connection with the strike in the mines there, I have asked this question. I want to inquire if that item has been taken care of?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the item is explained on page 670 of the hearings, but the bill does not give the exact locations where the money is to be expended. It divides the entire appropriation into specific amounts for each purpose, but it does not say where the money is to be expended.

Mr. HAY. In Hot Springs, Ark., they propose to construct houses, and it does not say anything about sewerage.

Mr. WINGO. Had they the question before the committee of constructing a new sewer system at the reservation there?

Mr. HAY. No; there was nothing of the kind brought up before the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Interrogating the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who spoke a few moments ago, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] suggested that we on this side should allow the tariff bill to get in its perfect work and reduce the cost of the supplies purchased under these appropriations and the cost of living generally. I have never understood that we had any influence on this side over the prices that might be established under the blessed tariff legislation of gentlemen on that side, but in this connection let me refer to one curious effect of that tariff legislation. Among the articles that are purchased in large quantity for the Army are harness, saddlery, leather goods. Under the last tariff bill harness was put on the free list and saddlery and leather which were not theretofore on the free list were put on the free list. Curiously enough instead of effecting a reduction in the cost of those articles the price has actually advanced. Leather and harness have advanced considerably.

Mr. GOULDEN. Upon what did the committee base their estimates of the cost of maintaining this particular item and others in this bill for the next fiscal year?

Mr. MONDELL. The estimates of the department.

Mr. GOULDEN. And those estimates, of course, were based on last year's prices, really before the tariff bill became a law?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I suppose the department keeps track of prices as well as it can, and if it has not increased the unit cost of saddlery and harness those in charge are going to run short, because those articles have actually increased in cost since you have placed them on the free list. I will not say that that is one of the effects of that legislation. I am simply stating the fact.

Mr. GOULDEN. My friend from Wyoming is not inclined to give the tariff bill an opportunity to work out its own salvation, as we on this side firmly believe it will successfully do.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I want to assure the gentleman that my inclination is to give it an opportunity. Little as I like it. I want it given a fair chance. There never has been a time in the history of the country, as the gentleman knows, when the American people as a whole were so much inclined as they are now to give this tariff legislation an opportunity to work out and demonstrate what its effect is to be.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think that is true.

Mr. MONDELL. That is my belief, based on wide information.

Mr. GOULDEN. And that is a very patriotic thing for the gentleman to say.

Mr. MONDELL. People think it is an inevitable evil, and they want to get along with it the best they can.

Mr. GOULDEN. Oh, no; it will be a general good to all, as his party will so discover.

Mr. MONDELL. So that if it does not work out well it will not be because it has not been given a fair chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quarters for officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates on duty with troops where no public quarters are available, $13,347.90; total, $49,587.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, in reference to that section I have some matter here which shows how this rental privilege in Washington has been abused, and actually how fraud has crept in where three or four persons rent rooms in one house and "knock down" a portion of the money paid by the Government for rent. I have numbers of instances like that in my possession, some of which I wish to put in the RECORD. I notice one little house here at 422 Second Street NW. At this place the total paid was $574 for room rent alone, and I am informed that in many instances the landlord does not get the full amount of the contract, but does get the money and divides it with the men. And I again say much of this could be taken care of in the Government barracks or in the Washington Barracks or out at Fort Myer, and I hope the chairman will look into that next year and see if these officers and enlisted men who are drawing big rental money for officers' quarters in Washington can not be housed in buildings that the Government has already built and maintains for such purposes.

The memorandum is as follows:

Some rental of buildings in District of Columbia; room rent alone, no light and heat, included:

422 Second Street NW., $574 per year or $47.83 per month.
310 C Street, $430 per year or $35.83 per month.
339 P Street, $144 per year or $12 per month.
1215 Four-and-a-half Street, $144 per year or $12 per month.
1024 Eighth Street, $910 per year or $75.83 per month.

One-third more for heat and light is added to these amounts. The barracks in Washington could house these men.

Following are a few cases involving Government leases of quarters for enlisted men, heat and light allowances, etc. They have presented themselves in connection with the revision of various accounts of disbursing officers of the War Department. The matters specifically referred to are of necessity from six months to a year old because of the time elapsing before the accounts reach this office, but I am informed that the same conditions in many instances exist at the present time.

Four rooms were rented by separate leases of Bridget Kane at 422 Second Street NW., each separate lease was for $18.20 per month per room ($12 room, $5 heat, and $1.20 light). This lady rented to the general public in her house one room at $12, two rooms at $10, and one room at $9, and the others ranging down as low as $5, heat and light included. Other equally as good rooms were renting in this neighborhood at $10 per month, heat and light included.

At No. 339 O Street SW. lease for room for enlisted man was with B. Adams, at the rate of $18.20. B. Adams is the wife of the enlisted man. Entire houses of the character of this one in that neighborhood, many of them better, rent for an average of $13.50 per month. Rooms in this locality rent generally for either five or seven dollars per month, heat and light included.

Practically the same conditions prevail with reference to leases of rooms at No. 1215 Four-and-a-half Street SW. and 310 C Street NW., also at 512 Second Street NW. and 310 Third Street NW., except that in the last two named localities room rents range from ten to twelve dollars per month, heat and light included.

At No. 53 K Street NW. contract was for $13.20, heat not included specifically in the contract, but as a matter of fact the room was heated. In this case fuel in kind was delivered, and coal to the value of $15.97 was delivered in one month.

Leases were in effect also at Nos. 621 K Street, 1024 Eighth Street, 1755 Willard Street, 1920 and 2111 Eighteenth Street, 2124 P Street, 1737 F Street, and 1807 G Street. These rooms are all in the northwest and are all heated and lighted. The prices ranged from $10 to $15 per month, showing that even in the better localities more than the prevailing rates to the general public were being paid.

At Nos. 600 and 625 Harvard Street NW., and at No. 506 Kenyon Street NW., $18.20 was being paid, and in these cases the prevailing prices was from $5 to $7 per month. The same conditions existed at 3326 Georgia Avenue NW.

At No. 1737 F Street NW., referred to above, contract was for $13.20, heat not included, although the room was in fact heated. The entire house was heated by a central heating plant and there was no provision for any other fire in the house except in the kitchen range. Fuel in kind to the value of $6.83 per month was delivered to the enlisted man at this place and by him turned over to the landlady and used in heating her house. Practically the same conditions exist in other places.

Two leases were entered into with Mrs. Anna E. Trabue, of No. 1645 K Street NW., for two rooms each, for two nurses. The lease in each case was for $36.40, divided $24 for rooms, $10 for heat, and $2.40 for light. When these leases were executed Mrs. Trabue specifically stated that it was not her intention to rent more than one room to each nurse. She was persuaded, and largely she says, by the statements of a representative of the War Department that it was necessary and proper for her to execute the two leases for two rooms each.

As a matter of fact, only two rooms were rented and the nurses occupy one room each, of these two and each lease as to one room was purely fictitious. Mrs. Trabue was paid each month $72.80. Under some arrangement had, the checks received by her were indorsed over to the nurses who were boarding with her at a fixed rate per month for one room and board. One of the nurses involved in these original leases left there, but I am informed that another nurse took her place, and that this condition existed at the time of the rendering of the last account by the Washington disbursing officer.

In some cases where quarters have been rented for officers and where the rent for a larger number of rooms than the officer was entitled to has not exceeded the amount, figured upon the basis of their authorized number of rooms at $12 per room, leases have been entered into which rented for the officer more rooms than he was entitled to, but which on their face did not speak the truth.

On June 1, 1911, a lease was executed as between Mary C. Ragan and Maj. H. L. Pettus for 4 rooms for Capt. Charles Ragan at $48 per month. Mary C. Ragan was the wife of Capt. Ragan, and she leased the entire 8-room house for $42.50. This lease was for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, unless sooner canceled. Shortly after the execution of the lease Capt. Ragan was promoted and became a major, and a new lease was executed as between Mrs. Ragan and Maj. Pettus for 5 rooms in this same house for Maj. Ragan at $60 per month, although Mrs. Ragan's lease of the entire premises continued at $42.50 per month. Subsequently the auditor suspended vouchers covering payments on account of this lease, and the next lease was in the name of Della McCue, who was reported to be a sister-in-law of Maj. Ragan and a member of his family. Still subsequently the situation was changed, and the War Department, through Maj. Pettus, leased this same house as "officer's quarters" at a rental price of $45 per month for the entire house. Maj. Ragan and his family was assigned the entire house, although he was not entitled to that many rooms.

At about the same time the house adjoining was leased of Boss & Phelps by A. Halloran, said to be a sister of Maj. Halloran, at $37.50 per month. She in turn leased to the Government five rooms in the house for the use of Maj. Halloran at $60. Later, after some suspensions by the auditor, the entire house was leased by the War Department of Boss & Phelps as "officer's quarters" for $39 per month, and Maj. Halloran permitted to occupy the entire house. Heat and light in kind was furnished by the Government for the heating and lighting of both of these houses.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the library of the Surgeon General's office, including the purchase of necessary books of reference and periodicals, $10,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if $10,000 a year is not a pretty big allowance for one man's library?

Mr. HAY. It is not one man's library.

Mr. WEBB. It is for the Surgeon General's office.

Mr. HAY. This is the finest medical library in the world, and it is kept up from this appropriation of $10,000 a year, given it for many years, and from it they have to buy all the new books, new publications, and pamphlets and subscribe to the different publications upon the subject, and it takes all of this sum of money to do it, and I think it would be a great calamity to reduce the appropriation.

Mr. WEBB. All right, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

Engineer depots: For incidental expenses for the depots, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, pay of civilian clerks, mechanics, laborers, and other employees, extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than 10 days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in the line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; for lumber and materials and for labor for packing and crating engineer supplies; repairs of, and for materials to repair, public buildings, machinery, and instruments, and for unforeseen expenses, $25,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what other employees could be hired besides civilian clerks, mechanics, and laborers. "Other employees" is new legislation, is it not? If it is I would like to know what other employees you can suggest besides clerks, mechanics, and laborers?

Mr. McKELLAR. What line?

Mr. WEBB. Line 22, page 38.

Mr. HAY. I think that was explained by the Chief of Engineers when he appeared before us.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, on page 20 of the hearings, about the middle of the page, appears:

It does not show it in the print of the bill, nor does it show it in the print of the Book of Estimates, and yet the note says, at the foot of page 274, the words "and other employees" have been inserted to provide for the payment of civilian employees that strictly could not be classed as clerks, mechanics, or laborers.

Mr. WEBB. They could be classed as civilian clerks.

Mr. HAY. I stated—

That is new language. It was not in the bill last year.

It does not increase the item. Then I go on to say—

I suppose it is done to meet some objection of the comptroller.

And Col. Burr, who was speaking, said:

No; it is done for the purpose of simplifying the administration. We have other appropriations from which instruments might be purchased.

Mr. WEBB. That is instruments.

Mr. HAY. (Reading:)

Such as engineer equipment of troops, which comes later in the bill.

Mr. WEBB. I can not see, Mr. Chairman, what employee would be useful in this department unless he be a civilian clerk, mechanic or laborer, and the words "and other employees," it seems to me, are more or less useless, and unless the chairman of the committee insists upon the words staying in——

Mr. HAY. I have no objection to the words going out. Offer the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. I make the point of order against the language.

Mr. HAY. It is too late to make the point of order. I am willing for it to be stricken out.

Mr. WEBB. Then I move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the Clerk.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman moves, I understand, to strike out the words "and other employees," page 38, line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 38, line 22, by striking out the words "and other employees."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee another question. On line 6, page 39, the words "and instruments" is new legislation, and I think the chairman was to tell us why that was inserted, and I will be glad to know that.

Mr. HAY. I will read:

Col. BURR. * * * We have other appropriations from which instruments might be purchased, such as engineer equipment of troops, which comes later in the bill; and it was deemed good administration to reduce to one item the two or more items from which instruments could be purchased under this bill. The functions of these depots are more than just the furnishing and repair of instruments. They are the depots at which all of the engineer equipment of troops in storage is kept and cared for. The bulk of that equipment consists of pontoon material, and tools for issue to engineer troops, and survey and reconnoissance instruments for all troops, as well as for officers on fieldwork. The amount of this work is increasing somewhat from year to year, and we are increasing our equipment in storage. We are gradually adding to our equipment so as to be prepared for emergencies, and this requires a slight increase in the repairs at depots.

Moreover, one item in the detailed estimates which we have here, making up the total estimate of $30,000, is a relatively slight increase—a few hundred dollars—in the estimates for equipping these depots to do much of the work that they do.

Mr. WEBB. May I ask the chairman if it is intended to include in the words "and instruments" field glasses, which the officers are required to buy and ought to buy themselves?

Mr. HAY. Are the words "field glasses" there?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir. It says "and instruments." I do not know what that would cover.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman it does not cover field glasses, because they had an estimate sent to us for the purchase of field glasses for certain officers, and we struck that out. I think the item called for $6,000. We would not allow it.

Mr. WEBB. I thought maybe you might point out some instrument they wanted and which they are not authorized now to buy, and that is why they inserted this new legislation "and instruments" here.

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. WEBB. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Civilian assistants to engineer officers: For services of surveyors, survey parties, draftsmen, photographers, master laborers, and clerks to engineer officers on the staff of division, corps, and department commanders, $40,000.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Referring to the statement made a little while ago by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I would like to call his attention to what has appeared very recently in one of the metropolitan newspapers on the subject of the effect of the present tariff law, as follows:

COST OF LIVING SAID TO BE ON THE DECREASE—OFFICIAL REPORT SHOWS THAT WHILE 11 ARTICLES OF COMMODITIES HAVE ADVANCED IN PRICE IN THE LAST YEAR, 21 OTHER COMMODITIES HAVE DECREASED, SOME OF THEM AS LOW AS 40 PER CENT.

INDIANAPOLIS, February 26.

In a report just made public by Dr. George F. Odenharter, superintendent of the Central Hospital for Insane at Indianapolis, throws light on some recent statements that prices of food in Indiana are on the increase annually. In a long list of commodities used by the State institution during two fiscal years, bought at wholesale and under competitive conditions, it is shown that while 11 of the commodities increased as to the unit cost during the fiscal year 1912–13 over the fiscal year preceding, 21 commodities in general use decreased in price, some of them as much as approximately 40 per cent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have been very much interested in the exceedingly general statement which the gentleman has just read. The prices of a considerable number of articles, character and nature not stated, are said to have increased. The prices of certain other articles, the character of which is not stated, are "said" to have decreased. I can not think of any safer statement that could be made anywhere by anybody than the statement the gentleman has just read. I have no doubt that some articles, name unknown, character undescribed, have increased in prices, that other articles in like category have decreased. I have never had any question but what our Democratic friends would be able under their tariff bill to keep part of their promises; that is, the promise made to the dwellers in the city that the prices of farm products would be decreased. That is inevitable under Democratic tariff legislation.

As men lose their opportunities for employment their wages are decreased, there is a lesser demand for agricultural products, and they naturally go down in price, to the very great loss of the farmer and to the advantage of no one. And when, in addition to that, you import eggs from China and butter from the Argentine, you certainly do not help the farmer, and I think it is very doubtful if you help the dweller in the city for any great length of time.

But what I rose to call attention to is the curious fact that articles that by all the rules should have decreased in price under your tariff legislation refuse to do it, but insist on advancing. For instance, leather and saddlery goods were put on the free list. I was very much afraid that the little industries in my State along these lines would be put out of business by a decrease in prices they could not meet, but I grant you that up to the present time my fear in that respect has not been realized. The price of these articles has continuously advanced. The American people are paying more for them than ever before, and we are not getting any of the income that we used to derive from such of these articles as were imported. So we are losing at both ends. That is generally the effect of Democratic legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed. I would like to indulge the gentleman from Indiana, but I wish to finish the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter in the settlement of transactions between appropriations under the Engineer Department, or between the Engineer Department and another office or bureau of the War Department, or of any other executive department of the Government, payment therefor shall be made by the proper disbursing officer of the Corps of Engineers or of the office, bureau, or department concerned.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against all the language embraced in lines 5 to 11, on page 41, as being new legislation and, I think, of very doubtful value, because if that were passed it would take the work out from control or oversight of the auditor. I think the Auditor for the War Department and the Auditor of the Treasury Department ought to audit all of these accounts. If this were passed tremendous amounts of money would be offset and transferred without the oversight of the auditor. And, besides, it is new legislation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I admit it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Ordnance service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department, in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriters, and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the ordnance service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office; subscriptions to periodicals which may be paid for in advance, and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $250,000.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I would like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 41, line 25, by striking out "$250,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$300,000."

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I am introducing this amendment at the request of my colleague from Philadelphia [Mr. DONOHOE].

Mr. DONOHOE has sent me a letter received by him from Gen. Crozier, in which he approves of having the amount of money carried in this item raised to $300,000. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has no objection, I would like to have the letter read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, February 24, 1914.

Hon. MICHAEL DONOHOE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DONOHOE: In the Army bill, as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to the House of Representatives, the appropriation for "ordnance service" is reduced $50,000 under the estimate of the War Department, and under the appropriation for the current fiscal year, both of which were $300,000. The appropriation for the current fiscal year had already been reduced from the year 1912 by $37,000, which it had been during that fiscal year, and by $25,000 from the amount for the fiscal years 1910 and 1911.

This appropriation covers the general activities of the Ordnance Department in connection with its work of experimentation and with that of the issue of supplies to the Army. It is separated under general headings as follows:

Services of clerks engaged in rendering money and property papers and other general work	$110,161.49
Services and materials required in receiving and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, maintenance of transportation, services of teamsters, purchase of forage, etc.	117,006.14
Services and materials required for the maintenance of heating plants for offices, storehouses, and other buildings not used for manufacturing or experiments; services and materials required for the illumination of grounds and buildings not used for manufactures or experiments; maintenance of the water supply and its purchase for other than manufacturing or experimental purposes	20,031.73
Tools and supplies for general use	3,465.19
Publications, stationery, and office supplies	5,371.63
Telephone service, expense of messenger and watchman service on other than manufacturing work	18,402.05
Incidental and various expenses	10,471.77
Printing annual catalogues at arsenals for the purchase of supplies and printing and binding of ordnance pamphlets descriptive of ordnance matériel, etc.	15,000.00
	300,000.00

None of the activities under these headings have been in any wise diminished, and recently there has been, in fact, an increase in the amount of stores issued to the Regular Army and to the militia, which draws upon this appropriation. As far as I can see, the reduction is purely an arbitrary one, not based upon any information which has been given which would indicate that the necessities of the department could be met by any less sum than that which has been annually appropriated for 10 years or more.

Owing to the accumulation of a fairly satisfactory supply of certain fighting matériel, the estimates of this department have been gradually reduced over a series of years, and the appropriations have been cut down accordingly. Among such items may be mentioned the one for small arms and that for small-arms ammunition. But the appropriation "ordnance service" is a maintenance item which has special relation to the Ordnance Department as a supply department of the Army, and the requirements under it are not affected by the satisfactory accumulation which is now referred to.

The Frankford Arsenal, of which you have spoken to me, situated in your district, is a large supply arsenal, and would be among the ones whose force would be disadvantageously affected if the proposed reduction should prevail. I therefore send you the information contained in this letter in response to your inquiry.

Sincerely, yours,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, this is a very remarkable performance on the part of Gen. Crozier, who undertakes to criticize the action of a committee of this House, and undertakes to persuade the House to act contrary to the recommendation of the committee. He makes statements which are not correct.

He says:

As far as I can see, the reduction is purely an arbitrary one, not based upon any information which has been given which would indicate that the necessities of the department could be met by any less sum than that which has been annually appropriated for 10 years or more.

Mr. Chairman, we had information before us, given by Gen. Crozier, and after examining this information and finding out how he proposed to spend the $300,000, we thought we could very easily cut the item to $250,000.

I hardly think it is the part of the head of a bureau to write letters of this character to Members of Congress and base his action upon statements which are not correct. I hope the committee will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance stores—ammunition: Manufacture of ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply; ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C.; ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes: Provided, That not more than $5,000 of this appropriation may be used in the purchase of ammunition for purposes of experiment, $125,000.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the Chairman a question. I notice in two or three provisions it is stated that not more than a certain amount of this money may be used in the purchase of ammunition for the purpose of experiment. I rise to a question of information as to what is the difference in cost of the powder purchased and the powder manufactured per pound?

Mr. HAY. About 10 cents.

Mr. BARTON. And do we manufacture most of the powder we use?

Mr. HAY. We do.

Mr. BARTON. Then the gentleman thinks the plant is a success?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTON. That is what I wanted to ascertain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

National trophy and medals for rifle contests: For the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, members of rifle clubs, and civilians, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, and for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States, including the reimbursement of necessary expenses of members of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer to this paragraph an amendment in the nature of a new paragraph, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new paragraph, at the end of line 23, page 44, the following:

"Campaign badges for certain purposes: For the purpose of furnishing service medals or campaign badges to officers and enlisted men who served honorably in the Army of the United States, whether in the Regular or Volunteer service, during the Spanish, Philippine, or China campaigns, and who have not been awarded badges under existing orders of the War Department, shall be awarded, under the direction of the Secretary of War, campaign badges as follows:

"(a) Spanish campaign badges: For service on the high seas en route to or ashore in—

"Cuba, between May 11, 1898, and July 17, 1898.

"Porto Rico, between July 24, 1898, and August 13, 1898.

"Philippine Islands, between June 30, 1898, and August 16, 1898.

"(b) Philippine campaign badges: For service ashore in—

"Philippine Islands, between February 4, 1899, and July 4, 1902.

"Department of Mindanao, Philippine Islands, between February 4, 1899, and December 31, 1904.

"And in the following expeditions:

"Against Pala and his followers, Jolo, Philippine Islands, April and May, 1905.

"Against Dato Ali and his followers, Mindanao, Philippine Islands, October, 1905.

"Against hostile Moros on Bud-Dajo, Jolo, Philippine Islands, March, 1906.

"(c) China campaign badge: For service ashore in China with the Peking relief expedition, between June 20, 1900, and May 27, 1901.

"Provided, That such badges shall be issued to the proper legal representative of any deceased officer or soldier who, if living, would be entitled thereto, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $27,500."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this is a new paragraph, and it is in the nature of the one just preceding it, providing for national trophies and medals for rifle contests.

This amendment provides for service badges for those who have served during campaigns in foreign countries. It includes those who served in the Santiago campaign, in Porto Rican campaigns, in the Philippine insurrection as well the campaign in the Philippines prior to the insurrection, and also in the Chinese expedition.

This includes an approximate total of 55,000 officers and men. These badges can be furnished, and the War Department already has regulations for the furnishing of badges for these purposes. It has issued a circular providing for campaign badges under date of December 5, 1913. It provides how these badges can be issued and how they can be obtained. It cites regulations for making application for them, and provides between what dates they can be issued for certain campaigns.

Now, there can be no objection to this, Mr. Chairman, from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I would like to say to the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], that the War Department has already regulations in force for issuing these badges and similar badges; but now, Mr. Chairman, they charge the men who are entitled to them the amount of 50 cents for each of these badges.

This amendment is only for the purpose of appropriating the necessary amount of money so that these men, as many of them as desire, can obtain them without paying for them. If every man who served in those campaigns should ask for these badges and they should be issued, the total amount would not exceed $27,500. Of course, all of them will not ask. Some of them, in fact many of them, are dead.

It is provided in the amendment, Mr. Chairman, that the families of these men can ask for them. Now, as everybody knows, a man who has served in those campaigns on foreign shores appreciates much more a medal or a badge of honor or of distinction won in those campaigns if he does not have to pay for it himself.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can the gentleman tell us how many of these badges have been issued to these deserving men by the War Department at 50 cents each?

Mr. DYER. Very few for these campaigns. For all the campaigns to which these provisions apply the total number so issued is about 42,000; but not over 2,000 have been issued for the campaigns which I have mentioned, which were distinct from any other campaigns in which this country has been engaged. I select those where men have served in foreign countries, and they are the only ones that are included in this amendment.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his point of order and allow this small appropriation to be made. There has been great demand for this from these men who have served in foreign lands. They have been asking it for a long time, and the total amount will not, under any circumstances, exceed $27,500.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting here a circular issued by the War Department regarding the present arrangements for issuing these badges.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CAMPAIGN BADGES.

Dak., from November, 1890, until January, 1891, and of Troops F and G, Eighth Cavalry, which proceeded from Fort Yates, N. Dak., to the camp of Sitting Bull at the time of the skirmish which resulted in the death of that Indian form part of this campaign.

In such minor campaigns as involved marches, camps, and bivouacs by troops actually in the field and operating against hostile Indians.

Cuba, between May 11, 1898, and July 17, 1898.

(g) The certificate of merit badge: For those to whom certificates of merit have been awarded.

Only one campaign badge will be issued for service in any one campaign, and only one Indian campaign badge will be issued, notwithstanding the fact that service may have been rendered in more than one Indian campaign.

GEO. ANDREWS,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I should like very much to accommodate the gentleman from Missouri, but the committee have had no opportunity to examine into this question at all. No estimate for it was made by the War Department, and it is brought in here now on the floor without anybody having had an opportunity to inquire into the case. I feel that I am compelled to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEVER). The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13765) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, with Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is no desire for general debate on this bill, and therefore I ask that the Clerk report the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13765) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAFETY APPLIANCES FOR RAILROADS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KAHN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, upon what subject?

Mr. DENT. On safety appliances in railroad accidents.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13679) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. And pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if we can not make some arrangement for general debate. I see the gentleman from Michigan here who is a member of the committee.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is the ranking member of the committee. I know that he has been trying to arrange for time for general debate. I think he would like about six hours on this side.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think it would be possible, Mr. Speaker, to give that much time. But we are disposed on this side to be liberal. What does the gentleman say to four and a half hours on a side?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that would do at all.

Mr. LEVER. What does the gentleman from Wyoming suggest?

Mr. MONDELL. About six hours on a side.

Mr. LEVER. Would not the gentleman be willing to agree to five hours on a side?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Michigan tells me that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] informed him that he had requests in excess of six hours on this side from gentlemen who really have something to say which the country ought to hear.

Mr. LEVER. Would the gentleman be willing, if we allowed six hours on a side, to begin at 11 o'clock in the morning and run, say, until half past 10 at night?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I think there would be no objection to an earlier session in the morning, but I think there would be objection to night sessions.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from South Carolina is perfectly willing to allow five hours on a side, and by meeting at 11 o'clock in the morning we gain an hour, so that he might make it six hours——

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman would, of course, help this side of the House to carry the consideration of the bill up to 6.30 in the evening, would he not, which would give us practically another hour?

Mr. MONDELL. That is a little late to those of us who live out in the country.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman ought to ask that.

Mr. MONDELL. If we meet at 11 o'clock we can get through with six hours of debate by running until 5.30, making two extra hours in two days. That is getting along pretty well, I will suggest to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from South Carolina. If he makes an agreement to sit until half past 6, it does not bind any gentleman who is not here from raising the point of "no quorum." I have no objection to coming in at 11 o'clock in the morning, but when you undertake to fix half past 6 for adjournment you will have difficulty with any Member who wants to adjourn before that.

Mr. LEVER. I recognize that what the gentleman from New York says is true. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for 12 hours, 6 hours on a side, 6 hours to be controlled by myself and 6 hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the ranking Republican Member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that there be 12 hours general debate, 6 hours to be controlled by himself and 6 hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 2, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, day by day we are brought unto renewed obligation to Thee for the tender care that Thou hast over all Thy creatures.

> From every stormy wind that blows,
> From every swelling tide of woes,
> There is a calm and sure retreat;
> 'Tis found beneath the mercy seat.

We bless Thee that Thou dost invite us to come. Thou dost give to us opportunities of service with every storm that comes. Help us to hold nearer to him who gives than to his tribe that take. Thus may our lives be Godlike in the use of every opportunity that we have to give blessing and every opportunity to bring peace and happiness to others. For Christ's sake. Amen.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation of a remark I made on Saturday, which appears in the RECORD on page 4085. I find that the language I used does not exactly express the idea I intended to convey.

What I intended to say was that if we were going to turn over half the control of the parcel post to the Interstate Commerce Commission we might as well turn over the entire control. I believe, of course, that the service should be controlled by the Postmaster General. I merely want to make my position clear.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the morning business this morning I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

SOCIALIST PARTY NEW YORK COUNTY.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
Senate Chamber:

Whereas the United States in the past has persistently maintained the right of political asylum and has hospitably received political refugees from all countries, notably Kosciusko, Kossuth, Garibaldi, Sigel, Schurz, and many others; and

Whereas this policy of making our country a haven of refuge for the oppressed of all nations has found expression in our laws as well as in our treaties with other nations; and

Whereas the political provisions contained in the so-called Burnett-Dillingham immigration bill would, if enacted, destroy the right of asylum, practically, contrary to the will and interest of the American people in large majority: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the twentieth, twenty-second, and twenty-ninth assembly districts, Local New York Socialist Party, in joint meeting assembled on February 19, 1914, at 1459 Third Avenue, do earnestly protest against the passage of this bill in its present form and urge the Members of the Senate to vote against it, so that America may not become politically the handmaid of the bloody Russian Czar.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the question of woman suffrage is a live issue at this time before the Senate. One of the questions frequently asked is whether woman suffrage has been a success in the States where women have been given the right to vote. I have been quoted in the newspapers as having said that in my State it had proved a failure. That is a mistake; I have never made any such statement. On the contrary, I believe woman suffrage has been beneficial to the State of California.

I have here an address issued by a committee of prominent women in my State giving the registration and the vote cast by the women as compared with the men, and some comments by prominent citizens of the State respecting this question. I ask that the address, which is short, may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[The Woman's Bulletin, December, 1913. Monthly. Vol. II, No. 7.]

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

ADDRESS IN FAVOR OF AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES EXTENDING THE RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE TO WOMEN.

(Written for presentation to the Committee on Woman Suffrage of the United States Senate by a committee of women of southern California.)

On the 10th of October, 1911, the women of California were granted the right to vote. Since that time a great many statements have been made concerning the operation of equal suffrage in this State. In consequence of the interest taken in the matter and the lack of other accurate reports, a committee of women in southern California herewith presents this report, consisting of statistics of the registration and voting of women, data on the activities of women's organizations, a list of bills of especial interest to women and children passed at the recent session of the California Legislature, and statements of public men on the actual working of equal suffrage in California.

This report is presented in the hope that a dispassionate statement of the way in which the women of California have met their new responsibilities may disabuse the minds of thoughtful persons of some misapprehensions, and that accurate information may be available for those who are courageously carrying on the struggle for political freedom in other States.

This report is not a selection. All figures investigated and every report received is herewith presented. This statement is an attempt to present the situation in an accurate and comprehensive way, and to avoid both the bias of partisanship and the uncertainty of a chance selection of precincts or communities.

The statistics of registration and voting were compiled in the offices of the city and county clerks from the official records. The registration of men and women is tabulated separately, but the vote is not. The figures of voting herewith presented represent an actual count of the entire vote from the rosters. In case of any doubt in signatures the benefit was given to the men. There is no way of determining the number of either men or women eligible for registration, and a registration of women equaling 80 per cent that of men would indicate a corresponding interest.

LOS ANGELES.

Population (about), 475,000. Registration, men, 97,186; women, 73,839. Voted, in last municipal election, June 3, 1913: Men 52,731, per cent of registration 54.2; women 37,100, per cent of registration 50 2.

Registration of women: Between October 10 and November 9, 1911, 81,843 women were registered by volunteer registrars. This was a feat considered by the county clerk most remarkable. The county had no funds to cover this expense, and the women who performed this service did so entirely free of charge.

Schools for voting: Schools for voting, equipped with official booths, sample ballots, rubber stamps, etc., were installed in the women's headquarters, and women were instructed how to vote correctly before the first election. It was generally remarked that women voted more expeditiously and with fewer mistakes than men.

Polling places: Before suffrage was granted to women election booths were located in barber shops, the lobbies of cheap hotels, barns, livery stables, and other undesirable places. In the election of June 3, 1913, polling places included 64 schoolhouses, 3 church buildings, 2 club houses, 2 libraries, 2 high-class hotels, and 122 tents were used for booths, as against 24 tents used in the election just previous to the granting of suffrage.

On December 3, 1912, the city voted on the question of a new charter providing for an advanced commission form of government, which was defeated. Aside from the newspapers and talks by men in school and other halls, practically the only dissemination of information concerning the proposed charter was through the women's organizations.

On March 25, 1913, 18 charter amendments were voted upon. Women assisted in drawing up these amendments and carried on a campaign of education concerning them. The vote averaged 55,195. Some were carried and others defeated. A distinct opinion was expressed on each amendment.

Improvement bonds were voted April 13, 1913, in the following amounts for the following purposes: Trunk line for the aqueduct, $1,500,000; harbor improvements, $2,500,000. At the same election bonds for a new city hall ($1,000,000), a municipal railway ($1,000,000), for two extensions of the aqueduct ($2,000,000 and $2,500,000, respectively), and for the purchase of the normal-school site ($600,000) were defeated. Women's organizations took a keen interest in the bond issues.

The liquor question: On December 5, 1911, an absolutely drastic liquor ordinance was defeated, 88,395 to 32,283. Los Angeles has only 200 saloons and these are strictly supervised. It is generally felt that the matter is well in hand. Women, as such, took no stand in the election.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS.

The largest organizations of women in the city are the Friday Morning Club; membership, 1,318; nonpartisan, general club. The public affairs committee, open to members and nonmembers, conducted a vigorous campaign on National, State, and municipal affairs, and particularly on legislative matters. Many of the regular club programs were devoted to public affairs, the luncheons to the discussion of such matters, and special open meetings were held. The club does not indorse candidates.

The Ebell Club; membership, 1,381; nonpartisan, general club. The civics committee has studied civic, political, and legislative questions. The regular programs have included many on public affairs. The club has thrown open its doors to various legislative meetings. The club does not indorse candidates.

The Women's City Club; membership, 450. The club holds weekly luncheon meetings devoted entirely to public affairs. The club is purely educational and nonpartisan. It does not indorse measures or persons.

Almost all the smaller clubs have active and growing civics sections, and many new clubs and organizations have been started solely for the consideration of civics and public questions.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Population (1910), 416,912. The figures of voting were not available for examination and compilation, as the clerk's office is overworked at present with a special election, a primary, and a municipal election. In the general election of 1912 over 90 per cent of the total registration voted.

Registration of women: No special attempt has been made by the authorities to register the women. The different women's organizations have furthered the work. Registration booths have been installed in club houses, hotels, stores, and other available places. Schools for voting were established before the first election at which women voted.

Improvement bonds: Civic center bonds to the amount of $5,000,000 were carried last year. Women worked for these bonds and are generally credited with carrying them. In September, 1913, municipal railway bonds were carried. Several of the women's organizations campaigned vigorously for these bonds. The vote was very heavy in the residence districts and light along the water front and through the undesirable district.

Closing the "Barbary Coast": On September 30, 1913, the sale of liquor in dance halls and the presence of women in saloons were prohibited in the district commonly known as the "Barbary Coast." Women's organizations have been preparing to meet the problems resulting from the passage of the red-light injunction and abatement law by the recent session of the legislature (since held up by the referendum). In connection with the closing of this district, organizations are endeavoring to find other employment for the girls thrown out of work and to meet the situation in an adequate way.

A thorough investigation of the police courts has been undertaken. The recall of Judge Weller was the first result of this investigation. Judge Weller had reduced the bail of a man admittedly guilty of a serious crime against a young girl. As a consequence the man left the State. Committees of women have regularly attended the various police courts to make a thorough study of the judges and of existing conditions, with the view of improving the personnel and general conditions of the courts, and of helping the women who come before these courts.

The largest organization of women is the California Civic League (the successor of the College Equal Suffrage League), with centers in 30 nearby cities, and 3,000 members. The San Francisco Center has 1,000 members. It holds weekly luncheon meetings, at which public affairs are discussed. The league's work is educational, and so far it has abstained from indorsing measures. It carried on a campaign of education on legislative matters this year and kept a watcher at the capitol.

Several other large clubs—the California Club, the New Era Club, and the Century Club—have carried on extensive work of education in civic matters. All of the general clubs are giving added time and attention to public affairs.

SAN DIEGO.

Population, 90,000. Registration, men, 15,799; women, 9,216. Voted in the last municipal election: Men, 9,961; per cent of registration, 63.04; women, 6,017; per cent of registration, 65.28. The population has doubled in the last two years. Most of the newcomers are from nonsuffrage States and the women do not take the interest in affairs that those who have been through a campaign take, or that those who have lived longer in a community would take.

In the water-front district, where the red-light district was formerly located, the vote was—women, 150; men, 897. The heaviest vote of women was in the moderate residence districts, where the women outvoted the men consistently.

Improvement bonds in the following amounts for the following purposes have been voted within the past two years: Harbor improvements, $1,000,000; sewers, water mains, etc., amounts not specified in the report; municipal water system, $2,500,000; park improvements, $850,000; schools, $350,000. All of these were voted separately.

The largest organization of women is the Women's Civic Center; nonpartisan; weekly meetings are held. It conducts an open forum on local, State, and National politics. Representatives attend council meetings and meetings of the board of education. The center has agitated and improved garbage collection, the milk supply, fire escapes and theater exits, street cleaning, and the weed nuisance, billboards, civic centers in the schools, additional parks, and playgrounds. They have worked to register all the women possible, have served in unusual numbers as election judges, and have worked consistently for all improvement bonds.

RIVERSIDE.

Population, 17,000. Registration, men, 3,420; women, 2,870. Figures of voting in the general election are not available, but in a bond election a year ago women voted 95 per cent of their registration, the voting of men falling slightly below this figure.

The bond issue for municipal water—amount of the bonds, $1,160,000—was carried by a vote of over 90 per cent of the registration. The interest in this issue was due to the women's campaign.

Eighteen months ago the mayor was threatened with recall because of his enforcement of the liquor laws. The attitude of the women quashed the movement.

The women's organizations have inspected streets and alleys, have advocated improved street cleaning, the destruction of weeds, the improvement of parks, playgrounds, and amusements. They have studied civics, the city charter and city ordinances, and legislative matters.

SANTA ANA.

Population, 10,000. Registration, men, 3,136; women, 2,224. Vote in the last general election: Men, 2,144; per cent of registration, 68.36; women, 1,394; per cent of registration, 62.68.

Improvement bonds for water in the amount of $63,000, and for fire protection, $12,000 were voted. Women campaigned for these bonds.

Santa Ana has no saloons. An ordinance to permit saloons was voted down, 682 to 110.

The largest organization of women is the Women's Civics Club. Membership, 120. The club conducts an open forum for the discussion of legislative and local matters. It assisted in registering the women and in conducting a school of voting. The club has agitated garbage collection, destruction of weeds, street cleaning, and an extension of parks and playgrounds. The women attend council meetings when any matter of interest is up for discussion.

POMONA.

Population (1910), 10,217. Figures of registration and voting not given. There have been no elections except State and National ones.

The largest women's organization is the Ebell Club. A civics section has been organized which has improved the cleaning of the streets, the collection of garbage, and the amusements of the town. The women attend council meetings.

REDONDO BEACH.

Population, 2,935. Registration, men, 793; women, 610. The vote in the last general election was: Men, 590; per cent of registration, 76.16; women, 376; per cent of registration, 61.63.

The largest organization of women is the Women's Civic Outlook Club; membership, 30. They petitioned the council to call an election for park bonds in the amount of $30,000, but the bonds failed to carry. They obtained a street-tree ordinance, additional funds for the library, a clean-up of vacant lots, improved garbage collection, the placing of rubbish cans on all street corners, destruction of weeds, and more inspection and attention to amusements. The women attend council meetings, discuss local affairs, write to the papers and to their representatives in the legislature.

BERKELEY.

Population, 40,434. Registration, men, 9,936; women, 8,661. In the last municipal election the men voted 4,874; per cent of registration, 49.05; women, 3,702; per cent of registration, 42.7. The largest vote was cast in the residence district.

The Berkeley Center of the California Civic League has made legislation its especial work this past year. It aims to work with the extension department of the State university not only for its own advantage, but also to bring other centers into close touch with the educational facilities open to all citizens of the State.

REDLANDS.

Population, 11,220. Registration, men, 2,002; women, 1,656. In a special election September 25, 1913, women cast 40 per cent of the vote. On October 1, 1913, Redlands voted "dry" by the largest vote in its history. Women voted 90 per cent of their registration.

The women have agitated parks, playgrounds, and improved amusements. They studied legislative matters, civics, and general public affairs. They write to their representatives and to the papers.

An ordinance to prohibit the sale of liquor was carried September 24, 1913, 778 to 610.

The largest organization of women is the Civic League; membership, 200; organized for general civic work. The College Equal Suffrage Organization has secured additional funds for parks, playgrounds, and education, and has improved the street cleaning and garbage collection. The Native Daughters of the Golden West, membership 50, have interested themselves in parks, streets, and the improvement of the beach.

The president and the secretary of the board of health are both women.

BAKERSFIELD.

Population, 18,000. Registration, men, 4,646; women, 2,036. A partial canvass of the vote showed women proportionately outvoting the men, but that is probably not true of the entire city. Bakersfield is the center of the oil industry and has a great many single men. The registration of men should be greatly in excess of that of women.

Good-roads bonds to the amount of $2,500,000 were voted a short time ago.

The women, through small organizations and individually, have interested themselves in housing conditions, parks, playgrounds, and amusements. They are cooperating with the juvenile court to an unusual degree.

SIERRA MADRE.

Population, 1,313. Registration, men, 279; women, 233. Vote in the last general election: Men, 219; per cent of registration, 80.11; women, 175; per cent of registration, 75.10.

The Civic League, membership 150, holds monthly meetings on public affairs exclusively.

The Shakespeare Club, membership, 600. Has a strong civics committee, which has recently been instrumental in establishing a municipal market.

Last year the voters defeated a prohibition ordinance. Pasadena has no saloons, and only a hotel restaurant license, strictly enforced. The proposed ordinance was drastic in the extreme.

SANTA MONICA.

Population (1910), 7,847. Registration, men, 2,284; women, 1,993. Voted in last general election: Men, 1,511; per cent of registration, 66.15; women, 1,134; per cent of registration, 57.28.

A group of women, asked to serve as an advisory board to the mayor, called the attention of the citizens and the grand jury to the most insanitary condition of the city jail, and succeeded in having the structure condemned and a modern building erected in its place.

The Pacific Civics Club was organized to study civics and public affairs.

Women have worked for parks and playgrounds.

SOUTH PASADENA.

Population (1910), 4,649. Registration, men, 1,273; women, 1,232. Voted in last general election: Men, 994; per cent of registration, 78.8; women, 922; per cent of registration, 74.83.

School bonds to the amount of $90,000 were voted this year. The interest in the bonds was slight until the women's organizations showed the necessity of the additional funds for the schools. The passage of the bonds is credited entirely to the women's campaign.

SAN GABRIEL.

Population, 1,500. Registration, men, 288; women, 210. Voted in the last municipal election: Men, 238; per cent of registration, 82.28; women, 151; per cent of registration, 70.19.

On September 23, 1913, an ordinance proposing to grant hotel and restaurant licenses (some of them in the immediate neighborhood of the Mission Playhouse) was defeated, 249 to 136. No special work was done in this election by women as such, though nearly every woman elector cast her ballot.

Women attend council meetings, write to the papers, and show interest in all lines of community affairs. There is one woman's civic club.

SANTA BARBARA.

Population, 6,640. Registration, men, 3,356; women, 3,284. Voted in the last municipal election: Men, 1,020; per cent of registration, 30.39; women, 457; per cent of registration, 13.91. This election was on a bond issue for the waterworks tunnel, $120,000. The opposition was very slight, the bonds carrying, 1,183 to 294.

May 13, 1913, several liquor questions were offered to the voters. Retail saloons were abolished, and also restaurant licenses. Hotels were permitted to have licenses to serve liquor with meals. The total vote was 4,403. In this election the men voted 2,404, 71.63 per cent of their registration; the women voted 1,999, 60.87 per cent of their registration. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union worked actively in this election, but the other women's clubs as organizations took no action.

The women attend council meetings when matters of special interest are to be discussed.

LEGISLATION.

The California Legislature of 1913 passed many laws of especial interest to women and children. One of the chief arguments used in the suffrage campaign was the inequality of women before the law. With the passage of the laws listed below, many of the injustices are remedied. The majority of these laws had been introduced in earlier sessions of the legislature but had failed of passage.

The legislature met January 6 and remained in session one month, during which time bills were introduced. In February adjournment was taken, the legislators returned to their constituents, and a campaign of education on legislative matters was carried on throughout the State. All the women's clubs and organizations held meetings and discussed bills and measures. The regular session of the legislature, convening in March, was remarkable for its close connection with the electorate.

During the entire session of the legislature the California Federation of Women's Clubs maintained headquarters, open to all women, at Hotel Sacramento. Information, conveniences, and protection were given, irrespective of club or party affiliations. The maintenance of these headquarters rendered the lobbying of women dignified and effective.

There were no women members of the legislature of 1913.

In reference to the expense incident to this "women's legislation" we quote the following appropriations:

Immigration commission (commissioners unpaid), $25,000 per year.

Industrial welfare (minimum wage) commission (commissioners unpaid), $15,000 per year.

Civil-service commission (commissioners paid), $25,000 per year.

Compilation of data concerning mothers' pensions, $3,000.

State training school for girls, $200,000.

Teachers' pensions, 5 per cent of inheritance tax and $1 per month from teachers.

Reporting of tuberculosis, additional appropriation to the State board of health, $7,500.

Weights and measures law, $12,000.

Criticism has been made of the increase in the cost of the State administration. The average increase every two years in the cost of administration for the 12 years preceding the last administration has been 20.77 per cent. The increase for these two years (the legislature meets biennially) is 15.9 per cent. This is the smallest increase in the history of the State, and it covers the largest increase in the growth of State institutions.

The leading bills of interest to women passed this year are:

The creation of an industrial welfare commission to investigate the conditions under which women and minors labor, with the power to invoke a minimum wage in any such industries.

The creation of an immigration commission to investigate and prepare for the coming of immigration with the opening of the Panama Canal.

The red-light injunction and abatement law, placing the responsibility of disorderly houses upon the property rather than upon the inmates, and providing for the prohibition of such houses.

The extension of the 8-hour law for women in include nurses in training and workers in apartment houses.

The age of consent, raising the age from 16 to 18.

The establishment of a State training school for girls, separating it from the general institution and providing for the most approved correctional methods and vocational training.

The teachers' pension law, granting pensions of $500 a year to teachers who have served 30 years, with a smaller pension to those disabled in less than that time.

The juvenile-court law, amending the law in order to separate dependent from delinquent children.

The joint-guardianship law, giving women equal rights over their unmarried minor children.

The mothers' pension law, amending the law which provided funds for State institutions caring for orphans and half orphans; providing that such funds could be used to care for the children in the mother's own home, but without increased appropriation; and creating three children's agents properly to investigate the families to which such funds are given.

The creation of a commission to compile data and statistics concerning mothers' and old-age pensions.

The net-container law, specifying that packages shall be marked with the amount of their net contents.

The weights-and-measures law, providing for a complete standard of weights and measures and the regular inspection of dealers.

The Roberts bill, prohibiting the destruction of any foodstuff fit for human consumption.

The workmen's-compensation law, requiring compulsory compensation for injuries and establishing a system of State industrial insurance.

The requirement of the wife's signature to legalize the assignment of a man's wages.

The amendment of the child-labor law, reducing the workday from nine to eight hours and restricting the granting of permits to the superintendent of schools. In California there is practically no child labor excepting in street trades.

The creation of a water commission, with authority over all water in the State.

The State civil-service law, bringing practically all State employees under the merit system.

The white-slave law, prohibiting traffic in women between counties; similar to the Mann Act as between States.

The tuberculosis law, providing for the reporting of all cases of tuberculosis to the State board of health.

The amendment to the liquor laws, prohibiting the sale of liquor between 2 a. m. and 6 a. m.

The law providing for the asexualization of certain inmates of insane asylums and State prisons.

The psychopathic parole law, providing for the parole of persons mentally abnormal but not dangerously insane, under the custody of psychopathic parole officers.

In the matter of prison reform all sentences except for murder are made indeterminate; strait-jackets and cold showers are prohibited; arrangements are made for the payment of wages to certain convicts and for rendering assistance to discharged prisoners.

The billboard law, prohibiting billboards of more than 10 feet in height, also "spite fences" of more than that height.

The State Federation of Women's Clubs advocated as its special bill the health certificate for marriage, requiring a certificate of freedom from venereal diseases of all persons applying for marriage licenses. The bill was fought on the grounds of sentiment, medical practice, and constitutionality. It was amended to omit the requirement of such certificates from women, and passed in that form. However, in amending the bill the wording was made vague and incorrect, and Gov. Johnson was obliged to veto it on the grounds that it would have been inoperative and unconstitutional.

TESTIMONY OF LEADING CITIZENS.

It is not necessary to give in their entirety all the letters received in reference to suffrage. The idea in presenting any part of these letters is not to offer praise of equal suffrage, but to give the views of a few of the men at the head of affairs. Some of these men were actively opposed to the granting of suffrage.

Mayor H. H. Rose, of Los Angeles, says:

"I can not speak for the women of California, but feel that I can do so for my female fellow citizens of Los Angeles, and will say that they show no signs of decreasing interest in civic and political affairs. They took a deep and abiding interest in all of the elections subsequent to their enfranchisement up to the present time—particularly in the last municipal election."

Edward Rainey, secretary to mayor of San Francisco, says:

"In behalf of the mayor, permit me to state that the women of San Francisco have cast a large proportion of the votes in such elections as have been held since they became electors, and that their interest in public affairs is one of the marked features of civic life in this city. Women's clubs of all kinds have organized civic sections, and are taking an active interest in public affairs of all descriptions."

William L. Peters, mayor of Riverside, says:

"Equal suffrage has certainly been a success in Riverside, Cal. With only 10 days in which to register, about 2,500 women registered for the city election in November, 1911, out of a population of about 16,000. This shows a wide-awake interest. About 90 per cent of the registration voted. Our Riverside women have shown a sincere desire to inform themselves on political and municipal affairs. Their votes have been intelligently cast, and we certainly appreciate and welcome their help and cooperation."

William Thum, former mayor of Pasadena, says:

"I take pleasure in saying that none of the imaginary objections to woman's suffrage have turned out to be valid objections in California. I am fully satisfied that both women and men will be benefited by it. Although woman's suffrage has been in operation but a short time, it seems already to have been in operation from the beginning."

Lee R. Matthews, mayor of Pomona, says:

"I believe that it is a great movement for the citizens of the State, and I think that it will put the political platform on a much higher plane than it has ever been before, because we know that in any organization where the women are interested the moral standing is always placed upon a higher basis.

"When the women of the community will take the interest that they have shown in suffrage, we can rest assured and look forward to the time when all of our public offices will be filled with men and women who are a credit to the community that they represent."

Charles F. O'Neall, mayor of San Diego, says:

"I have by experience and observation been convinced that the women thoroughly realize and appreciate the value of their privilege to vote. During the campaign in this city in the spring of this year they took a very active part for and against the various candidates, and I believe that more of them, in proportion to the registration, exercised the franchise than did the men. I have always been enthusiastic over the right of women to vote, and I have no reason to regret their having that privilege."

George Alexander, former mayor of Los Angeles, says:

"The antisuffragists who say that women in California do not take an interest in public affairs should come to California at the time we are holding a campaign in the State or cities, and he or she soon would be without argument against suffrage.

"The use of the ballot by the women of California is an acknowledged success, especially in Los Angeles. I do not believe that any intelligent man would have the temerity to challenge the statement that the women of Los Angeles have invariably displayed splendid judgment and discretion in their use of the franchise. In every instance since they obtained the right to vote the women have shown themselves capable of properly exercising the ballot. Their votes were registered as rapidly as those of the men and with fewer mistakes and spoiled ballots.

"My observances, taken in several elections since suffrage was granted in this State, incline me to the belief that the women can always be depended upon to do the right thing by the city in casting their ballot. Their interest in all that pertains to the home is keener than that of the men, and their interest in the welfare and prosperity of the city, State, and country is every whit as great."

Lewis R. Works, judge of the superior court, says:

"The women of California have vigorously exercised the right of suffrage since the passage of the constitutional amendment upon the subject. More than a fair percentage of the vote at each election has been polled by them, in view of all the circumstances. I mean by this, that it could hardly be expected that as many women as men would vote immediately after the granting of suffrage to women. Notwithstanding this fact, I have known of some large precincts in which the vote of the women has equalled that of the men, and have known of many such precincts in which from 30 to 45 per cent of the vote was cast by women. I regard this condition of affairs as very satisfying, and, from the standpoint of its use, clearly regard woman's suffrage as a success in California.

"The women are deeply interested in public affairs and in civic betterment. It has been my good fortune to address many gatherings of women, both during the suffrage campaign and since, upon all kinds of civic problems. The meetings have always been well attended, and I have no hesitation in saying that at them an interest is shown which is superior to the interest shown by men at similar gatherings. I have no hesitation in saying further that the women of California are more diligent than the men at the present time in the way of the study of civic and political problems. This is as it should be, on account of the suffrage having so recently been extended to them, but it is certainly the fact.

"Very few office seekers have developed among the women of California. Their work in civic and political matters is done almost universally from a desire to educate themselves upon the questions involved, and from truly altruistic and humanitarian motives. It is true that the women of California have become great politicians, but they have become politicians in the highest and best sense, and not in the sense which was formerly conveyed by the use of the word.

"You ask whether, in my opinion, the votes of women in California have been sentimental, ill-considered, and undesirable. I at once enter a negative answer in the case of the last two words. If you use the word "sentimental," as I suppose you do, with the idea that there is no sense back of the sentiment, I enter an equally positive negative as to the use of that word. I do, however, consider that the votes of women are sometimes inspired, as the votes of men oftener ought to be, from true sentiment. Every lover of the right of equal suffrage—and I am one of them—will assert that the participation of women in political affairs is necessary to the well-being of government, because that participation will be grounded upon sentiment in the proper sense of that word. Under the exclusive dominion of men, government has been freed too much from true sentiment. Men have looked at government, at civics, at economics, from the standpoint of "business" alone. Humanitarianism and human rights, which can be protected only with the admixture of true sentiment in governmental affairs, have been sadly overlooked. Every lover of equal suffrage will tell you that the softening and humanizing influence of woman is needed as much, if not more, in governmental affairs than the history of the world has always and consistently shown that it is needed in all other affairs. There can be nothing like perfection in any of the serious concerns of life without the judicious blending of the masculine and feminine principles.

"Men of public affairs in California generally regard equal suffrage as of great benefit to the Commonwealth. This is true even of some of the men who opposed the extension of suffrage to women. I have heard a number of such men, men of prominence, say that the manner in which the right has been exercised by the women of California has converted them and has convinced them not only of the propriety but of the utility of suffrage. There are some of the old opposers of equal suffrage among the men who yet hang out, but their number is growing gradually less."

Louis W. Myers, judge of the superior court, says:

"The assertion that women are not interested in public affairs and civic betterment is certainly not applicable to Los Angeles County, where the women have been taking a most active, intelligent, and efficient part in practically every movement for civic betterment and have initiated many of these.

"I have had the fortune to be associated in the active work of several political campaigns with a number of women, and have found them, almost without exception, to be women of the highest type, actuated by unselfish motives of patriotism and altruism—women whom it was a pleasure to know and with whom it was a pleasure to work.

"That women's votes are frequently ill considered and influenced by sentiment I do not doubt, but so, also, are the men's, in many instances. I think that, on the average, the women apply quite as much intelligence and careful consideration to their exercise of the franchise as do the men, and considerably more conscience when moral issues are involved.

"I do not think that the adoption of equal suffrage will bring about the millennium or result immediately in any great reform, but I do believe that it will make, slowly but steadily, for higher and better standards in all our political institutions."

Frederick W. Houser, judge of the superior court, says:

"From what has come under my personal notice and from what I have heard, I believe that women, generally, are very much interested in public and civic affairs, and that they are exercising the right to vote with as much intelligence and discrimination as is shown by the men. I see nothing 'sentimental' in the 'general character of the women's vote,' and I know of no reason for saying that woman's suffrage in California, at least, is in any way undesirable. The right of suffrage as exercised by the women of California has certainly done no harm, but, on the contrary, its effect has undoubtedly been toward the betterment of civic conditions."

John Francis Neylan, chairman State board of control, says:

"Of course no man can tell to what extent the granting of equal suffrage to women was responsible for those things which have been accomplished in California. An enthusiastic suffragist might claim that all the credit for what has been accomplished was due to the granting of suffrage; this would not be true. On the other hand, the antisuffrage enthusiast, inspired by bitter partisanship, would contend that these things were accomplished in spite of woman's suffrage. Somewhere between these two extremes lies the truth.

"My personal opinion is that in the fight to accomplish what seemed to him best for the people of the Commonwealth Gov. Johnson has received valuable assistance from the newly enfranchised women of California. I think that the changes would have come under Johnson's leadership, but I am also convinced that they could never have been accomplished in the incredibly short time of three years if it had not been for the influence of women upon the political life of California."

A. J. Wallace, lieutenant governor of California, says:

"Many women in California take little or no interest in the exercise of their right to vote, but that is true of many men in California. The fact is that since women's right to vote was recognized in this State they have taken a very great interest in public affairs. This has been evidenced in more than one election. In fact, it is simply remarkable that women should in so short a time have shown so great an interest in public matters and have voted with such marked intelligence. Equal suffrage makes California's progress more assured."

C. E. Cebastian, chief of police, Los Angeles, says:

"The women in California won a bloodless revolution when the right to the ballot was allotted them. It was a right which all women in a civilized country should enjoy, a duty which they should be called upon to perform.

"Since the institution of equal suffrage in the State of California there has been a wave of progressive and educational reform legislation, which can be directly attributed to the influence of woman's activity.

"Woman's primal duty is in the home, but woman should have the right to express her opinion and wield an actual influence at the polls on every question of legislation and on every issue of elections, in order that she may protect that home. She can do more than merely vote; she can initiate issues of importance, with the added initiative of having a voice in obtaining their institution."

Harvey E. Andrews, managing editor of the Los Angeles Times, says:

"Woman suffrage in California has worked as well as manhood suffrage. There is about the same degree of neglect by either sex. I opposed woman suffrage, but its operation in this State has not furnished ground for criticism."

The judges of the superior court of Los Angeles County say:

"Women have taken a deep concern in civic affairs since their enfranchisement; they have been earnest in the consideration of public matters and careful in investigating questions submitted to the electors.

"Women have shown no diminution in their interest in the ballot, but continue to register and vote in large numbers.

"Women are filling appointive and elective positions with credit but have not been active in seeking public office.

"There is no movement for the repeal of the law conferring equal suffrage, and the sentiment of this section would not, in our opinion, seem to favor any such action."

Fred H. Taft, Grant Jackson, N. P. Conrey, Willis I. Morrison, Paul J. McCormick, Gavin W. Craig, Louis W. Myers, Lewis R. Works, John M. York, Chas. Monroe, Curtis D. Wilbur, Frederick W. Houser, Frank P. Willis, Charles Wellborn, John W. Shenk, judges of the superior court, Los Angeles County, Cal.

In the light of these statistics of women's voting, these reports of their interests and activities, and the opinions expressed by prominent men, what may fairly be concluded about woman suffrage in California after two years of actual operation?

RESULTS OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Suffrage has given a new interest, purpose, and effectiveness to the thousands of women's clubs throughout the State and has brought scores of new organizations into being for the express purpose of equipping the women with a knowledge of government and civics.

Women have registered and voted at regular and special elections in practically the same, and in some instances larger, proportion than the men.

Equal suffrage has stimulated the men as well as the women to a greater interest in civic affairs.

It has resulted in putting better, cleaner, and more public-spirited men into office.

It has given us more convenient and respectable polling places.

It has been the means of accomplishing what male suffrage alone never has accomplished and probably never would accomplish—the recall of an unfit judge.

It has resulted in the enactment of laws concerning health, morals, child welfare, and female civil rights, for which the women, while unenfranchised, had for years pleaded in vain.

It has not resulted in a scramble for office on the part of women; on the contrary, the women, as a class, recognizing their lack of political training, have so far deliberately refrained from seeking office.

It has not resulted in corrupting the women; it has resulted in bettering the men, precisely as men always are uplifted and strengthened in any field of endeavor in which women are permitted to share with them their labors and problems.

It has not resulted in breaking up the home; it has strengthened the home ties by reason of a broader mutuality of interests.

It has not caused the women to neglect their duties; both as citizens and as mothers, it has enabled them to meet their responsibilities with greater intelligence and efficiency.

Further than this brief summary of results, it is right that some of the lessons of the suffrage campaign and the consequent enfranchisement of women should be further developed.

THE REAL ENEMIES OF SUFFRAGE.

The antisuffragists who, to their credit be it said, have registered and and voted and are making good citizens, were an essential feature of the suffrage campaign, as open discussion and argument about any question clears the atmosphere and makes for progress.

The antisuffragists were sincere in their position, but the suffragists realized that they were at no time the real opposition to woman suffrage. The corrupt political organizations, the protectors of vice and crime and gambling, the liquor dealers, and the white slavers of California were the real enemies of the enfranchisement of women. These enemies were not afraid of the vote of the "bad women," of which so much was said in the campaign, but they feared the potential strength of the good woman's vote. As far as the so-called "bad woman's" vote is concerned, investigation has shown that it is practically negligible; these women do not register nor give a place of residence, because most of them live under assumed names and are a shifting population. An analysis of voting figures in different towns shows the heaviest women's vote to be in precincts where prosperous professional and business people reside; the average woman's vote in precincts where persons of modest means—clerks and mechanics—live, the smaller woman's vote in the industrial districts.

THE RECALL OF JUDGE WELLER.

The recall of Judge Weller mentioned above was one of the most spectacular things which the women of California have done with the ballot, and it was not done hastily nor hysterically.

Facts and figures proved the difficulty of securing convictions even when the cases were brought to trial. The Woman's Recall League was formed and secured the requisite number of signatures to a petition for a recall election.

The moral question involved was the most vital that a community can face. Judge Weller and his petty little judicial job were negligible quantities. Infinitely more was at stake than the fate of a police judge or a thousand police judges.

It was not a puny judge, but a powerful and poisonous system with which the voters of San Francisco dealt. That system made possible the destruction of women with impunity. When Judge Weller, in his own defense, declared that in reducing the bond of Hendricks to a figure that made his escape possible and easy, he was merely following the custom of the police courts in cases of that character, he defined that system.

Judge Weller should have been, and was, recalled. He was recalled not because he was Judge Weller but because in this instance he stood for a rotten judicial system and custom that is a menace to the sancity of the home and to the safety of the women who make the home.

FIRST ELECTION IN LOS ANGELES.

The first election in Los Angeles after women were enfranchised was one of peculiar interest, in circumstances which aroused even the most indifferent citizens to active participation.

This was the mayoralty election following the primaries at which the Socialist candidate received 3,000 votes more than the good-government candidate. There was also a drastic prohibition ordinance on the ballot. Women were not eligible voters at the primary election; they were an unknown quantity in politics, and many apprehensions were felt as to their conduct as voters.

That election answered for all time the objections that many men and women in Los Angeles had felt toward women voting. Upward of 80,000 women were registered in a little over three weeks by the volunteer services of women as registration clerks. A larger percentage of the registered women voters went to the polls than the percentage of registered men voters, and the election was the cleanest and most orderly held in the city in years.

The tone and atmosphere about the polling places were distinctly improved over that which prevailed in previous elections. The women voted with discrimination equal to that of the men, and they spoiled fewer ballots.

Their vote on the liquor question was a vote of confidence in the liquor regulations of Los Angeles, where in a city of over 400,000 population there are only 200 saloons in restricted districts with precinct local option.

The women were not influenced by their prejudices, but calmly reasoned that they would prefer to take chances with regulated, licensed places than with prohibition and "blind tigers." Even those who may deem them wrong on moral grounds must admit their capacity for political reasoning in a matter so vital to them and appealing so strongly to their emotions.

WOMEN SEEK INFORMATION.

The women of California have demonstrated the truth of the saying, "The more you know the less you think you know." When the responsibility of citizenship was conferred upon them, they at once began seeking for information to enable them to counsel wisely, to judge candidates and situations with discrimination, and so to vote intelligently.

Dozens of new organizations have come into existence all over the State for the expressed purpose of educating women voters. Almost every town in the State has its woman's club, with a public affairs or civics committee, which is bringing to the attention of the women questions of local, State, and National interest for investigation and information.

INTELLIGENCE OF WOMEN VOTERS.

In the Eastern States much is said about the vote of the ignorant woman; it is perfectly honest to say that the women who vote in California are intelligent women, they are the women of such organizations as the Parent-Teacher Associations, made up of the mothers who are deeply concerned in their children's education and school environment; the women of the Teachers' Clubs, the Woman's Christian Temperance

Unions, the Nurses' Clubs, the Woman's Trade Unions League, the Young Woman's Christian Associations, and the members of the many study clubs. These women individually and in their associations are conscientiously trying to do their duty as voters, and surely anyone will admit that they represent intelligence and morality.

In trying to draw conclusions from any election or series of elections it is necessary to remember this fact—there are 125.5 men to every 100 women in California.

TOO FREQUENT ELECTIONS LOWER VOTE.

It is not possible to arouse an equal amount of interest in every question that comes before the voters. Under the election laws of California and with the initiative, referendum, and recall, there are many subjects which are brought up for popular vote which in other States are settled by legislative action. In the last two years there have been in Los Angeles City and County 15 elections, at some of which very complicated issues have been presented to the voters. There have been elections on a city and county charter, amendments to the State constitution, initiative measures, bond issues for parks, water, power, etc., besides regular municipal, State, and National elections. All persons are not interested in all these questions, and so the percentage of the vote varies from one election to another.

LOCAL CONDITIONS INFLUENCE "WET" AND "DRY" ELECTIONS.

The question of "wet" and "dry" elections is almost always influenced by local conditions, as in the Pasadena election, where a most drastic prohibition ordinance was defeated. Eastern antisuffragists claimed that the women voted "wet." Pasadena has not had a saloon in over 20 years, and women showed conservative common sense in leaving matters as they were.

VOTING A NEW THING.

While in certain instances it seems that the percentage of women voting should be higher than it is, we hope that as time goes on it will increase, and that the vote of the men will increase correspondingly. When one considers that voting is new to women, that their attention has only recently been directly turned to public matters with the responsibility of forming a definite opinion at a given time, the wonder is that so many have responded to the call to citizenship. With this in mind a comparison with the record of men who have traditionally had a share in public thought and work gives the women the better showing.

INACCURATE REPORTS.

It is the fashion nowadays for the newspapers to run the headline, "The women did it." At a recent election in Anaheim, where there are 14 wineries, the majority voted for license. A Los Angeles evening paper on the day of election had the headlines, "Women work at polls to make Anaheim 'dry,'" and the next morning a newspaper, published by the same management, had the headline, "Women's vote helps keep Anaheim wet." Now, you may take your choice of what you want to believe was the real situation.

RECENT LEGISLATION FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Not one woman went to the legislature or supported a bill for private or personal gain; all of the measures for which they worked were along humanitarian lines for the better protection of women and children and the benefit of the race. The same thing had been true of the women and the character of the laws presented at many previous legislatures, but with only the vaunted indirect influence behind them progress was slow and painful. The fine humanitarian laws of the last legislature show clearly what women with the vote can do.

DECREASE OF CRIME.

One of the letters quoted above is from the Los Angeles chief of police, who went to Washington, D. C., last summer to the meeting of the National Association of Police Chiefs. He told them in an address on woman suffrage that "women had done the greatest service in breaking down a wall of false reticence which has prevented public discussion and public understanding of one of the most vital problems of crime," and that since we had suffrage crime has materially lessened in the entire State. He also said that the tone of politics has been raised in the State by the influence of women's votes. "It is not only what the women have done," he said, "but it is the unconscious influence which their votes command that has bettered conditions."

WHAT WOMEN WANT.

Women are asking simply for the right to fulfill their traditional duties, to do those things for which they are fitted by their natural instincts and long training as protectors of the home and the guardians of children. They are citizens, they have responsibilities, and yet the right to do their duty and fulfill these responsibilities is denied them.

It is proper to ask what are the results of suffrage, what women are doing with the ballot, and whether they are using it. But these things are, after all, only incidental to the main issue, which is that responsibility develops character and that the strength of a democracy rests on the intelligence, morality, and character of its citizens.

Suffrage is the right of every citizen in a democracy, and it belongs to women by every right of reason, logic, and justice. Women, as human beings and as citizens, should have the right to every possible means of education, every developing experience, every avenue of self-expression, and the opportunity of service.

Verily, the woman of California has found in the ballot an added responsibility. But the responsibility born of her being, as she earnestly believes, is one to which she promptly responds. Instinctively she welcomes it as a means to a broader and more effective expression of life. Never in the history of the world has woman asked for any right, any privilege, save only that she might make of it a responsibility for the better discharge of her duties to the race. In the evolution of government, the State has been gradually taking unto itself the duties that the Creator Himself has labeled as feminine—the care and education of the child and the preservation of the purity and health of the home. Therefore it is that the woman of to-day is demanding a voice and a place in the political household; and therefore it is that the woman of California rejoices in spirit that this new civic responsibility is truly hers.

To her sisters throughout the Nation and the world she extends the hand of fellowship and of good cheer, and the glad assurance that in this larger significance of life she is finding increased strength and power and manifold possibilities for good, and she hopes that her own political life will be such that it will make the entrance into political equality easier for all other women. She does not wish to take man's place in the world, but because she is a woman and man's complement, she wishes to be his comrade and coworker for the good of the community and the uplift of the race.

The order was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That WILLIAM J. STONE, a Senator from Missouri, is hereby designated as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. STONE] has been appointed chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. In view of the fact that it will impose upon him additional duties and burdens, and also in view of the fact that he does not wish to have more chairmanships than will seem just to his colleagues and proper under the circumstances, I have been requested by him to say to the Senate that he desires to be excused from further service as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I make this announcement, of course, at his request.

THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND NATIONAL QUARANTINE.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 282), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of joint resolution named by him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move, as a substitute for the motion, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 181, being the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota moves, as a substitute for the motion made by the Senator from Arizona, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senators if they will wait until 2 o'clock, so that whichever motion is agreed to the business moved by that motion shall be the unfinished business. It seems to me that, under the rules of the Senate, we ought to have a right to occasionally consider the calendar. I would, therefore, suggest to the Senator from Arizona and to the Senator from North Dakota that we proceed with the calendar until 2 o'clock and then at that time to let the merits of these two motions be decided as to which of the measures shall be the unfinished business. The calendar is getting very large, and we rarely have an opportunity to consider measures upon it.

Mr. McCUMBER. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to do that; but it is probably a question whether one or the other of these measures will ultimately become the unfinished business. So I feel that, under the circumstances, I can not longer keep a bill in abeyance that has been before the Senate for more than 12 years and has been three times favorably reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motions are not subject to debate.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I understand that.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not debating them; I am simply requesting the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from North Dakota to delay their motions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to debate. The question is on the substitute motion offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] for the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. REED. Do I understand the Chair to rule that no reason can be given for or against either of these propositions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is perfectly clear—and the Senator from Missouri is probably familiar with it—that all motions made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate. The rule, the Chair repeats, is clear.

Mr. REED. I understand that this motion is more than that. I understand the motion is to make these bills the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can not be done in that way; and that is not the motion. The motion of the Senator from Arizona is to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1, and the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120. The question is——

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. REED. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What motion?

Mr. REED. Of course, if the motion is laid on the table——

Mr. ASHURST. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable. The Chair asked for information, what motion the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] moved to lay on the table.

Mr. REED. The motion that I make is to lay on the table the entire proposition now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay the motion of the Senator from North Dakota on the table.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, so as to be able to vote intelligently when the proposition is presented. As I understand, if these motions are laid on the table, will it then be in order to take up the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule upon that question when it is presented. There is no issue of that kind pending.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to know, so that I may vote intelligently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair declines to make rulings in advance of any issue presented.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is to lay on the table both the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the motion of the Senater from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], but the Chair did not so state. I should like to know if I am correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Missouri is to lay the motion on the table. That would carry with it the motion of the Senator from North Dakota. Its legal effect the Chair will determine when called upon to do so.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to ascertain definitely what is the motion of the Senator from Missouri. The Senator stated that he desired to lay both motions on the table. I do not know whether that is his motion or what it is; but we ought to know what we are voting on, and I wish the Senator would either renew his motion or the Secretary would restate it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona made a motion to take up the woman-suffrage joint resolution and the Senator from North Dakota moved to amend that by substituting therefor another measure. A motion to lay on the table will carry not only the original motion but also the amended motion.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do not think that is right, Mr. President, and that is the reason I am asking the question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President, which is that under the rule where a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of a bill it is not amendable, and a motion can not be substituted to proceed to the consideration of some other bill.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I should like to have the Senator from Connecticut point out that rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think I can do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut appears to be correct. The rule provides:

> A motion to proceed to the consideration of any business is not subject to amendment and shall be determined without debate.

The Chair will state, however, that the point of order comes a little late.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have just come into the Senate Chamber and did not know what the parliamentary situation was in other respects.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a point of order can be made at any stage of the proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The Chair rules, if the point of order be made, that the motion of the Senator from Arizona is not subject to amendment. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is it not proper to amend the motion by moving to proceed with the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to Rules VIII, IX, and X, which have been digested in what is called the Procedure of the Senate in this form:

> A motion to proceed to the consideration of any business is not subject to amendment and shall be determined without debate.

The reason for the rule is apparent to the Chair.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Arizona. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from Rhode Island has not voted.

Mr. WALSH I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] which I transfer to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays, 47, as follows:

So the Senate refused to lay on the table the motion of Mr. ASHURST.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

[Mr. ASHURST addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. I am ill and I do not feel like speaking to-day.

Mr. ASHURST. Much as I am devoted to my friend the Senator from Tennessee, obviously I could not consent that the unfinished business be laid aside, because then the fruit of many weary hours of labor in trying to get Senate joint resolution No. 1 to its present position would be lost. So I must object.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I will say to the Senator that if we shall lay aside the resolution temporarily he can proceed with Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] knows how devoted I am to him in private friendship——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I am sure of that.

Mr. ASHURST. But I must not by any lapse or neglect on my part allow Senate joint resolution No. 1 to lose its present position. Its present position has been too hardly won to be lost through any lapse on my part.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to make a privileged motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. If Senate resolution 254 is not laid aside, I take it that it is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado for a moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1 and also at the conclusion of the consideration of the grain-inspection bill, which was referred to on Saturday by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], both of which seem to be under the notices on the calendar, I shall move to take up and consider joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ASHURST. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] was recognized to make a privileged motion.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg pardon. When Senate resolution 254 was laid before the Senate I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee was recognized when it was laid before the Senate and requested unanimous consent that it be laid aside.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that Senate joint resolution No. 1 be now taken up.

Mr. LODGE. It is not necessary to make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I take it Senate resolution 254 is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, pending which the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] made a privileged motion, but yielded to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] that he might give a notice which he stated. The Chair holds that the motion of the Senator from Montana must be put.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion is put and carried what effect will it have on the various unfinished pieces of business of the Senator from Arizona, the Senator from Tennessee, and the Senator from North Dakota?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will determine that when it is submitted to the Chair. The Chair can only rule on parliamentary questions as they are presented.

Mr. MYERS. Senators rise here every day and make parliamentary inquiries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course; but the present occupant of the chair can not anticipate and rule on questions not properly before the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Montana will yield to me for just a moment——

Mr. MYERS. I yield, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope sincerely that the Senator from Montana will not insist on his motion to go into executive session. It seems to me we could dispose of the unfinished business in a very short time. That would place Senate joint resolution No. 1, which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has so ably discussed, on the calendar as the unfinished business. After we have had the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee on the calendar as the unfinished business for several weeks, I do not believe it is fair to use it as a buffer to prevent the joint resolution which has been discussed by the Senator from Arizona, from being made the unfinished business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MYERS. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MYERS. I make this motion as a substitute——

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator from Montana yielded to me?

Mr. MYERS. I did; but the Chair seems to think that is not proper.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose simply to state the parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Dakota said that if the unfinished business were disposed of, then Senate joint resolution No. 1 would be the unfinished business. I think he is in error about that. In order to make Senate joint resolution No. 1 the unfinished business it must be taken up on motion or by unanimous consent after 2 o'clock. I hope the Senator from Arizona will move to take it up and let us ascertain whether we would rather have that the unfinished business than something else.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I of course meant, as I think it is understood by every Senator here, that the Senator from Arizona intends, if he is given the opportunity, to move that Senate joint resolutoin No. 1 be taken up for consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that the motion of the Senator from Montana is a privileged motion, and all Senators who desire to defeat Senate joint resolution No. 1 from further consideration to-day and leave the unfinished business that is on the calendar, will vote for an executive session, but those Senators who want——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw that motion and make a motion——

Mr. BRYAN. I move——

Mr. MYERS. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate resolution 254 is before the Senate. The Senator from Montana stated to the Chair that he desired to present a motion of a privileged character, and the Chair recognized him for that purpose. That does not displace the order before the Senate. Objection having been made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily, it is before the Senate, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I yield to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MYERS. Have I not the floor? I have not yielded it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana had the floor, but he withdrew his motion.

Mr. MYERS. I want to make another motion in lieu of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee yielded to the Senator from Florida, who makes a privileged motion.

Mr. MYERS. I protest that I have never yielded the floor. I did not finish my sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator has not the floor. The Senator will permit the Chair to call attention to the fact that a Senator can not get the floor for the purpose of making a privileged motion and then withdraw it. The motion of the Senator from Florida is in order.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is absent from the city. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], I transfer the pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. THORNTON's name was called). I wish to state that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I am informed by his colleague that he would vote as I would upon this question, and I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire whether the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with that Senator, and for that reason withhold my vote.

Mr. DU PONT. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who is absent from the Chamber, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. NELSON] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 34, as follows:

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business, which is Senate resolution No. 254, is before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business this day at 4 o'clock p. m.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that a motion of that kind is not in order. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire makes the point of order that the motion is not in order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, Senate resolution 254, that a special committee of five Senators be appointed, is now before the Senate and is the unfinished business, and Senate joint resolution No. 1, in regard to woman suffrage, is not before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. That being the case, and Senate joint resolution No. 1 not being before the Senate, I appeal to the Senator from Arizona not to interpose an objection to my request for unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside Senate resolution 254. I have been ill. I have certain reasons which I wish to present to the Senate in support of my resolution, but I am unable to do so to-day, this being the first day that I have been out. I am physically unable to go forward with the matter. This course will not interfere at all with the status of the joint resolution the Senator has in charge, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona objects.

Mr. ASHURST. I move, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I move that the Senate resolution 254 be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that that can not be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that such a motion can not be made.

Mr. ASHURST. I insist upon my motion, most respectfully, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I renew my motion now, after 2 o'clock, as a substitute for the motion made by the Senator from Arizona, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120, providing for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce. I know the point of order was made before 2 o'clock, but it can not be made after 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota offers as a substitute for the motion made by the Senator from Arizona that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. REED. Would that make the bill of the Senator from North Dakota the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not at this time anticipate the ruling upon that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. If I may make a suggestion, should the motion of the Senator from North Dakota prevail a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill, which would necessarily follow, would make it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it is the impression of the present occupant of the chair, though the question, of course, is not before the Chair for determination at this time, that the adoption of the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120 would make it the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. There would have to be a motion to proceed to its consideration. We first vote on the motion to amend the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is adopted the question then will be upon the motion of the Senator from Arizona as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I understand the Senator from Arizona has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the constitutional amendment extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that that motion is not amendable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is in order at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was his motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from North Dakota is to substitute for the motion made by the Senator from Arizona that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 120.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not, of course, assume that it is of any interest to the Chair that the Senator from Connecticut does not agree with him on that question. I did not understand that a motion to proceed to the consideration of one measure could be amended by moving to proceed to the consideration of some other measure, and I make the point of order on that ground. The Senate can vote down the motion to proceed to one measure if it wishes to proceed with the other.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly that is the ordinary way of proceeding, but it has been ruled to be in order to make a motion to amend. If that is in order and a motion to amend is made, of course the question is on the substitution of one measure for the other, and then must come a motion to proceed to its consideration, whichever way it is decided, whether the motion to amend is adopted or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that motions of this character by way of a substitute are unusual; but the Chair thinks that under the rule at this time the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not appeal from the ruling of the Chair, because I can not at this minute turn to the rule, but I have it in mind that there is a general rule which forbids such a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That rule the Chair believes refers to proceedings during the morning hour under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has simply been the custom not to do it. There is no specific rule.

I now rise, Mr. President, to move to lay the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the motion of the Senator from Arizona on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the motion of the Senator from Arizona on the table.

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On that motion the Senator from North Dakota asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. The vote is on the substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota on the table.

Mr. LODGE. Why not take a vote on the direct question? That is a more simple procedure.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the motion is carried, it does not table the original motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I will state that if I were at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is detained from the Chamber by sickness. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I am advised that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], with whom I am paired, would, if present, vote upon this question as I intend to vote. I accordingly vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES. While I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], I am informed that if present he would vote as I intend to do. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair heretofore stated with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. FALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. CATRON] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas, 53; nays, 9, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. GALLINGER to lay the amendment of Mr. McCUMBER on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me in order that I may give a notice?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall move to take up Senate bill 120, to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and I wish then to submit some remarks upon the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, first, I wish to express my delight upon the result of the recent friendly parliamentary skirmish, which result, it seems to me, ought to be gratifying to all who wish to make progress respecting this joint resolution, for such action has made Senate joint resolution 1 the unfinished business. I shall not at this time ask for a vote, because three or four Senators wish to discuss the joint resolution; and as I was proceeding in my remarks to say——

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JAMES. I would suggest to the Senator from Arizona that perhaps he might be able to get a vote right now upon the joint resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. I earnestly hope that we may have a vote, and I have sent for two or three Senators who wish to speak upon the subject before the vote is taken. I am advised that they will be here in a moment. I myself am ready to vote now upon the joint resolution and have been ready to vote upon it for six months past.

Mr. JAMES. It does not seem that any Senator is in the Chamber who desires to speak, except the Senator from Arizona, and I thought there might now be had a vote upon the joint resolution.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ASHURST. I do for a question.

Mr. REED. Well, I desire to make an observation, but a very short one.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I objected the other day to this joint resolution being made the unfinished business, and I have continued to object to its being made the unfinished business, not because I desire to obstruct its passage, but because I desire that it shall not be made the means of obstructing the passage of other legislation which is of very great importance, and which, I hope, will be disposed of, so that Congress may adjourn at a reasonable time next summer. I am perfectly willing to vote on this joint resolution to-day, and I do not think, since it has been forced in here as a matter of unfinished business, that it ought to be laid aside for a moment because Senators desire to make speeches. They have been here to assist in forcing the joint resolution as a matter of unfinished business; now let us have a vote and finish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no desire further to consume the time of the Senate in the discussion of the joint resolution. As I have heretofore stated, I have been ready to vote on it for six months past, and am ready to vote now. There is no reason why I should further tire the Senate. I see about me Senators, whose names I am not at liberty to mention, who have told me that they wished to discuss the joint resolution. Their presence in the Chamber relieves me from the necessity of saying anything further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to be heard upon this joint resolution.

When we approach a subject of such grave importance which involves the fundamentals of human liberty, as does this joint resolution, we ought to look at it from the standpoint, first, as to whether it is right; then we may consider whether it is practicable; and whether it is expedient.

It seems to me that no one who believes in the eternal truths of the Declaration of Independence can deny the principle that underlies this joint resolution. In that immortal document it was declared that all men are created equal—not in color, not in size, not in intellect, not in many of the things in this life, but equal in the rights of man. That Declaration further says that man is entitled as an inalienable right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and that in order "to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers," not from parliaments, not from kings, but from "the consent of the governed." Inasmuch as woman is a human being, her consent never having been obtained to her disfranchisement, she is entitled, under that principle of the Declaration of Independence, to have her consent sought and obtained in the matter of legislation.

I want to read some letters which I have received relative to the charge sometimes made that dissensions are produced among men and women, husbands and wives, because of the exercise by women of the franchise. It has been contended by some of the strong opponents of equal suffrage that the very fact that women and men will be equal in the franchise will necessarily precipitate heated discussions, quarrels about politics, about parties, about candidates. I wrote a letter to each one of the judges of the district courts of the State of Colorado, and I wish to read that letter and the replies which I have received from those judges. My letter was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1914.

Judge GEORGE W. ALLEN,
Courthouse, Denver, Colo.

DEAR JUDGE: There is pending in the Senate a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment granting equal suffrage to women. There has been some contention among those who are opposed to woman suffrage that the passage of such a constitutional amendment would have a tendency to produce quarrels among husbands and wives.

I would thank you very much if you would let me know whether in any divorce case which you have tried it was claimed upon either side that the cause of any dissension or disagreement among the parties to the suit originated from or was caused by differences as to politics or candidates. If there have been any such, I would thank you very much if you would indicate the proportion where such disagreements and difficulties arose as contrasted with the number of divorce cases which you have tried.

By giving me this information you will greatly oblige,

Yours, truly,

JOHN F. SHAFROTH.

(Copy to each district judge in Colorado.)

The first answer which I received to that letter is as follows:

CHAMBERS DISTRICT COURT,
Denver, Colo., February 24, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I take pleasure in answering your inquiry of the 17th instant.

During my experience on the bench, which has covered a period of approximately 20 years, I have never known of a divorce case among the many as such wherein it was claimed or suggested that political differences in any manner had been the cause of troubles between husband and wife. I know of no divorce case brought in the court wherein it was claimed or alleged upon either side that political differences had caused any dissensions to disturb the marital relations between husband and wife.

Universal suffrage has existed by law in our State since 1893.

Sincerely, yours,

GEO. W. ALLEN,
Judge, District Court.

I have received the following letter from the judge of the district court at Montrose, Colo.:

CHAMBERS, DISTRICT COURT,
SEVENTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT,
Montrose, Colo., February 24, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. SHAFROTH: In no divorce case that I have tried has there been any suggestion or claim on either side that any dissension, disagreement, or misunderstanding was caused by or originated in connection with any differences as to politics or candidates.

Yours, truly,

T. J. BLACK.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Is difference of political views a ground for divorce in Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; it is not; but cruelty, disputes, and difficulties, and striking or beating would be; and it has been claimed upon the part of some that giving equal suffrage to women would create dissensions, difficulties, and disputes between husband and wife, which would produce a condition of affairs that might be made a cause of divorce. Cruelty by physical violence unquestionably would be a ground for divorce, and probably abuse would also be a ground for divorce.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is another feature of this subject which, perhaps, does not pertain to the particular point which the Senator is discussing, and I will not interrupt the Senator now, but before the Senator closes, there is one feature of this matter to which I should like to direct his attention after he has passed the letters which he is now reading.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. Here is a letter from the judge in the ninth judicial district.

DISTRICT COURT CHAMBERS,
NINTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT,
Glenwood Springs, Colo., February 24, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of inquiry of recent date as to whether or not in any divorce case which I have tried, it was claimed upon either side that the cause of any dissension or disagreement among the parties to the suit originated from or was caused by differences as to politics or candidates.

In reply I wish to say that during the 13 years I have been upon the bench in this judicial district, embracing five counties, no such claims or causes have been alleged, and not a scintilla of evidence has been given in any case even hinting at such causes.

At the beginning of my residence in Colorado, way back in 1877, fresh from my old home in Virginia and imbued with the ideas then existing there, I was opposed to equal suffrage to women; in fact was very critical about the matter. A careful study, however, changed my views entirely. I think that I have given the matter a great deal of thought and have followed the subject closely in other States as well as in this, notably in Utah, where the public discussion was acrid and most interesting, and some brilliant and able minds clashed in debate; yet, so far, I have failed to see any of the dire results obtaining as predicted. Hence, having this matter almost continually in mind, I certainly would remember had any such allegations been made or any such evidence been given in any case tried before me.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN T. SHUMATE.

I have another letter from one of the district judges of the city of Denver, John H. Denison, which is as follows:

CHAMBERS, DISTRICT COURT,
Denver Colo., February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of February 17 is just at hand.

I do not recollect any divorce case in which it was claimed upon either side that the cause of any dissension or disagreement between the parties to the suit originated from or was caused by differences as to politics or candidates.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN H. DENISON, Judge.

I have a letter from the judge of the thirteenth judicial district of Colorado, as follows:

JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
Sterling, Colo., February 24, 1914.

Hon. J. F. SHAFROTH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your letter of February 17.

I do not recall any divorce case tried before me in which it was claimed on either side that the cause of any dissension or disagreement between the parties to the suit originated from or was caused by differences as to politics or candidates.

Very truly, yours,

H. P. BURKE.

I have the following letter from the judge of the eighth judicial district:

EIGHTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF COLORADO,
Fort Collins, Colo., February 23, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I am in receipt of your communication of February 17 relative to the woman suffrage constitutional amendment now pending in Congress, and in answer to your inquiry I desire to say that during my experience on the bench and also as a practitioner it has never been claimed or advocated by either the plaintiff or the defendant in a divorce proceeding in this State that either party caused the domestic trouble through political activity, and I have never known of a case, either from personal knowledge or hearsay, where the difference of political opinion or the preferment of candidates between a wife and a husband has ever caused domestic trouble in this State.

With kindest of personal regards, I remain,

Very respectfully,

NEIL F. GRAHAM.

I have one from the judge of the fourth judicial district, at Colorado Springs, as follows:

DISTRICT COURT CHAMBERS,
FOURTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT,
Colorado Springs, Colo., February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 17th instant at hand and noted.

I was judge of the county court of El Paso County for four years and have been on the bench in the district court for something over one year. During that time I have tried something over 200 divorce cases. I have heard the proposition you suggest concerning woman suffrage put forth many times, and have therefore watched carefully in divorce cases for something of the kind to crop out. I have never tried a divorce case in which the testimony showed or the circumstances indicated that any dissension or disagreement between the parties in their domestic affairs arose from politics in any way. I think the contention is wholly without foundation. In any event, these matters do not show up in divorce litigation in this State.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. LITTLE.

I have the following letter from another judge of the fourth judicial district:

DISTRICT COURT CHAMBERS,
FOURTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT,
Colorado Springs, Colo., February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of inquiry bearing date February 17 received.

I am now serving my eighth year as district judge of this district. I have heard many divorce cases and granted many divorces under our law. I have never heard any evidence in any case where the matters complained of were shown to have been the result, either directly or indirectly, of woman suffrage in Colorado.

Very truly, yours,

W. S. MORRIS.

I have one from another district, the twelfth, from Alamosa, Colo., in another part of the State, which is as follows:

CHAMBERS, TWELFTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT,
Alamosa, Colo., February 22, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the 17th instant inquiring concerning political differences in Colorado as a cause of quarrel resulting in divorce, and in answer will say, in more than 22 years as sole judge of the district court of the twelfth judicial district of the State of Colorado, embracing, for a time, five counties, but now six counties, I have never had a divorce case of which I have any recollection in which it appeared that the cause of separation resulted from political differences of husband and wife.

I believe there has been no such case in my district.

Very truly, yours,

C. C. HOLBROOK.

I have another letter from another one of the district judges in Denver, which is as follows:

CHAMBERS DISTRICT COURT,
Denver, February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of February 17, 1914, was duly received.

I have been one of the district judges of this district since January 14, 1913, and have had my share of divorce cases. In response to your inquiry, I will say that it was never claimed by either side in any of these cases that the cause of dissension or disagreement between the parties originated from or was in anywise caused by differences as to politics or candidates.

I talked with Mr. Richard Ryan, who has been my division clerk since I was elected, who for four years previous thereto was the division clerk of the county court. He tells me that in his whole experience as a clerk he never knew or heard of any divorce case originating in or being in any way due to any differences of political opinion of the plaintiff and defendant.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. PERRY.

Here is a letter from a judge in the Trinidad district, the third judicial district of the State of Colorado:

DISTRICT COURT CHAMBERS,
THIRD JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF COLORADO,
Trinidad, Colo., February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 17th instant, requesting information as to whether or not in any divorce case which I have tried it was claimed upon either side that the cause of the dissension originated from or was caused by differences as to politics.

Responding thereto beg leave to advise that not only has that situation not obtained in any divorce case which I have tried, but in 15 years' almost continuous presence in the district court of this district in one capacity or another I have never heard of a divorce action where any such contention was made.

Yours, truly,

A. W. McHENDRIE.

I have a letter from Judge James H. Teller, brother of the late Senator Teller, formerly a distinguished Member of this body. Judge Teller is in the Denver district. His letter is as follows:

CHAMBERS, DISTRICT COURT,
Denver, Colo., February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Senate Post Office, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to yours of the 17th instant, I beg to say that in no divorce case of which I have any knowledge has it appeared that political differences between husband and wife have existed. After 10 years' residence in this State I may say that I have never heard of family quarrels growing out of the fact that husband and wife entertained different political views. I know of many instances in which husband and wife voted different tickets, and have heard the differences discussed, but never have heard that such differences led to quarrels. The idea seems to me to be ridiculous. If the opponents of woman suffrage have no better argument against it than that, they are certainly in a bad way.

Yours, very truly,

JAMES H. TELLER.

I have another from the judge of the fifth judicial district, the Leadville district, which is as follows:

LEADVILLE, COLO., February 21, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your favor of the 17th instant with reference to equal suffrage and its effect upon the disposition of those joining therein duly received and noted.

There have been quite a number of divorce cases before me since I have been upon the bench—that is, for something over seven years last past—and so far as appeared from the testimony in those cases, and so far as I know, equal suffrage or political differences had nothing to do with the disagreements and troubles in any of the cases which came before me, nor have I heard of a case in Colorado where lack of domestic bliss was caused by reason of political differences engendered by equal suffrage.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES CAVENDER.

I have here a letter from the judge of the district court of the eighth judicial district of Colorado—Judge Robert G. Strong—which reads as follows:

DISTRICT COURT CHAMBERS,
EIGHTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF COLORADO,
Greeley, Colo., February 23, 1914.

Senator JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In no divorce or matrimonial case before me, neither by information concerning any case in this district in the past 12 years of my residence here, have I ever heard of an allusion to political differences between husband and wife as being a cause or contribution toward any marital differences brought to court.

Therefore I would say that equal suffrage has not occasioned any percentage whatever of matrimonial differences brought to court.

Cordially, yours,

ROBERT G. STRONG.

I have here a letter from the judge of the first judicial district of the State of Colorado:

JUDGE'S CHAMBERS, DISTRICT COURT,
Brighton, Colo., February 22, 1914.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your inquiry of the 17th instant with reference to the effect of granting equal suffrage to women upon domestic infelicity, I wish to say that no case involving separation or divorce has come to my knowledge in which the cause of action was in anywise induced by differences concerning politics, candidates, or parties.

During the four years I was county judge I assisted the county judge and Judge Lindsey the greater part of the time in Denver, and I granted during that period over 500 decrees in divorce. I am quite positive that in all of these cases no such thing as differences over politics was even hinted at. Many domestic troubles were also aired before me while sitting for Judge Lindsey in the juvenile court, and the same is true of those matters. This is true, also, of my experience as district judge.

I feel that I can state the foregoing as a fact, for if such a thing as politics or woman suffrage had been referred to it would have been so startling as to leave a vivid impression.

Sincerely, yours,

H. S. CLASS,
District Judge, First District.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In view of the universal judgment of all these courts as to equal suffrage having no effect whatever on the felicities of the married life, I was curious to know, if the Senator had the information at hand, whether or not in Colorado, with woman suffrage, the ratio of divorces to the population in the State is any greater than in similar States about it which do not have woman suffrage. In other words, does Colorado have a greater ratio of divorces to population than the other States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not the exact figures with which to answer that question. Of course there are a great many persons who go to Colorado, as they have gone to all the Western States, to file applications for divorce. Their purpose is to avoid the publicity which would cause great scandal in their home cities in the East and in the other parts of the United States. Therefore if the percentage be a little higher, it is not caused by woman suffrage.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is what I wanted to bring out, for fear that while the courts never have given this as one of the causes, probably that statement might be met by the assertion that there were a greater number of divorces. I wanted the explanation from the Senator so as to show the reason.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not say that there is a greater number of divorces. I doubt it very much. I never have compiled the statistics with relation to it; but, if there are any more, it is due to the fact that people come there to obtain divorces, and thus avoid the attendant publicity and scandal in their home States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wanted that explanation, and that is the reason I asked.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Even should the Senator admit that there are more divorces, would he not also claim the fact to be that divorce has increased in many States where there is not woman suffrage?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not believe there has been any greater increase in divorce cases in the State of Colorado than in other parts of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was of that opinion myself, and that is the reason I was asking the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Some of the States do not permit divorce at all; but amongst the States having divorce laws I am convinced that there is no greater proportion in the State of Colorado than in other States; but if there be a greater proportion it is due, as I stated, to persons coming out West and securing divorces in order to avoid the publicity at their homes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado another question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator himself know of a single case where it has been even alleged that difficulties resulting in an application for divorce have arisen through the voting of women, or through politics?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that while I was governor of the State of Colorado, I asked nearly every judge I met whether he had ever heard of a case of that kind, and the uniform answer, just like these answers here, was that he had never even heard that disputes arose between husband and wife because of the elective franchise being given to women.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me further, I wish to say that, so far as Wyoming is concerned, which adopted equal suffrage in 1869, I have lived there during the entire time since and, just as the Senator has filled the office of governor in Colorado I have filled the office of governor in Wyoming, both as a Territory and as a State, and I never even heard of a case in Wyoming where the allegation was made that differences growing out of equal suffrage were a cause for divorce. In fact, I am only wondering, as the Senator reads these letters, where the question should have originated or why it should be asked, for in my State there is no cause for even asking those questions. It is understood that equal suffrage does not lead to divorce in any way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator, further, that I have never even heard of difficulties between husband and wife tried in the police courts of the city of Denver, or other places, where it was ever alleged that the dissensions or the differences or the disputes arose over politics or parties or over candidates for office.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Colorado says that in his opinion many people come into the State of Colorado to get divorces there in order to avoid the notoriety of the proceedings at home. What length of residence is required in Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. One year's residence is required before an action can be brought.

Mr. BRYAN. Do women in Colorado vote in about the same proportion as men?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Nearly so.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator give us the percentage, if he can?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think I can give the Senator some of the figures, at least. There is no perfect tabulation kept in all of the counties of the State showing the number of women who vote and those who do not. I think the percentage is that about 80 per cent of women vote and about 83 per cent of men vote. I can not find at the moment exactly what I want.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. BORAH. We have had equal suffrage in the State of Idaho for some twenty-odd years, and, while I have no exact figures before me, upon some questions a larger percentage of women, in my opinion, vote than of men. Of course those are largely what might be called moral questions, or quasi-moral questions. Upon the purely political questions the percentage of women, in my judgment, who vote is slightly less than that of men, but there is not any considerable difference in either instance.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that I have here figures from Denver in regard to the election of 1908, which was a presidential year. We have a registration system there in which it is supposed that nearly all of the women register. The number of women who registered that year was 35,620, and of that number 29,085 voted.

As I say, this was in the election of 1908. I have similar figures as to the vote and the registration of men. There were 41,530 men who registered in the city of Denver, and of that number 36,891 voted.

The percentage of women who voted, according to this, is about 80 per cent, and the percentage of men who voted is about 83 per cent. There are more men than women in the State of Colorado, and for that reason the vote of men is larger than the vote of women.

Mr. BRYAN and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and to whom?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If the Senator will permit me, I only wish to know approximately what the population of the city of Denver is?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The population of the city of Denver is about 213,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Is not that an exceedingly large registration?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. Considering that both men and women vote, all over 21 years of age, it is about from 1 to 2½, or between 1 to 2 and 1 to 2½.

Mr. BRYAN. Can the Senator tell me, for the election of 1912, how many women in Colorado were of voting age?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not tell the Senator that, because most of the counties do not keep such a record.

Mr. BRYAN. Can the Senator tell me how many voted in 1912?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I think approximately 275,000.

Mr. BRYAN. Two hundred and seventy-five thousand women?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; men and women.

Mr. BRYAN. How many women voted?

Mr. SHAFROTH. As I stated, very few of the counties keep a record of the vote of men and women; but approximately the same proportion voted in the other counties as voted in the city of Denver.

Mr. BRYAN. I notice that in Colorado failure to provide support is one of the grounds for divorce.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it any defense in a proceeding of that kind to show either that the husband was unable to support the wife or that the wife had property of her own and did not need the support of her husband?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think if that condition were shown a divorce would not be granted.

Mr. BRYAN. But under the terms of the statute one of the grounds of divorce is neglect to provide support. I ask the Senator the question because I suppose perhaps there has been some construction of that statute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not remember a case of that kind; that is, unless the party absolutely failed to provide when he should have provided. Of course, there are always exceptions in the case of men who are not able-bodied. You could not force a crippled man to support a wife.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, does not the statute say that it must be a willful failure to provide? Is that not the language of the statute?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes. It could not be a failure through inability.

Mr. BRYAN. In Colorado you have property rights of married women. They own their property?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Absolutely; the same as men.

Mr. BRYAN. The same as men. Suppose a woman had property which would yield her a good support and her husband failed to provide a support for her, although he also had ample means to support her, could she get a divorce upon the ground that he failed to provide support for her, although she had her own property, and could support herself out of it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know; I can not say whether that could be done or not. My impression would be that if she had ample means, and it were unquestioned, she would not be entitled to a divorce. Generally there is a question concerning it, and in such cases, of course, the matter is presented to the court.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course the Senator knows that a great many divorces are granted in this country on the ground of failure upon the part of the husband to support his wife. Colorado is one of the States where that is done. In a great many other States it is no ground for divorce that the husband fails to support the wife, but it is a ground to apply to the court and have an order issued compelling the support of the wife.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have the same remedy in Colorado.

Mr. BRYAN. No; the remedy in Colorado, as I understand, goes to the extent that a divorce will be granted.

Mr. CLAPP. They have both remedies.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may go to that extent; but it also goes to the extent of granting alimony without divorce.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator knows, does he not, that where that ground of divorce exists more divorces, perhaps, are granted upon that ground than upon any other?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I think not. I do not think one-tenth of the divorces are granted upon that ground.

Mr. BRYAN. My recollection is that more divorces are granted on the ground of desertion than upon any other ground; the next largest number upon the ground of cruelty; and the next largest number upon the ground of failure to provide support.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Perhaps that ground may be third in the ratio, but I think desertion is the ground on which most divorces are granted.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. KERN. The letters read by the Senator from Colorado indicate that a very large number of divorces are granted in Colorado; that there is a vast amount of domestic infelicity. One letter there shows that one judge alone, in a limited space of time, granted 500 divorces.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was in four years, in the city of Denver, in the county court. They have a large number, of course.

Mr. KERN. I was not through with my question. It seems to me the statement made in all these letters that in all the divorce cases that have been tried in Colorado since woman suffrage was adopted the question of political difference never has been mentioned in the case, and that it is in no wise responsible for the infelicity or trouble, would seem to indicate that the husbands and wives voted the same way and that, because of their agreement, there was no room for contention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think that necessarily follows. It simply shows the liberality of the people out there in recognizing differences of opinion, and that they respect the opinions of each other, although the wife may not vote for the same person that the husband does.

Mr. KERN. Does the Senator say that in Colorado, in political campaigns, husbands and wives do disagree and do discuss the political issues of the day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not in public, usually.

Mr. KERN. No, no; in their homes?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I do not know. I do not go around to their homes.

Mr. KERN. No, no; but as a matter of general information, does the Senator understand whether or not husband and wife who disagree—for the Senator says they do disagree——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not in every instance, of course.

Mr. KERN. No; but I should think it would be valuable information to know whether, in those cases where they disagreed, they discussed in heated campaign times the issues of the day. I was going to say that if they did, if husbands and wives in Colorado go through political campaigns disagreeing and discussing their political differences up to the time of election and no domestic infelicity grows out of it, then they are the sweetest-tempered lot of people there are in America.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have lived in an equal-suffrage State for 20 years. We adopted equal suffrage in 1896. My observation is that, generally speaking, husband and wife do agree about political matters, in precisely the same way that they belong to the same church and agree about church matters, and just the same as father and son agree, as a usual thing, though not always.

There is not anything remarkable about that. Indeed it would be rather remarkable if the opposite condition existed. They are man and wife, living together, very largely taking the same viewpoint upon matters generally, agreeing in their literary tastes and in their church affiliations. Therefore it seems to me it would be rather remarkable if there were to any considerable extent any disagreement among them.

There are occasional differences, but no more serious consequences follow from those differences about politics than follow from the occasional differences about other things. Husband and wife differ in matters of taste, and differ from time to time about a great variety of things; but if they are self-contained people no harm results from those differences, and if they are self-contained people no harm results from their differences about political matters.

The family grows up together. The father and son agree in the main about political matters and church matters. Brothers of the same family are all Republicans or all Democrats; and it is the unusual rather than the usual thing for differences to exist.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Indiana that the differences between husband and wife in regard to voting for candidates arise very largely out of the fact that the man is not so strict as the woman in requiring moral conduct upon the part of the candidate.

I should like to cite an illustration as to woman's power in politics and as to her discrimination.

We have out there a judge of the juvenile court named Judge Lindsey. At the close of his first term he began to plan for reelection. Being a Democrat, he wanted the nomination from the Democratic convention, but when he presented his claims there they turned him down. It seems that he had created antagonisms through publication of his book the "Beast and the Jungle," and many of the people in politics were arrayed against him. Holding that his was a nonpartisan office, he went over to the Republican convention and tried to get the indorsement of that party. They, too, having been alienated by his book in the same manner, declined to nominate him. As he had served as judge of the juvenile court in a most creditable manner, he had the support of the women almost unanimously, and he therefore concluded to run independently. He had no ticket upon which to run. He had no governor to head his ticket. He had no candidates for other offices. It was purely a ticket for Ben Lindsey. What was the result? Although the Democrats nominated a good man, and although the Republicans nominated a good man, when the ballots were counted Judge Lindsey had 10,000 votes more than both of the other candidates combined.

Mr. CLAPP. And domestic peace still prevailed in Denver, as I understand?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; domestic peace still prevailed there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I have already said, we adopted woman suffrage in Utah in 1896, nearly 20 years ago. Before its adoption as a part of the constitution there was very strenuous objection to it. A great many people looked with apprehension upon the experiment; and I presume the same was true in Colorado, when it was adopted there, and in these other States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Equal suffrage has been in operation now in these four Rocky Mountain States for from 20 to nearly 50 years—nearly 50 years in Wyoming. Generally, when a thing works badly in any community some people are found who will object to it and want to change the situation. In my own State during those 20 years there never has been a suggestion from anybody, so far as I know, to go back to the old condition of affairs. Woman suffrage is accepted there as the normal condition, and for anybody to suggest that the women should be deprived of their right to vote would be resented quite as much as a suggestion to deprive the men of the right to vote.

I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado whether or not the same situation prevails in his own State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I made an inquiry of a State senator of Colorado who had been in the senate for a number of years as to whether there ever had been introduced a joint resolution or a bill or a senate resolution or any other kind of a resolution proposing to resubmit to the people the question of woman suffrage. He told me that there never had been one even introduced. Three years ago a man was elected who asserted that he proposed to repeal the woman-suffrage constitutional amendment. He gave out interviews as to what he was going to do, and they were published all over the East as making it certain that Colorado was going to repudiate woman suffrage. At that time my attention was called to it, and I made the prediction that he would never introduce the resolution, no matter what he was then saying. He did not make this declaration until after the election. For the first month after the election the newspapers were filled with stories and interviews concerning his plans. About the 1st of December he said he had not found so much encouragement as he had expected, but he thought he could get it through; by the 1st of January he concluded that it was impossible to get it adopted; and when the legislature met, about the 10th day of January, he could not find a single senator or representative to support his resolution, and he never introduced it.

The truth of the matter is that women have been upon the moral side of every question presented. It is absurd to think that they will contaminate politics. We know as a matter of fact that when any moral question is an issue before the people we find the women upon the moral side.

Why should we fear these women voters? Who are they? They are our mothers, our sisters, our wives, our daughters. Do we believe that they would be more corrupt in politics than we are? Can you find a single man who would think that they would not stand guard for good laws and moral conduct as well as men? It is absurd to think that women would have an impure influence upon politics.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wanted to inquire of the Senator if it has not been a fact in his own State that the presence of women at the polls has made the conduct of men there much more creditable than before the woman-suffrage amendment was adopted?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that when I first went to the State of Colorado at election times the polls swarmed with men peddling tickets. Some were intoxicated and others were soliciting for this candidate and for that. The polls were not considered good places for any person; but since woman suffrage has been extended in the State of Colorado we have no crowds there. We have passed a law which prohibits men and women from coming within 100 feet of the polls except for the purpose of voting, and it is a misdemeanor to solicit the vote of a person within that hundred-foot limit.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The little Commonwealth of New Jersey without woman suffrage passed a similar law. They are not allowed to come within 100 feet of a polling place; they are not allowed to pull men in. We have the same moral conduct that you have, and it is done without the women voting.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am glad of it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to say to the Senator who speaks of our sisters, our mothers, and our wives that my mother did not want to vote, thank God. My sisters, and I have four of them, have never been solicitous in the matter of voting in New Jersey. My dear wife to-day stands forth as one who believes that woman suffrage would be an evil to her sex and a detriment to the well being of the community in which she lives.

The Senator's letters, a large number of them, prove only that voting does not seem to promote divorce, but there is not a word in any of them that declares that the general welfare and the morals of the community in which the writer lives have been enhanced because of the fact that women vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say to the Senator that you may take any of the moral questions that come before the legislatures of the States—legislation that makes for the uplift of child life and things of that kind—and you will find that the women are invariably in favor of it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is true; but New Jersey stands in the forefront in that line of legislation, and no woman has voted there. The women have been safeguarded on all sides in the Commonwealth of New Jersey and generally in this country where they have not been voting.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is not any question but that in the entire world we are getting better laws.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But what right have you to say that because you have control of the ballot you will not let anybody else have the right to vote? How would you like to have some one else say, "I will not let you vote"?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am standing by the right guaranteed by the Constitution of my country.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I merely wish to remind the Senator from Colorado that he might recall the history of the State of New Jersey, in which he would discover that when the State of New Jersey came into the Union of States the women had the right to vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from New Jersey is entirely conscious of that fact.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is immaterial whether New Jersey had woman suffrage or whether New Jersey wants it; here is a fundamental human right which should be considered and determined solely from the standpoint of justice. It is true that the courts have held that it is a privilege instead of a right; but how would the Senator like to have the women take possession of the Government and say that the question of male suffrage is purely a question of privilege and not a question of right? It seems to me that when the men usurp power and determine that they only are entitled to vote they are doing that which is unjust.

It has been said that all powers of government are either delegated or assumed; that all powers not delegated are assumed; and that all assumed powers are usurpations. Where did men get the right to assume the exclusive power to vote; that they alone shall vote and make all the laws, not only to govern themselves but to govern women? Where did they get that right? Was it ever delegated to them by the women? No; that was never done. You can not find it in any vote ever taken or any expression ever given. Therefore, if it was not a delegated power it was an assumed power, and, as all assumed powers are usurpations, it was a usurped power. That being the case, it seems to me that you can not in justice deprive women of the right to vote because of the usurpation of that right by men.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. If it will not disturb the Senator, I should like to suggest that in the State of Kansas for many years the women have had the right to vote at municipal elections, and whenever the question was the enforcement of laws against vice woman has always been on the side of the strict enforcement of the law. Time and time again candidates for office, regardless of the ticket upon which they might be, who were in favor of clean communities, clean towns, and the enforcement of the laws against vice, have been elected by the preponderance of the woman vote. It is not uncommon for women—wives, mothers, and daughters—to vote against the male members of their families on moral issues, as the Senator has said, and the result has always been better government for the communities where they participate in the elections.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Unquestionably. That has been the experience in our State. I want to say to the Senator that the very attitude of women with respect to candidates and to their moral conduct impels political parties to put up better men for office. Let it be known that the women will vote against a man of immoral character and you will find that such men will be retired from political life. As a matter of policy, if for no higher reason, leaders of political party organizations will fear to affront the women voters. Their verdict upon a prospective candidate of doubtful character will be: "The women will be against us and we can not put him up," and the order of dismissal is entered. That is one of the benefits which comes from woman suffrage.

I wish to say that the theory that woman contaminates politics and contaminates the ballot is something that is unthinkable. It is untrue. Whenever a statement is made in the press anywhere that a woman has been detected in committing any fraud at an election it is heralded all over the country, published with great headlines, and the entire story is advanced as a great argument against woman suffrage. But no consideration is given to the fact contained in the very story which was sent across the wires that ten times as many men were implicated in the same fraud. No mention is made of the men. Why should people go into hysterics because 1 woman is convicted or is caught in a fraud when 10 men were in the same fraud, and the chances are 10 to 1 that in order to hide their own guilt they put up the woman to do the work to divert suspicion from themselves?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to say, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have not had my attention called to such statements, nor have I heard the assertion that woman would contaminate politics, but the fear has been that politics will contaminate woman. I fear that. I want woman as my mother was. I would rather have the mild, tender voice of my mother bidding me, as my father did, to vote whenever the Commonwealth gave me the privilege to vote linger in my ears than to hear the high, shrieking voice of woman around the polls dragging her sisters to the ballot box. I believe that better results would come to the community, I believe that grander results would come to this country, if woman should be left in her sphere to nurture and train the youth, to take care of her home and household, to minister to the wants and needs of her home, rather than be hawking around the polls on election day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if shrieking and hawking at the polls——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have heard it in Denver, Colo. I remember on one occasion when I was there and an election was taking place I asked a New Jersey man who had lived there 25 years, with a wife from my own neighborhood, "Is the voting here purifying politics? Is bribery and corruption gone since woman votes?" Said he, "Let me show you that flaxen-haired maiden yonder. See her pleading with her sisters. In due time you would see the money pass if you should go close enough."

The testimony of women whose names I could mention in Colorado, in Denver, is to the effect that there has not been a glorious picture of eternal sunshine and happiness since women have voted there, but that the reverse is true, and that woman should be left in her sphere to minister kindly to your needs and your wants and to do works of virtue and charity, and she will have greater power away from the polls than within the polling precinct.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have lived in the city of Denver 34 years. Twenty years of that time we have had equal suffrage. I have never heard the shrieks of women at any of the polling places, and I have often visited nearly every polling place in the city of Denver during many elections. I want to say that if the conditions existed which the Senator has described it was in the red-light district of the city.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Why does not woman suffrage correct, abolish, and banish that from the face of the earth? The men in the Senate of the United States have abolished your "red-light" district in Washington, D. C., without the interposition of women.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator asks why, since women vote, they do not abolish the "red-light" district in the city of Denver. I will ask him why the men did not do it, when they had the reins for 20 years before women voted. They now have the reins to the extent of there being only 3 women in the legislature, as contrasted with 97 men. Why do not the men do it? Why do they not do it in New Jersey, I should like to ask the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We are doing the best we possibly can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will address the Chair.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if the State of Colorado will come as near God's line of common decency and justice and humanity as the little Commonwealth of New Jersey, there will be no fault to find. We have furnished you many things that are models in this way. Finally and last, we have furnished you a President of the United States who is a source of profound admiration for every man, woman, and child in this broad land

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I fully concur in the eulogy which the Senator has made upon the President of the United States, but I hardly see what that has to do with the question of woman suffrage. You have good men in the State of New Jersey. There are good men in every State in the Union. The question is whether you are going to imprcve conditions. The men have had control of the States in the Union for years and years, and yet the very evils to which the Senator refers existed in their time and exist now where men are in the entire control of the States. There is not a State in the Union that is not controlled by the men to-day. Even though women vote in some of the States, the number in office in those very equal-suffrage States is relatively small. You will find that where there is one woman holding an office she is among those who pass and execute the laws as one to ten.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has had woman suffrage in his State for 21 years, I think he said.

Mr. SHAFROTH. For 21 years this fall.

Mr. BRYAN. What great measure, what great improvement over conditions in Colorado has been brought about by reason of woman suffrage?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that the very conduct of elections is one of the very best results. There is a courtesy which obtains in places where women go that makes a better condition at the polls by far than it was before. We do not have the drunkenness. We do not have the drawing of pistols. We do not have many things that are reprehensible, and those conditions are improving.

Mr. BRYAN. It is usual to have order about the polls. Aside from that, I ask the Senator what great forward movement can be attributed in Colorado to the fact that women vote?

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right; I will state some of them.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I want.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the establishment of the juvenile court, a court for the treatment of juvenile delinquents and for the punishment of those who contribute to their delinquency.

Mr. BRYAN. Did they not have that before?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; they had it after woman suffrage. It was put through very largely by women appealing to the legislature for that purpose.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator attribute the establishment of the juvenile court to the fact that women vote?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do attribute it to the influence of woman in better government.

Mr. BRYAN. How does the Senator account for the fact that they have juvenile courts in a great many States where women do not vote?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not pretend to say that men can not have good government. The Senator is taking the position that because we have had woman suffrage there can not be good government there.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator can not say that. I have not taken that position.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That seems to be the line of the Senator's conclusion.

Mr. BRYAN. It seems to me the burden is upon those who advocate the joint resolution to show that woman suffrage will better conditions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; there is a right in all human beings to have the laws which are to govern them passed upon by their voice, and whenever men deny that principle they are doing an injustice, they are interfering with a right. It is very well for men to arrogate it to themselves and say, "Oh, well, we will control this thing; we will make these laws right for you"; but how about the other persons? They have a right to say something about the matter.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to get the Senator's position upon this question: Does he or does he not contend that the fact that women vote betters conditions?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it does.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator realizes, does he not, that unless that be true there is no inducement to pass the joint resolution?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not. I say you have not a particle of right to deny women the right to vote any more than if women had the control of the Government they could deny you the right to vote. You would not like that? They could say, "Oh, we will take care of the men"; but, as a matter of fact, that would not satisfy any man.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator another question. Upon what date was the juvenile court established?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think about 1900.

Mr. BRYAN. What other legislation has been brought about as the result of woman suffrage?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will read a few others.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Florida asked me a question, and I was proceeding to answer it.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask a question right in that connection, before the Senator proceeds.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. WORKS. Have the women of Colorado ever had control of the legislature of that State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They never had control of it. They have three members in the lower house and one in the senate.

Mr. WORKS. Why should they be charged with the failure of legislation where they have no control over the legislature itself and it is still controlled by the men?

Mr. BRYAN. Then why should they be credited with the establishment of a juvenile court?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the first place, they are credited with that very largely because you will find women are interested in every movement for the betterment of child life. You will find that they go to the legislature, that the bills introduced by the lady members are urged by them, and men are influenced by the sentiment of the women, for they know that they are yielding to the best impulses of their consciences when they do it, and that such favorable action is demanded by their constituents.

Mr. BRYAN. But the Senator undoubtedly recognizes the fact that it would not be just to charge up to the men the failure to pass any legislation unless the men are given the credit for the legislation that they do pass.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all true, but you must not put it up to——

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator said that because women voted the juvenile court was established.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I did not.

Mr. BRYAN. Then he said the reason why their legislation was not beneficial was because the legislature was in the control of the men.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I say that the women were instrumental in having enacted these laws. I will warrant, if you ask——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will warrant if you ask Judge Ben Lindsey, who was the first juvenile-court judge, by whom the greatest aid and support in the establishment of a juvenile court was rendered he would say that the greatest support came from the women.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, you may ask in my State the same question, and the men will say that it was due to the women; and yet the women did not vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be, but you can readily see that there is power in voting. The power of voting enlarges this good influence. I never saw a better illustration of it than that which occurred when I was in the other House of Congress. I introduced practically this same resolution when I first came to Congress.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; in just a minute. I introduced a resolution, and we had a hearing before a committee in the House of Representatives. A large number of ladies came and presented their claims to us, and the committee said, "We will take this matter under consideration." The two years passed without any determination. Again, two years later we did the same thing, and the two years passed until I went out of Congress. Now, suppose women had had the right to vote. Do you suppose that their resolution would have been considered only and not passed upon? Do you not know that if they had represented six or eight millions of votes there would have been hardly a man upon that committee who would not have acted? They would have vied with each other for the privilege of making a favorable report. That is the influence which they are entitled to as human beings, and that they will get if they get equal suffrage.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not want to anticipate the discussion at all. If permitted to vote, I should vote for the joint resolution, but I confess I am somewhat concerned about my duty in the matter. The State which I have the honor in part to represent is a pioneer in this movement. For 45 years we have had unlimited woman suffrage in the State of Wyoming. I do not think you can find in the length and breadth of the State any considerable number of people who would change the condition back again. It has worked wholly for good.

I agree with what the Senator says as to the influence which may not appear directly in the vote, but the indirect influence in requiring good men to be nominated for office as a general thing. I have not been able to be present all the time. Has the Senator thus far considered the question as to the duty of Congress in this matter, and whether each State should not settle the matter of its suffrage for itself?

My own impression is that the passage of the joint resolution will perhaps delay the onward march of this general movement, because in the various States the crusade may somewhat abate its ardor. I confess that at first thought I am inclined to believe it is a matter for the States to deal with themselves and not for the General Government; but, as I said, I shall solve that doubt, if I am permitted to vote, in favor of the joint resolution. At the same time I am concerned about it, and I should like to have the Senator's views on that matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it depends entirely upon how you look upon the question. If you consider it simply as a privilege that should or should not be given by law, then perhaps there might be something in such a contention; but, when you know that the women look upon this matter as a question of right, no man can justly deny suffrage to them. Men would look at it exactly in the same way if they were deprived of the right, and it seems to me that an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in their behalf would be proper.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I must confess, Mr. President, I have had some of the same misgivings that are suggested by the Senator from Wyoming. The question in my mind is whether Congress and even a vote of the necessary number of States should undertake to enforce upon any given State the right of suffrage where neither the men nor the women of that State desire it. To my mind it is a very serious question, and I, like the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], would be glad to have the Senator's view fully upon that subject.

I am as much a believer, I think, in woman suffrage as anyone could be. So far as it has been tried in California, it has been eminently satisfactory. I think it has elevated and purified politics there just as the presence of woman elevates and purifies society or any place where she goes. There are imperceptible influences that are brought to bear upon politics as well as other things by women that no man can describe, not even the Senator from Colorado. But that is a phase of it that has given me a good deal of concern as to what my duty is under the circumstances.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to suggest that you will find the solution to that inquiry in the Constitution itself. The Constitution has safeguarded every State from any invasion of its right, so far as that right should be left to the State itself. I refer, of course, to the provision of the Constitution that provides that there shall be no change in the representation in the Senate without the consent of each State. Beyond that the Constitution has committed to all the people through all the States the power and, confessedly, the right to impose upon all the States any condition which the requisite majority of the States deem wise and prudent for the General Union within the provision authorizing amendments thereto. It would be easy to imagine a great many questions where individual States would object, and yet, under the Constitution, we can act against their wish; and we must look to that for our guide.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, as I understand it, the matter of suffrage is a matter of local concern.

Mr. CLAPP. It may be a matter of local concern. It is also a matter of general concern—if the country would be benefited—and it is for the country to pass upon it under the constitutional provision for amendment. The entire country is interested in the question.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to suggest to the Senator it may be a matter of very grave question whether it would be for the public benefit to attempt to enforce woman suffrage upon a State where it is not desired either by men or women.

Mr. CLAPP. That might apply to a great many questions. The feeling in a particular State might be so strong that you might ask yourself, Is it wise to impose this condition? But the broad proposition remains that outside of the mere question of changing the ratio of representation in the Senate, the men who framed the Constitution, in their wisdom left it to the people of this country, to the requisite percentage of the States ratifying an amendment to the Constitution, to say for all the country what the country should have.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that leads the Senate to the irresistible conclusion that there is nothing within the way of legislation that falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the States.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, not by any means.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask a question either of the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Minnesota. Suppose the State of Colorado and the State of Minnesota are in favor of equal suffrage, would either of the Senators say that three-fourths of the States had the inherent right to deny those States by amendments to the Constitution of the United States equal suffrage if they saw fit to have it? If there is inherently in the Nation itself the right to enforce equal suffrage, then the correlative right must exist of denying equal suffrage in any of the States. It seems to me that if you admit one, you must admit the other, and I do not believe that either of the Senators would agree that the Government by an amendment to the Federal Constitution should annul a law of the State granting equal suffrage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that there is a provision in the Constitution which gives that right.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is a power delegated to the National Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not the question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will no longer belong to the State government so far as the determination of the question is concerned when three-fourths of the States vote in favor of the proposed amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not questioning the power; there is no question about the power to amend; but the point I want to get at is the morality back of the power. Would it be proper to exercise that power in such a way as to deprive the State of Colorado of equal suffrage, because if the Federal Government would have the right to grant the power it must follow that it would have the same right to deny the power.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I see the position which the Senator is taking. There is force in it, and there is no doubt that if you assume his premise the logical result is as he states it; but you must remember that under the National Constitution the Federal Government is a Government of delegated powers, and the States have said that whenever the people of the Nation believe, as evidenced by the passage of a constitutional amendment by two-thirds of this body and two-thirds of the House of Representatives and its ratification by three-fourths of the States, that a given power should be lodged in the National Government, that matter is settled and determined. There is nothing immoral in the power delegated in that manner. The safeguard to each State is the fact that it is necessary to get the consent of three-fourths of the States to a proposed amendment before it can be enforced on the other States.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, Mr. President, suppose that there was an attempt on the part of two-thirds of the Senate and the House of Representatives to pass a joint resolution to amend the Constitution by providing that there should not be equal suffrage, even though it would have to be submitted to the States for ratification, I apprehend the Senator would say, "I will not take that chance, because inherently the right lies in my State, and if it is inherently in the people of my State, it ought not to be exercised by anyone else."

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not inherently in the people of the State if they have ratified the Constitution of the United States, which provides that an amendment can be passed by two-thirds of each House and by the ratification of three-fourths of the States.

Mr. CLAPP. It is one of the powers which the States surrendered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is one of the powers which they have surrendered, but the morality or right in the matter is supposed to be safeguarded by the provision requiring a two-thirds vote for the passage of such a resolution in Congress and a three-fourths vote for its ratification by the States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Idaho; but I will state to the Senator that I have spoken to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who informs me that he desires a vote, and I wish to conclude just as quickly as I can, so that I hope the colloquy will not be long.

Mr. BORAH. Well, it will not, perhaps, be very long. Mr. President, there is one feature of this proposition which has just been under discussion that has been a subject of consideration to me in regard to my vote, and it is the only one that has given me any trouble. Suppose that this proposed amendment to the Constitution is finally adopted, what effect will it have upon some 8 or 10 States in this Union with reference to the colored vote? Does the Senator from Colorado believe that the negro women will be permitted to vote? Or if they are permitted to vote, what will be the effect on southern politics? I do not feel like putting into the Constitution a provision which I feel in advance will never be enforced.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose they will. They are entitled to vote, if there is no educational qualification to prevent their voting.

Mr. BORAH. I ask this question in good faith, because I think we are far enough away from the troubles of former days to discuss these subjects at least in a wise way, if we can, without being controlled by our prejudices or by our passions. Some 50 years ago we granted the negro the right to vote, and yet everybody knows that the negro to-day is disfranchised in the South. The South disfranchises him, and the North consents to it. The only question in my mind is this: Are we going to add 8,000,000 more votes to the electorate which the South will be compelled to disfranchise and to which action we will consent? I am not in favor of putting in the Constitution of the United States a provision of the fundamental law of which we as a Nation are going to live in defiance 365 days out of the year. Does the Senator from Colorado really believe that the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be enforced, and that those who are to enjoy the right will enjoy the right under this amendment if it is passed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that that involves a question which does not arise in this question. The vote is enlarged by woman suffrage, it is true; but the same conditions prevail in those States in the white population as in the black population. I do not see that any conditions change that, and it does not seem to me that it is a proper matter of discussion in this connection. You are not going to gain by reason of equal suffrage any greater percentage of colored people or of white people. The amount of females in each race is relatively about the same, and consequently their status is not changed. I will not pretend to say what laws the States will enact, whether they will have educational qualifications that will prevent any portion of the population voting. That, however, is a matter which, it seems to me, has nothing to do with this question, because it does not change the relative status.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I will say that I think it has a great deal to do with it. I think we ought to know now whether we are passing this joint resolution in good faith or whether we are simply passing it with the knowledge amongst ourselves that it will never be enforced and lived up to. If it is not going to be enforced in all parts of the Nation, then there is no reason why it should not be left to the different States to act on the question of equal suffrage and have public opinion behind it. On the other hand, if it is to be enforced, then a great many people might vote for it who otherwise would hesitate to do so. I call attention to the fact that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who has so ably conducted this joint resolution to its present status and who always speaks in candor, used this language:

> The right to vote has not been granted nor secured by the Federal Constitution, but the right to be exempt from certain discriminations is granted and secured by the Federal Constitution; thus, this proposed amendment, if adopted, secures to females the right to exemption from being discriminated against because they are females. This amendment, if adopted, would not interfere with the "grandfather" clause in the constitution or laws of any of the States. It would not interfere with the constitution of any State which exacts of its citizens certain requirements and qualifications before they are permitted to vote, save and except that the State would not be permitted to deny to a citizen the right to vote simply, solely, and only upon the ground that that particular citizen was a female.

In other words, Mr. President, it is understood that although we may write this amendment into the Constitution, through the principle of the "grandfather" clause or some other principle the South will count out the votes which would otherwise be entitled to be cast under this resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, we can not determine what the States are going to do nor what laws they will enact with relation to this matter. There is one answer to all of these questions, and that is that it is a right under the fundamental principle of our Republic that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. If men were denied the right to vote, they would insist upon the right, whether it came through the Constitution of the United States or through the State constitutions.

During the seven long years of the War for Independence the patriots were guided and sustained by the conviction, which grew to be as part of themselves, that "taxation without representation is tyranny." If that principle, established at a loss of much blood and treasure, is the patent of man's liberty, why is it not, as of right, equally applicable to woman?

All of these other questions, it seems to me, are merely incidental, and the doubts they raise will be cleared and the problems they bear will be solved in good time, but no man can foresee what the States will do or what laws they will enact. If in the consideration of the question of woman suffrage the States will accept for their guidance the principles for which the forefathers fought, then its determination will be reached in equity and justice.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, it is evident that this discussion can not be concluded this evening, as there are several Senators who desire to be heard to-morrow. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 2, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father Almighty, we pray most earnestly for the people who have been left in distress and sorrow in the storm-swept regions of our country, which has left death and desolation in its wake. Open Thou the hearts of those who have escaped its ravages to sympathy and kindness that relief may come speedily. "Twice blessed is he who gives." It will do us good, relieve our neighbor, strengthen the ties of brotherly love, and fulfill the spirit of our religion by doing unto others as we would be done by. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 28, 1914, was read and approved.

STEAMSHIP AGREEMENTS, ETC., FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC TRADE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith the report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on steamship agreements and affiliations in the American foreign and domestic trade.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the report for the purpose of ascertaining why it is presented in the open House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I supposed it proper to do so. Provision has already been made for printing it.

The SPEAKER. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I wanted to know by what authority the gentleman from Missouri presented it in open House instead of putting it in the basket. Is it the intention of the gentleman to have any action taken upon it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; none at all. As I say, provision has already been made for printing it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No; I withdraw the point of order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CONRY, on account of illness.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. To-day is the day set aside for the consideration of business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ACTION FOR DEATHS ON HIGH SEAS.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6143) relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is interested in this bill and is necessarily absent from the city. He permitted it to go over on the calendar two weeks ago, stating that he might possibly be absent at this time. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PATENTS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1651) to authorize the issuance of absolute and unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be passed over without prejudice. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is absent on the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are a great many people interested in the passage of this bill. It is a very simple proposition. I understand the Senate has already passed a similar bill, and I can see no reason why it should not be passed at this time.

Mr. MANN. What is the object of the House passing this bill if the Senate has already passed another bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, there is an additional reason other than the one I gave. The House committee has authorized the report of the Senate bill with a slight amendment. That bill has not yet reached the calendar. That would undoubtedly be an additional reason which would satisfy the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

USE OF FORT M'HENRY MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12806) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Fort McHenry Military Reservation, in the State of Maryland, to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, making certain provisions in connection therewith, providing access to and from the site of the new immigration station heretofore set aside, and appropriating certain money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the bill was read the last day we had under consideration bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill would better be read.

The SPEAKER. It is the better practice, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, Md., to occupy and use the military reservation of Fort McHenry, Md., except that part mentioned in the fourth paragraph hereof, as a public park upon the agreement of said corporation to maintain and protect the reservation and the public property thereof during the continuance of its occupancy at its own expense: Provided, That the said permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission to use said grounds whenever and at such time as he may deem it expedient to do so.

SEC. 2. That any and all improvements, changes, and alterations in the grounds, buildings, and other appurtenances to the reservation, made by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, shall be made only according to detailed plans submitted to, and approved by, the Secretary of War in each case, prior to the commencement of any work under such plans, and that all such improvements, changes, or alterations made by said corporation shall be made without expense to the United States, and in the event of the withdrawal of said permission, such improvements as the Secretary of War may deem valuable to the military service shall become the property of the United States without cost to the Government; and such structures as may have been placed upon the reservation by said corporation, which are directed to be removed therefrom by the Secretary of War, shall be removed forthwith and the grounds placed in a condition entirely satisfactory to him, at the expense of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, and no claim of any character whatever incident to the occupation by the city of said reservation shall ever be made by said corporation against the United States.

SEC. 3. That permission is hereby granted the Secretary of the Treasury to use permanently a strip of land 60 feet wide belonging to said fort grounds, beginning at the north corner of the present grounds of the fort and extending south 63° 30′ E., 650 feet to the south corner of the site set aside for the immigration station at Baltimore, said strip of land being located along the northwest boundary of the land ceded to the Baltimore Dry Dock Co. and the land of the said immigration station, the same to be used, if so desired, in lieu of acquiring, by purchase or condemnation, any of the lands of the dry dock company, so that the Secretary of the Treasury may, in connection with land to be acquired from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., have access to and from said immigration station and grounds over the right of way so acquired to the city streets and railroads beyond, the Secretary of the Treasury to have the same power to construct, contract for, and arrange for railroad and other facilities upon said outlet as fully as provided in the act approved March 4, 1913, setting aside a site for an immigration station and providing for an outlet therefrom: Provided, however, That if the Secretary of the Treasury accepts and makes use of said strip of land for the purposes aforesaid, the War Department shall have use of the railroad track and other roads constructed over which to reach the city streets and railroads beyond from the other parts of the fort grounds.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of placing the said Fort McHenry Reservation in proper condition and repair prior to permitting their use by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, in order that they may be so continued, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended in the repair, alteration, or removal, or other disposition of the buildings and other structures located upon said grounds and upon the repair of the roads now constructed thereon, to be expended by the direction of the Secretary of War or such officer as he shall designate: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated may be drawn from time to time as may be required in the progress of the work upon requisition of the Secretary of War.

With the following committee amendments:

In section 1, on page 1, in line 8, amend by inserting the word "repairs" after the word "to."

In section 2, on page 2, in line 7, amend by inserting after the word "all" the word "repairs."

In section 2, on page 2, in line 13, amend by inserting the word "repairs" after the words "all such."

In section 2, on page 2, in line 20, strike out the word "corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "corporation."

In section 3, page 4, in line 1, insert the word "equal" after the word "have."

On page 4 strike out all of section 5.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have two additional amendments that I also send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we should first dispose of the committee amendments. I think they might all be considered together.

The SPEAKER. That is true. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments sent to the desk by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "fourth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "third."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman proposes to strike out the word "fourth" and insert the word "third" so as to make it read "the third paragraph hereof." I suppose he refers to section 3, does he not?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why not say so?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have no objection, and I ask that my amendment be so amended. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment by offering as a substitute therefor the following:

Page 1, line 7, strike cut the words "the fourth paragraph" and insert in lieu thereof the words "section 3."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, in line 7, by striking out the words "the fourth paragraph" and insert "section 3."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I accept that as a substitute for my amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have another amendment which I think will meet the gentleman's views.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Between lines 4 and 5 on page 4 of the bill insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That permission is hereby granted the Secretary of Commerce to use a portion of said military reservation not less than 20 feet square for maintaining a light and fog signal to mark the Fort McHenry Channel, and to maintain poles as may be necessary for carrying wires to transmit electric current to operate the fog signal."

Mr. MANN. Where does that come in?

The CLERK. Between lines 4 and 5, page 4.

Mr. MANN. That is in the wrong place. He had a wrong copy of the bill, I suppose, and it should be after section 3 insert.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Well, I have no objection. This is an amendment sent up here by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MANN. They had another copy of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 3 insert as follows, etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the first word. The gentleman refers in this bill constantly to the corporation, to said corporation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. If the mayor and city council of Baltimore are a corporation, I think we ought to say so. It is a pure matter of endeavoring to find out what corporation you are referring to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have no objection to that at all. The corporate name of the city of Baltimore is "the mayor and city council of Baltimore." It was made a corporation by special act of the legislature.

Mr. MANN. Well, that does not appear in the bill, and the bill constantly refers in some places to "the corporation" and in some places to "the mayor and city council." I move to insert after the word "Baltimore" in line 5 the words, "a municipal corporation of the State of."

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, in line 5, by inserting, after the word "Baltimore," the words "a municipal corporation of the State of."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the title should be amended by striking out, at the end of the title, the words "and appropriating certain money."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by striking out, at the end of the title, the words "and appropriating certain money."

The question was taken, and the title was so amended.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The title should be amended to conform to the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what we are doing now. The title will be further amended to conform to the bill.

On motion of Mr. LINTHICUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEAMSHIP AGREEMENTS, ETC., FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC TRADE (H. DOC. NO. 805).

The SPEAKER. The Chair orders printed as a House document the report filed by Mr. ALEXANDER, of Missouri.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments to the Post Office bill and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate, and that the conferees be appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee regarding the Senate amendments, I have not been able to get a copy of the bill as amended by the Senate, relating to the continuation of the commissions on the parcel post, good roads, and so forth.

Mr. MOON. I did not catch what the gentleman stated.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Senate amended the Post Office bill by continuing certain commissions, as I understand it.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The parcel post, and so forth. I would like to have a separate vote on that amendment, if possible, in connection with the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker. will the gentleman from Tennessee kindly defer asking unanimous consent until to-morrow to give opportunity to members of the committee to examine these Senate amendments?

Mr. MOON. Why, it is not usual to do so; it usually goes to conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill as printed has not been brought in the House, and members of the committee have had no opportunity whatsoever to examine the amendments, and I think it is only a matter of courtesy to have the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman wants to object, he can do so, but I do not think it is proper.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin object?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to its consideration to-day; yes, sir.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference and that the conferees be appointed on the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Of course that motion is not in order. Would not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to have the bill printed with the Senate amendments, and then make his request to-morrow?

Mr. MOON. If the gentlemen over here want to object to it, I will withdraw the motion and let the bill go to the committee and let them take any action they want.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are not asking that.

EDIZ HOOK LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3454) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to lease to the city of Port Angeles, Wash., certain property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman desire a statement made regarding the bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not desire any statement, so far as I am concerned, but I desire to know whether the gentleman has repaired the revaluation clause.

Mr. FERRIS. I was not here on the last unanimous-consent day, but I understand the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] has had some conversation with the gentleman from Illinois about it and has prepared an amendment, which he hopes meets his views and that that amendment will be offered. I will say to the gentleman that has not been referred to the committee, and I do not want the committee to be bound by it.

Mr. FALCONER. Will you have the bill read?

Mr. MANN. Is the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] satisfactory to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. FERRIS. I have only had a chance to glance at it, but I think it is. It is a provision fixing the revaluation every 10 years, with the view to a refixing of the rental price at that time.

Mr. MANN. Then I do not object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3454) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to lease to the city of Port Angeles, Wash., certain property.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized, directed, and empowered to lease and demise to the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, all of that tract of land reserved for lighthouse purposes by presidential order of February 10, 1908, and bounded on the southwest by suburban lots Nos. 135 and 147, as shown by the plats of Port Angeles town site, State of Washington, approved by the United States surveyor general of the State of Washington on November 4, 1863, and September 12, 1892, together with outlots Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and such portion of outlot No. 7 (all in township 31 north, range 6 west, Willamette meridian), of the Ediz Hook or False Dungeness Lighthouse Reservation, Wash., as may be required to give a frontage of 2 statute miles measured in a northerly and easterly direction along the westerly and northerly boundary of said reservation, beginning from a point on high-water mark opposite the northwesterly corner of lot 147 of the said Port Angeles town site; also the tide lands on the Strait of Fuca and on Port Angeles Harbor abutting on those portions of the Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation heretofore described, for and during the full period of 99 years, for its use, except as hereinafter specified: Provided, That in said lease it shall be stipulated that the Government of the United States may at any time during the term thereof go upon said reservation and establish and maintain post lights or such other aids to navigation as it may deem proper at any points on the reservation affected by this lease, and shall have access thereto and a sufficient right of way thereon at all times: Provided further, That no excavations, other than excavations for foundations for building purposes, shall be made, and no soil or other material forming the spit shall be removed from the lighthouse reservation; and that the buildings to be erected on the said premises shall not obstruct or interfere with any lights serving as aids to navigation.

SEC. 2. That said lease shall contain a provision that, in consideration of said lease, the said city of Port Angeles will construct and maintain in good condition at all times a roadway, paved with macadam or other material approved by the Secretary of Commerce, 30 feet in width, and extending from a public highway on the mainland to Ediz Hook Light Station, over the portion of the reservation so leased, as well as over the remaining portion which the Lighthouse Service will continue to use for lighthouse purposes, the said roadway to be above the limits of high-water mark. The lease shall further provide that the line of said roadway which traverses such portion of the Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation not covered by this lease may be laid out as may be directed by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 3. That there shall be a stipulation in said lease that all charges levied or to be levied on said premises during such term shall be at the expense of the city of Port Angeles, and no claim shall arise against the United States because of this lease or the termination thereof.

SEC. 4. That the said lease shall further provide that the Secretary of Commerce may at any time during the said period of 99 years, at his discretion, terminate and cancel said lease, in case said city of Port Angeles shall fail to construct and maintain in good condition the roadway herein provided for or neglect to pave same as hereinbefore provided for, or shall excavate on said lighthouse reservation for any purposes other than for building purposes, or shall take or remove therefrom soil or other material belonging to the lighthouse reservation, or shall, in any way, interfere with the right of the United States to establish and maintain post lights as specified above or fail to observe other provisions stipulated in said lease on its part to be kept and performed. It shall also be stipulated in said lease that all improvements made upon said lighthouse reservation by the said city of Port Angeles, and all buildings and other structures erected thereon by said city of Port Angeles, under the terms of said lease, shall, upon the termination of said lease, in natural term or by cancellation of the same, be and become the property of the Government of the United States, unless said improvements and buildings and other structures erected thereon shall be removed within six months from the date of the expiration of the lease; and that in event said structure shall be removed by said lessee, the premises shall be restored to the same condition as before their erection.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Commerce may include in said lease any other provisions or stipulations which in his judgment may be deemed necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 6. That said lease shall stipulate that the said roadway to be constructed and maintained by said city of Port Angeles, hereinbefore provided for, shall be built and completed on that portion of Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation to be leased to the said city of Port Angeles, and also on that portion of said reservation reserved for lighthouse purposes, within one year from date thereof.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Amend, on page 3, by inserting, after the word "times," in line 2, the following:

"And that the said city of Port Angeles shall not sublet any portion of the said property without first having obtained the consent of the Secretary of Commerce and his approval of all the terms and conditions in any such subleases."

Amend, page 4, by inserting, at the end of line 1, the following:

"In addition to the aforesaid consideration the said city of Port Angeles shall pay to the Government of the United States such annual rental for the aforesaid property as may be decided upon by the Secretary of Commerce."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, on page 1, line 5 of the bill, the word "of" should be stricken out, and I move that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out the word "of" where it first appears.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, in line 4, after the word "lease," I think, as a matter of form, the words "and demise" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Where is it?

Mr. FERRIS. On page 1, line 4, after the word "lease," I move to strike out the words "and demise." I think they are wholly unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "and demise."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. FALCONER. I have sent the amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 5, after the word "Commerce," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That there shall be a stipulation in said lease that at the end of every 10 years during the existence thereof the Secretary of Commerce shall cause a revaluation of the lease of the premises to be made, and that the said Secretary shall thereupon be authorized to determine and fix the annual rentals of the premises for the ensuing period of 10 years in accordance with such revaluation."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, where does that amendment go on?

Mr. MANN. It comes after the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It comes on page 4, after line 5.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the amendment appear as a proviso?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11338. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

MARKING GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 100) to continue in effect the provisions of the act of March 9, 1906 (Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 53).

The title of the joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] addressed the Chair first.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, this is a House joint resolution, and there is upon the Speaker's table a similar or identical Senate resolution. I ask that that may be considered in the place of the House joint resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate joint resolution numbered 90 may be considered now in place of House joint resolution numbered 100.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object on both requests, will not the gentleman from Georgia tell us what the situation is in regard to this matter?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. I thought, though, Mr. Speaker, if I may be indulged a moment, that we would have the Senate joint resolution considered in place of this House joint resolution so that if anybody wants to object to the consideration of the Senate resolution he can do that. Of course, it goes without saying that consent to consider the Senate joint resolution would not preclude anybody from making objection to the House resolution. I merely wanted to——

Mr. MANN. I do not agree with the gentleman abont that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Very well. I will withdraw that for the present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Georgia tell us what the situation is?

Mr. BARTLETT. The situation, Mr. Speaker, from the reports and from the evidence submitted to the meeting of the Confederate Veterans' Association at Chattanooga, is that there are quite a number of graves unmarked of Confederate dead—graves that are not marked because they do not fall within the strict letter of the resolution passed in 1906. I have that resolution in my hand. The Secretary of War could not, and the last commissioner, ex-Senator Berry, whose report I have in my hand, could not carry out the purpose which was evidently in mind as regards marking all the unmarked graves of Confederate soldiers unless they were in national cemeteries and near to the prisons in which they died.

Of the appropriation of something over $200,000 which was made for this purpose there remains unexpended some $50,000. In other words, Congress appropriated $200,000 for the purpose which it is desired now by this resolution to extend, so as to permit the marking of Confederate graves which do not fall within the designation of the original act, which covered only graves in national cemeteries or in graveyards or cemeteries contiguous to or adjacent to the cities or places where the Confederate soldiers died in prison. The Confederate Veterans' Association took up the matter and passed a resolution requesting the extension of this legislation to two years more, and asking that the amount remaining unexpended of the $200,000 originally appropriated be made available. The exact amount is $51,454.01. They desire that the Secretary of War may appoint someone who might during the next two years carry on the work of marking the graves of the Confederate soldiers which do not come within the designation contained in the original resolution. The Secretary of War indicates in a letter that he is not able to state how many graves would be required to be marked under the extension which is proposed now to be made under this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Several former Members of this House have been commissioners under this act?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; Congressman Elliott, of South Carolina, was the first commissioner and ex-Senator Berry, of Arkansas, was the next. Those are the two whom I recall.

Mr. MANN. I thought there was one other.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I will say that Gov. Oates, of Alabama, was one.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; Gov. Oates.

Mr. MANN. What salaries did these commissioners draw, if the gentleman happens to know?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think it was two or three thousand dollars, according to my recollection.

Mr. MANN. I thought it was $5,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am informed that it was $3,600. I thought it was two or three thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. There remains something over $50,000 of the original appropriation?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. That is the sum which remains unexpended of the original appropriation.

Mr. MANN. We have extended this resolution several times heretofore, have we not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; twice.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think now they will probably be able to finish the work within two years?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do; and, so far as I am concerned, I am moved in the matter purely by the request of the Confederate Veterans' Association, who believe that this ought to be done. Recognizing the generosity of the General Government and of the Members of Congress on both sides in this work, I have at their request introduced this resolution and trust it will pass.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that I have always favored it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I know the gentleman has acted most generously and patriotically.

Mr. MANN. I brought in and put through the first bill ever passed by Congress providing for the care of the Confederate dead.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. In speaking with the Confederate veterans in my section I have always given the gentleman credit for that, cheerfully and gladly, and have stated that the gentleman from Illinois was not only the author of it but had on all occasions come most generously to the assistance of the Confederate veterans.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BARTLETT. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original resolution had in view only the marking of Confederate graves in national cemeteries and those buried in prisons?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And subsequently in the sundry civil act it was extended to the marking of Confederate graves in any place?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; this proposes to extend it in that way.

Mr. LANGLEY. That ought to be done. I am glad to hear of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to invite the attention of the gentleman to the fifth paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of War, in which he says:

> If the term "or localities throughout the country," as contained in this proviso, is intended to apply to the unmarked graves of Confederates who died during the war and have died since its close and are now buried in village, town, and city cemeteries and other places throughout the country, it is impracticable for the department, from its records, to form an estimate as to what additional work will be necessary to fully comply with the act, or the number of headstones that will be required and the amount of money that it will be necessary to appropriate for the purpose.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; he does not say that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because he has no such records in his office.

Mr. MANN. That is not in regard to this bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. No. It is to estimate what additional work will be necessary. But this bill simply proposes to authorize the use of this $51,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that this resolution provides an extension of the original scope of the proposition for marking the graves of the Confederate dead?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; there is an additional proviso. That is contained in Senate joint resolution 90, which I shall ask to be considered in lieu of the House resolution. Has the gentleman a copy of Senate joint resolution 90?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I have only a copy of House joint resolution No. 100.

Mr. MANN. There is no such provision in this act.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know it; but the committee has reported an amendment which covers that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman acquaint the House with the scope of the amendment which he proposes to offer?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. The provision is:

Provided, That hereafter the provisions of said act shall include and apply to the graves of Confederate soldiers and sailors lying in all national cemeteries and cemeteries at Federal military stations, or localities throughout the country.

So that it gives it a wider scope than the one which is now offered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House how long a time will be required for the graves of all the Confederate dead to be marked appropriately under the scope of the proviso he has just read?

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman mean in all the country? That is not the purpose——

Mr. STAFFORD. All those covered in the proviso which has just been read by the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think it can be done within two years, and within the scope of this appropriation. That is the information I had.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House—because he has such large information on this subject—whether the graves of dead Union soldiers in every part of the country, wherever they are, have been marked?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think we did that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know there are a good many Union soldiers buried in private cemeteries whose graves are not marked.

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not state about that.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, I will state that markers can be obtained.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for that suggestion. I know of my own experience that the attention of the War Department was called to the fact that there was a soldier's grave unmarked in my district. A prominent citizen there called attention to it in a letter to the War Department, and the grave was afterwards marked. I know that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us any estimate as to the number of Confederate dead who are buried in these other localities, whose graves will be included in the proviso that he seeks to have adopted?

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not. I have only the general statement that it can be accomplished within the time provided in the resolution, and with the unexpended balance of the original appropriation. The gentleman will understand that the number of graves of Confederate soldiers in other localities than in national cemeteries, or near the prisons in which they died, is comparatively few. There are not many graves which are yet unmarked. The number is not large.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. In a moment, if the gentleman will first permit me to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. I suggest that the gentleman go ahead and yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman to offer an amendment providing for the marking of graves of Confederate dead wherever buried in the United States?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not in the Southern States.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not in the Southern States.

Mr. MANN. I know, but this is just what I want to get at——

Mr. BARTLETT. The proviso is—

Provided, That hereafter the provisions of said act shall include and apply to the graves of Confederate soldiers and sailors lying in all national cemeteries and cemeteries at Federal military stations, or localities throughout the country.

Mr. MANN. The words "localities throughout the country" will include every place?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, we provided for taking care of Confederate mound in Oakwood Cemetery in Chicago. When this commission were appointed they wanted to interfere right away, and they finally did something there. The gentleman does not desire the National Government to start in and remodel all of the Confederate cemeteries in the South?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; that is not the purpose of the act.

Mr. MANN. Why not leave out the words "or other localities throughout the country" and confine this to what the gentleman wants?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is what ought to be done.

Mr. MANN. If you start in——

Mr. BARTLETT. The original resolution, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, excluded any interference with Confederate Mound in Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago. I believe that was properly done. It is not the purpose of this resolution to interfere in any way with that.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of that. When the original resolution was passed I had inserted in it an amendment excluding Confederate Mound in Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But when the commissioners were appointed they wanted to do something there, and when this resolution was renewed several times, in the end they persuaded me to yield, so that the commissioners could go in there, and they did go in, and did some very handsome work, of which I make no criticism. They could not help it. While they had plenty of work to do elsewhere, here was one burial place in Chicago that they wanted to interfere with; and I am not so sure but they will want to remodel all of your Confederate cemeteries in the South.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think not.

Mr. MANN. Here is the authority. Why start them on that basis?

Mr. BARTLETT. The truth about it is that the graves of all those in national cemeteries and near the prisons have been marked under the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is a limitation of two years and the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has asked that he be recognized for two or three minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to make a few observations, not to ask a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The SPEAKER. Consent to discuss this bill has not, in fact, been obtained. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Senate joint resolution 90 on the Speaker's table, a similar resolution, be considered in lieu of the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the Senate joint resolution 90 be considered in lieu of the House resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution 90, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 90.

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1906, and continued in full force and effect for two years by joint resolution approved February 26, 1908, and for the additional period of one year by a joint resolution approved February 25, 1910, and for the further additional period of two years by a joint resolution approved December 23, 1910, is continued in full force and effect for two years from this date; and the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by said act of March 9, 1906, is continued and made applicable for expenditure during the additional period of two years herein provided for: Provided, That hereafter the provisions of said act shall include and apply to the graves of Confederate soldiers and sailors lying in all national cemeteries and cemeteries at Federal military stations, or localities throughout the country: Provided further, That the compensation of the commissioner shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I favored strongly the original resolution passed on this question. I remember distinctly the graceful and patriotic remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on that occasion. It was the first time I ever heard of the Confederate Mound of Chicago. His speech gratified me very much as a man who had very early recollections of Confederate soldiers. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the operation of the resolution should be limited to that section of the country which was in contemplation when the original resolution was passed. I am not in favor of having the Federal Government, or any other Government or political association, go into the cemeteries which we have built and care for, where we have provided a decent burial and maintain a proper regard for the memory of our dead, by having them cared for by appropriations out of the Public Treasury.

I took this position once before on the floor of this House and was criticized by one or two newspapers in the country because of my attitude, but I am pleased to say that the position I took then was indorsed by the Confederate camps of the State of Texas, so far as I am advised, and many of them, together with the great newspapers of that State, resented the suggestion that we should ask for an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury to take care of the graves of our dead. Considering our relations to the Union at that time, it is a good deal like asking a stranger to look after the graves of one's parents.

Now, my understanding is that this work has been nearly completed. Senator Berry, who had charge of it, told me it was nearly completed, and if this resolution passes and the act is extended for two years, and this $51,000 is still left available for the purposes in mind, it will certainly be adequate, in my judgment, and more than adequate, to mark the neglected Confederate graves in the North in cemeteries adjacent to prisons or in national cemeteries, and that is as far as we ought to go. It is as far as any man from the South, any man associated with the memories of the Confederates in that gallant and unsuccessful struggle from 1861 to 1865 ought to ask that it should go.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the resolution provides that the compensation of the commissioner shall be fixed by the Secretary of War. What is the necessity of putting that provision into this resolution?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think there is any necessity of putting it there, but I want to get the resolution through without amendment. It is mere repetition. I did not want to send the resolution back to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

House joint resolution 100 was laid on the table.

SALE OF LAND TO SAN DIEGO COUNTY, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11751) granting land to the county of San Diego, State of California, for public watering purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the county of San Diego, State of California, a patent for the southeast quarter of section 24, in township 17 south, of range 8 east, San Bernardino base and principal meridian, containing 160 acres, said land to be used exclusively for public purposes, and the spring or springs of water contained therein to be maintained and kept in good condition for free public use: Provided, That the said patent contains the provision that the land shall revert to the United States whenever it shall not be used and maintained for the purposes mentioned in this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the title by striking out the first word, "Granting," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Authorizing the sale of certain."

In line 4 of the bill, after the first four words "authorized and directed to," insert the following language: "sell at $1.25 per acre and."

Insert the following proviso after the end of line 14:

"Provided further, That the Government of the United States of America reserves the right to operate and maintain any telegraph or telephone line over and upon said land which is in operation at the passage of this bill or which it may see fit to establish thereafter."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment by striking out the word "bill," in line 8, page 2, and inserting the word "act."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the word "bill" in the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendments as amended were agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 2, page 2, by striking out the word "contains" and inserting the words "shall contain."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "patent," strike out the word "contains" and insert the words "shall contain."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. CHURCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER, N. Y.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3742) to authorize the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation to construct a bridge across the Hudson River in the State of New York.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and is hereby, granted to the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, together with the necessary viaducts and approaches thereto, for railroad purposes only, across the Hudson River, at a point between Castleton and Schodack Landing, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the time of the commencement of the construction of the said bridge shall be within one year after the passage of this act, and the said bridge shall be completed within five years from the date of its commencement.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out, page 1, line 7, the words "viaducts and."

Strike out, page 1, line 8, the words "for railroad purposes only."

Insert, page 1, line 9, after the word "point," the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

Strike out all of section 2, as follows:

"That the time of the commencement of the construction of the said bridge shall be within one year after the passage of this act, and the said bridge shall be completed within five years from the date of its commencement."

Renumber section 3 to be section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some one in charge of the bill to explain it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TALCOTT].

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TEN EYCK] in whose district this proposed bridge is located, and also by the papers on file with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that this bridge is a connecting railroad bridge. Its object is to build a railroad bridge connecting the main line of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. at a point near Stuyvesant, in the county of Columbia, running north on a grade parallel with such main line to a point north of the village of Schodack Landing, in the county of Rensselaer, where it joins a connection running from the Boston & Albany Railroad at or near Niverville; thence crossing the Hudson River by a bridge and running northwesterly to a place called Feura Bush, where it is proposed to establish a large freight-distributing yard and to make a connection with the railroad of the West Shore Railroad Co.

This bridge is to be constructed 135 feet above the water level, and the Secretary of War reports that the bill makes ample provision for the protection of navigation. The bridge company was incorporated by chapter 338 of the laws of 1913, and as soon as the incorporation was made an application was made to the public-service commission of the second district of the State of New York, and a hearing was held. Some opposition was manifested by the property owners along the east side of the Hudson River, along or through whose property it is proposed to construct the new railroad; but the permission was granted, and I understand from Mr. TEN EYCK that there is now no opposition to this bridge and that it is approved not only by the public-service commission, but that it also has the approval of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Albany and the Common Council of the city of Albany.

Mr. PLATT. It will be built at 10 or 15 miles below Albany?

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. I understand that Schodack Landing is about 14 miles south of Albany.

Mr. PLATT. The purpose of it is to divert outside of the city of Albany the freight that now crosses the bridge in the city of Albany.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. For the effects of the construction of the bridge and railroad I must refer to the statement in relation to the bill filed with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPANISH WAR PENSIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13044) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

FOREST PRODUCTS EXPOSITIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 204, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make exhibits at forest products expositions to be held in Chicago, Ill., and New York, N. Y.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such exhibits as may be convenient and practicable at the Exposition of Forest Products, to be held in Chicago, Ill., April 30 to May 9, inclusive, and the Exposition of Forest Products, to be held in New York, N. Y., May 21 to May 30, inclusive, 1914, and there is hereby appropriated a sum necessary for these exhibits, not to exceed $10,000, the same to be paid out of any money in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

WATER SUPPLY, CITY OF BAKER, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3206) for the protection of the water supply of the city of Baker, a municipal corporation of the State of Oregon.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands within the Whitman National Forest situated in the county of Baker, State of Oregon, hereinafter described, are hereby reserved from all forms of location or entry and set aside as a municipal water-supply reserve for the benefit of the city of Baker, a municipal corporation of the State of Oregon, to wit: S. ½ of NE. ¼ and N. ½ of SE. ¼ sec. 4, T. 9 S., R. 38 E., of the Willamette meridian: Provided, That if the said city of Baker shall at any time cease to use said land for said reservoir purpose, then, and in that event, the title to said land shall revert to and vest in the United States.

SEC. 2. That to accomplish the purpose of this act as defined in section 1 hereof, said city of Baker shall have the right, subject to approval by the Secretary of Agriculture, to the use of any and all parts of the land above described for the storage and conveying of water and the construction and maintenance thereon of reservoirs, pipes, pipe lines, mains, conduits, and other like or any improvements or means for the storage, diversion, or transmission of water.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be subject to the vested rights of any municipality, person, or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof or the water thereof.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman having the bill in charge whether the provisions of the bill, as suggested by the Assistant Secretary, along the lines adopted by Congress some years ago, granting to the town of Wilson Creek, Wash., certain lands for reservoir purposes, have been complied with. I direct the chairman's attention to the report on page 2, the fourth paragraph of that report, in which it states:

The general purpose of this bill meets with the approval of the department, but it is suggested that in lieu of a perpetual reservation of public lands for this purpose the course adopted by Congress in the act of February 13, 1911, is much preferable.

Did the committee take that suggestion into consideration and embody it in the bill under consideration?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; we took that into consideration, if the gentleman will pardon me, but this only affects one-quarter section of land, and it is a matter of such very small consequence that we thought we would let this bill go through, inasmuch as the title did not pass and at any time the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act remains in the Government.

Mr. MANN. That provision was put on in the Senate.

Mr. FERRIS. I believe it was; yes. The bill was reintroduced and it was put on in the Senate. I had forgotten that, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to what seems to be a needed amendment. It says at the bottom of page 1:

Provided, That if the said city of Baker shall at any time cease to use said land for reservoir purposes, then, and in that event, the title to said land shall revert to and vest in the United States.

Now, in the first place, this land is to be used for other than reservoir purposes and, in the second place, the title is not conveyed out of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. The second criticism is undoubtedly a good one.

Mr. MANN. And the other is good.

Mr. FERRIS. I just talked with the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] about that, that it being a Senate bill and a matter of small consequence we did not want to amend it and be forced to send it back to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. A reservoir has a specific meaning and a municipal water-supply reserve is quite a different thing.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the gentleman might have a technical suggestion there that might or might not be good. We did not consider that particular phase, however. Whether it was dry or flooded over the drainage area, it would still be part of the water system.

Mr. MANN. If that be the construction of the word "reservoir," you have to define the purpose for said purpose, which is a water-supply reserve.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman thinks it is of sufficient importance to send it back to the Senate——

Mr. MANN. I think the other will send it back to the Senate, because the title is not conveyed out of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. That is very true.

Mr. MANN. In line 2, page 2, you should insert, after the word "the," the words "rights hereby granted to said city shall cease and be unrestricted."

Mr. FERRIS. I confess the gentleman's suggestions are good. We thought the matter was such a small matter, it being a Senate bill, and not wishing to send it back——

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman understands in drawing these matters finally it is for the House to correct many of the manifold errors that creep into bills in the other body.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; and it was only in the interest of economy of time we let it stay in this shape. If the gentleman will offer the amendment, I would be glad to accept it.

Mr. MANN. I will when the time comes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move, on page 2, line 1, to strike out the word "reservoir."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "reservoir."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, I move, in line 2, page 2, after the word "the," to insert the words "rights hereby granted to said city shall cease, and the unrestricted," so it will read:

Then, and in that event, the rights hereby granted to said city shall cease, and the unrestricted title to said land shall revert to and vest in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "the," insert the words "rights hereby granted to said city shall cease, and the unrestricted," so that the line will read as amended, as follows: "Then, and in that event, the rights hereby granted to said city shall cease, and the unrestricted title to said land shall revert to and vest in the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMANENT MANEUVERING GROUNDS, ANNISTON, ALA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 76, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to accept the title to 4,000 acres of land at or near Anniston, Ala., for the purpose of establishing maneuver camps, rifle and artillery ranges, etc.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the title to 4,000 acres of land at or near Anniston, in the State of Alabama, when the same shall be granted by the proper authority of said State; the said land having heretofore been inspected by Col. Stephen C. Mills, Inspector General, United States Army, as shown by the report submitted by him to the War Department of the 12th day of January, 1912.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby further authorized and directed to acquire such other land adjacent to the land herein mentioned, by purchase or condemnation, as may in his judgment be deemed necessary for the purposes hereinafter declared.

SEC. 3. That upon acquisition of title to the land herein mentioned the Secretary of War is hereby further authorized and directed to locate and establish upon said land a permanent maneuver camp for the troops of the United States Army and to establish and maintain thereon camps of instruction for rifle and artillery ranges and for the mobilization and assembling of troops from the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

In line 4, page 1, strike out the words "and directed" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in his discretion."

Strike out section 2.

Amend section 3 so as to name it section 2, and after the word "Carolina," in line 12 of page 2, strike out the period and add the following: "or such other States as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] a question. The ultimate purpose is to establish in the vicinity of Anniston, Ala., a maneuver camp for the assembly of large numbers of Regulars and Militia, is it not?

Mr. DENT. Like those camps which have already been established elsewhere.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has this been requested or recommended by the War Department?

Mr. DENT. Not in so many words, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, but Gen. Mills, in charge of the troops down at Anniston, where this summer camp was held several years ago, reported it as an ideal place for a camp. That is contained in the report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes. But the War Department has not usually been backward in asking what was required. That is what is troubling my mind at the moment. They usually unhesitatingly present to Congress a request for whatever they want. Now, they have, as I understand it, a very large area not far from Anniston, in the vicinity of Fort Oglethorpe, and it occurred to me that it was rather crowding things to put so many camps in that neighborhood.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKMON. The War Department asked that a place be selected two years ago.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The War Department did what?

Mr. BLACKMON. They sent out United States Army officers to make an inspection for a suitable place to hold midsummer maneuvers, and they said they wanted a place where the troops from North Carolina, Mississippi, South Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, and Alabama could meet at the same time, and the officers making this investigation reported unanimously in favor of Anniston, Ala.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did they not acquire a good deal of land in the vicinity of Fort Oglethorpe on the same plea, namely, that that was a location fitted for the assembling of troops from the localities that you have named?

Mr. BLACKMON. Not for this purpose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, for the purpose of assembling them in a permanent camp? It is the same thing, is it not?

Mr. BLACKMON. That is an Army post. This is for a permanent maneuvers camp for maneuvers and instructions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why should the Government go to the expense of buying another site for the midsummer maneuvers when they have another site that is permanent?

Mr. BLACKMON. They are not asked to buy any property here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But clause 2 provides for that.

Mr. DENT. That is stricken out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DENT. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand this is a proposition for a maneuver camp every two years. They have to have a place for these maneuvers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, the people at Anniston propose to give this to the Government without cost.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman is too old a legislator to know that they are doing it for the purpose of giving the Government something. They are doing it for the purpose of having the Government do what is in the second part of the bill, namely, establish a camp there periodically.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Four thousand acres, I think, are large enough. I think a maneuver camp has already been located on it. The waterworks and pipes, and so forth, were put in. This allows the Government to take this, so that they can have a maneuver camp——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have no objection to the Government taking whatever is required for what it needs. I was under the impression that the Government had already acquired a large amount of land at Fort Oglethorpe, and I could not see the need, therefore, for this. The explanation of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] is that this is a summer maneuver camp, which he distinguishes from an Army maneuver camp.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is expected to be a permanent maneuver ground.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not the other camp a permanent maneuver camp for joint maneuvers?

Mr. BLACKMON. No. It is a Regular Army brigade post. Anniston presents an ideal place, as Army officers have reported, for a permanent maneuver camp, rifle and artillery ranges, and camp of instruction.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Government has that land at Fort Oglethorpe and can so use it.

Mr. BLACKMON. The Government thinks that Anniston is the most desirable place it could find in which to establish a permanent maneuver camp in all this group of States. In 1912, by direction of the War Department, the midsummer maneuvers were held at Anniston, Ala. About 18,000 troops were assembled at this point. Water mains were laid, additional railroad tracks for properly handling the troops were provided, latrines provided, streets and roads through the camp, all underbrush cut away; in other words, many thousand dollars were expended in preparation of the site now proposed by Anniston. Anniston has the best of railroad facilities. Two of the main lines of the Southern Railway, also the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, enter Anniston, and the Seaboard Air Line has a road surveyed into Anniston, with the right of way and terminal facilities already purchased, and will be in operation, it is confidently expected, within a very short time.

New Orleans, Pensacola, Savannah, Charleston, and other seaboard towns can be reached within 11 to 14 hours. The climate and water is unexcelled, and the general excellent health conditions have been fully set out in reports now on file in the War Department. However, it is not necessary for me to deal with this phase of the question, because the official reports now on file in the War Department, made by official representatives of that department, give this information in detail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, this ground at Fort Oglethorpe is a Regular Army encampment. At this place they have held their maneuvers before. These people propose to give them the land. The water pipes have been laid there. Of course, the reason they wish to give them the land is that they want the men to come there and spend the money. It does not compel the Secretary of War to take this.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It does not compel him to buy more land?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. DENT. It does not compel him to take the 4,000 acres of land.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But it would be ungracious of the Secretary of War to accept such a magnificent gift from the people of Alabama without giving them a quid pro quo in some shape or other.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the quid pro quo they expect to get is very evident. There can not be any doubt about that. They propose to give this land. There is going to be a maneuver camp somewhere in these States every two years. These people are willing to make a gift to the Government of this land, which is suitable, for the Government has already tried it. It is nothing new. They have held it there before, and the quid pro quo will be the amount of money that these troops expend there every two years when they come. They will spend it somewhere, of course.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why should the Government have a duplicate camp?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They have not had a duplicate camp. My friend from Texas has made that statement before, but I ask him to put in the RECORD anything he has to show that the Government has a duplicate camp.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will call upon the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] to say how much land the Government has at Oglethorpe, Ga., for maneuvering grounds.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, there is available land all over the country for that purpose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is all they need.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not a question of all they need. They have public lands in the State of Alabama that would be available for a camp if they were desired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not see why they do not take it instead of going to Oglethorpe and paying a big price for land there.

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman from Texas has in mind the bill that was fathered here by Judge MOON, but I think that bill was simply to increase the amount of land in connection with the fort there, and was not intended for the purpose of establishing a summer maneuver camp for the joint occupation of the Army and State troops, as this bill does, and as does the bill offered by Judge HOUSTON and Mr. BYRNS, at Tullahoma, Tenn.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman does not seem to think with his colleague that they could not have joint maneuvers of the National Guard and the Federal troops at a place like Oglethorpe.

Mr. DENT. No; I do not think so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to my friend that my affection for the gentlemen from Alabama is convinced, but my reason is not. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. I thank the gentleman for his affection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have been unable to hear the interesting private conversation that has been going forward on the other side of the House. I would like to ascertain who is trying to get the advantage here. We have House joint resolution 76 up now for unanimous consent. We have on the calendar House joint resolution 85, the one introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] and the other one introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], both reported from the same committee, for the same purpose, in the same language, except that in one case there is a long title and in the other a short title; but the committee amended them in both cases. What becomes of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee if this goes through? Where does he land? [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we have no objection to the passage of the Byrns resolution. We are perfectly willing that both resolutions should be passed by Congress, and we are willing to put it up to the War Department to determine which of these two places is the most suitable for a camp.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama whether the War Department can determine the location any easier after the passage of this resolution than it can before? We shall have to pass only one.

Mr. DENT. There would probably be no offer or donation of the land unless there was some authorization on the part of Congress in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. We have had both of these matters before us before, and the statement has been on each occasion that the people did offer the land. Why can not Congress, upon the recommendation or statement of the Secretary of War, determine which of these locations it will take, it being impossible to take both?

Mr. DENT. Does not the gentleman think that the passage of this resolution will in the end accomplish the desired result, and that this is all they need?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know whether they will get a better place or not. Of course I do not know whether it is my duty to protect the gentlemen from Tennessee. I find they are quite competent to protect themselves. But I notice in this case the diligent gentleman from Alabama has his bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and if it passes some gentleman on our side of the House may feel it incumbent upon him to object to passing the Tennessee resolution to accomplish the same purpose. It is so easy to be done.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we are perfectly satisfied that we can convince the War Department and the Secretary of War that the best place in the South to establish a maneuvering ground is at Tullahoma, Tenn., and we are perfectly willing that these two measures shall be passed and put up to him, so that he can make the best selection.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not think it is desirable for Congress to pass two resolutions to accomplish the same purpose, only one of which can become operative. I can see no reason why we should pass the Tennessee resolution if we pass this. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman is too late, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] reserves the right to object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I want to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois, if he will give me his attention. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that if this resolution were passed he saw no necessity for the passage of the other resolution, and that he proposes to object to that?

Mr. MANN. I did not say I would object. I will find it difficult to make up my mind when the time comes without expressing a decided opinion in advance. But I can say to the gentleman that I see no necessity whatever for the passage of the resolution to take a site in Tennessee after we have passed a resolution to take a site for the same purpose in Alabama. I think Congress ought to assume some responsibility in these matters and not shirk it and turn it all over to the Secretary of War.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there was an understanding between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] and Judge HOUSTON and myself, as I understand it, that both of these resolutions, so far as we are concerned, would go through, and the War Department later on would determine whether or not it would accept the site offered in this resolution or the site offered in the resolution which I have introduced.

Mr. MANN. I remember an occasion, in my early days in Congress, when each of two gentlemen in the House had a bill for a bridge across the Mississippi River in the neighborhood of a point where there was a necessity for only one bridge. They agreed that the committee should report both bills. They were both reported. One was passed by unanimous consent, and when the other was called up some gentlemen who had no knowledge of the subject at all, but viewed it with suspicion, objected to the consideration of the second bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say that I did not expect this resolution to be called up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I had understood that both resolutions were to be presented to the House, and that the House was to be given an opportunity to pass on both of them. I was very much surprised to learn that this resolution was before the House at this time.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be safer to consolidate these resolutions into one.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly it would. Why does not the gentleman stand on his rights?

Mr. GARNER. Why not let this go over for a day?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is on the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Let us dispose of the committee amendments first.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how many sections are there in that bill?

The SPEAKER. Two sections.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I offer an amendment, to be incorporated as section 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment in the nature of a new section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, on page 2, insert the following as a new section:
"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the title to approximately 5,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Tullahoma, in the State of Tennessee, which certain citizens have offered to donate to the United States and which have been inspected by the commission authorized under the joint resolution approved February 24, 1911, for the purpose of establishing a maneuver camp and for the maneuvering of troops, establishing and maintaining camps of instruction, for rifle and artillery ranges, and for mobilization and assembling of troops from the group of States composed of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order upon the amendment. The amendment is not in order, and I notice that my friend from Tennessee, in offering it, puts in a provision directing the Secretary of War to purchase 5,000 acres in Tennessee, while it is left discretionary with him to purchase the site in Alabama.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was going to ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "and directed" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in his discretion."

Mr. MANN. That will put it on the same footing as the other.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask to modify the amendment in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the request is subject to a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "and directed" in the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the words "in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order upon the amendment. I do not think the amendment is in order. May I ask the gentleman what is the necessity of doing this? My recollection is that the House at one time defeated the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee on a vote.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is in error in regard to that.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The House on two different occasions, according to my recollection, passed the resolution which was presented by myself and which I have offered here now as an amendment. As I remember, there was no objection to the passage of the resolution on the floor of the House. The resolution went to the Senate and, owing to pressure of business, or possibly other things, it was either crowded out or never reached the floor of the Senate. But my recollection is that on two separate occasions the House has passed this amendment in the form of a joint resolution. Of course the gentleman is very well aware that this does not direct the Secretary of War to do anything against his will or to accept this land unless he feels it is for the best interests of the Government and the Army to accept it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman says this does not direct the Secretary of War to do anything. Let me direct the attention of the gentleman to the language in line 10, on page 2, which says:

The Secretary of War is hereby further authorized and directed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to strike out those words also.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman is willing to strike out those words, is he?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly. The gentleman is aware of the manner in which this resolution was offered as an amendment, and I did not have the opportunity to examine the original resolution.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The original resolution contains those words.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a matter for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. SLAYDEN. If those words are stricken from the gentleman's amendment, they ought to be stricken from the original also.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think so; but I understood the gentleman——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think this bargain ought to be carried out on both sides in good faith.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The amendment has been adopted. I understand those words have been stricken out.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There are certain amendments incorporated in the bill; but the bill as given to me at the desk contains those words.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. I am looking for information, Mr. Speaker. Will some gentleman who knows tell me how much land the Government has in this vicinity at the present time? Does anyone know?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not.

Mr. DENT. It does not own any land at all.

Mr. DONOVAN. How much land does the Government own in the State of Georgia near this point?

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is in Tennessee.

Mr. DONOVAN. But how much land does it own in Georgia, not far from this point?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I suppose the gentleman refers to Fort Oglethorpe?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] can inform the gentleman.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. About 7,000 acres.

Mr. DONOVAN. How many miles is it away from this particular place?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I think about 80 miles.

Mr. DONOVAN. As a good legislator, I am going to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], when the Government now has at the present time about 7,000 acres in Georgia, does it need any more land within 80 miles, and is this good legislation?

Mr. BLACKMON. If the land is given to the Government, I can not see any objection to it, and it is at a point where they say they need it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say to the gentleman that certain citizens of Tennessee have offered to the Government about 5,000 acres of land situated near Tullahoma, Tenn., land which is splendidly located, which has upon it the finest water and a most admirable place in every respect for the establishment of a ground of this sort. The necessity for a maneuvering ground of this sort at this point is recognized, and they propose to donate this land to the Government for a maneuvering ground. We are perfectly willing to let them pass judgment on it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman how many troops are there in that particular district?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Why do you say in your bill where the troops are to come from; why not leave that to the Secretary of War?

Mr. DENT. The bill emphatically does that.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask how many troops there are in that particular vicinity?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is an indefinite question and I can not answer it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, they do not seem to know, so there must be very few troops. Seven thousand acres is enough for a few troops in that vicinity. As good legislators, I think they are imposing on this body.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman realize that this resolution does not carry one cent of expense to the United States Government?

Mr. DONOVAN. If the State of Alabama and the State of Tennessee are so generous, they ought to turn into the Treasury the taxes they now owe the Federal Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say that the State of Tennessee does not owe the Federal Government any taxes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, in order to get the floor, what do I do?

The SPEAKER. The right thing for the gentleman to do is to vote against the amendment if he wants to defeat it. However, the Chair will recognize the gentleman if he moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then I do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I have a point of order pending on the amendment, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman can not talk on an amendment striking out the last word except by sufferance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from Illinois had withdrawn his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I reserved the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Then we will first dispose of the point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, can I be heard on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me these gentlemen have come into court without proper information.

They do not know what use the land is to be put to; and if so, they do not know the number of troops that are to use it; and they have not stated to us a number of things. They have not stated to us the need of so much land; they did not tell us—and here is probably the Ethiopian in the woodpile—that there are 20,000 acres of land that can be sold at a certain price in the vicinity. They did not tell us that lumber and building material is cheap. That is probably another Ethiopian. They did not tell us that coal is only a short distance away and freight is cheap. Now, this is purely a business transaction and not simply a charitable one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama what is meant by the language "When the same shall be granted by the proper authority of said State." Does the State of Alabama hold the title to this land?

Mr. DENT. That is to enable the Secretary of War to require such legislative action as will give the United States jurisdiction over this land.

Mr. MANN. That is not what it says. It says that the Secretary of War may accept the title whenever the same shall be granted by proper authority of said State. I do not see how he could accept the title from anybody else. Who owns the title to this land, the State?

Mr. DENT. No; it is owned by individuals.

Mr. MANN. Then, I am afraid the gentleman from Tennessee is coming it over the gentleman from Alabama. This does not authorize the acceptance from anybody except the State of Alabama.

Mr. DENT. It says "the proper authority of said State."

Mr. MANN. The proper authority of said State is whoever represents the State in the execution of deeds.

Mr. DENT. The authority of the State may also mean granting of title by individuals who own it in accordance with the law of the State. I am willing to change the language so as to meet the gentleman's criticism; but I do not think it is necessary, because the whole thing is in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and he will not accept title until it comes to him by the deed of the owners.

Mr. MANN. I am not specially interested in the matter; but I do know that if the Secretary of War should accept the land in Alabama, the gentleman from Alabama will have to come before the House again and ask for an amended bill, because this bill only authorizes the Secretary of War to accept the title from the State of Alabama.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that lines 6 and 7 be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The first matter is to dispose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], to eliminate from his original amendment certain words, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of the amendment strike out the words "and directed" and insert the words "in his discretion."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have been unable to follow this thing very clearly. There is an amendment which I propose to offer to line 10, page 2, section 2, of the bill, to strike out the words "and directed." As I caught the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, something corresponding to that paragraph is in his amendment. I am not certain, but I want to know the parliamentary status.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is referring to the Alabama part of the bill. We are now dealing with the Tennessee amendment, and after we get through with that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the Byrns amendment is accepted and I offer an amendment to strike out the words "and directed," page 2, and it is adopted, will it be in order to move to amend the Byrns amendment to have it conform with the action taken?

The SPEAKER. If the Byrns amendment is agreed to and the gentleman from Texas offers his amendment and it carries, it simply conforms with the Byrns amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is what I wanted to know.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Byrns amendment to the Byrns amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment to the original amendment, and that is to insert at the end of the amendment these words:

Or troops from such other States as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "Carolina," in line 7 of the Byrns amendment, the words "or troops from such other States as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he put that amendment in the same form that it is in in the original bill, which is "or such other States as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was simply following the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. MANN. The committee drew a distinction which they did not know they were drawing, through somebody's carelessness.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask to withdraw that language.

Mr. MANN. The same language is in each of the joint resolutions, which is, "or such other States as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Very well; let that be substituted in place of the amendment that I offered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the Byrns amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 10, page 2, section 2, of House joint resolution 76, the Alabama part of this two-headed measure, by striking out the words "and directed."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "and directed."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, is there an amendment pending? If not, I desire to offer an amendment asking that the title to the resolution be changed to conform to the various amendments.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment pending. The gentleman from Texas has offered an amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on page 2, line 14, I move to strike out all after the word "from" down to the word "such" in line 16, and to strike out the word "other" in line 17.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 14 to 16, strike out the words "the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina or."

Page 2, line 16, strike out the word "other."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So that it will read:

For the mobilization and assembling of troops from such States as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

I do not think we ought to legislate here and say that they shall have the troops mobilized from a certain territory at a certain place, but the matter should be left entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of War. If he accepts this land, he can have all of the troops in the United States assemble there or he can have the troops from one State assemble there. I do not think Congress ought to say that the troops from certain States of the Union shall be carried to this particular spot every two years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the language to which the gentleman refers be stricken out, then would not the Secretary of War be authorized under the resolution to acquire both of these sites, one to assemble the troops of Alabama and the other to assemble the troops of Tennessee and such other troops as he might wish; whereas the resolution in the language drawn, while it is not in the alternative, plainly indicates that the Secretary of War shall only acquire one of the sites and not both of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not care anything about that. What I wanted stricken out is the language that indicates from what point these troops shall be assembled.

Mr. MANN. That is the very purpose of putting it in, so that the Secretary of War shall not undertake to get both. We do not want them both. In the first place, that would be a confidence game on the General Government and in the second place it would be a confidence game on the people who gave the land.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the maneuvers are going to be held in the winter time we would like to have the Chicago troops sent down there, so that they can have some sunshine once in a while.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is the gentleman from South Carolina in favor of the Government acquiring more land than they have already—7,000 acres?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is not the question, and I am not passing on that question. I say that the Congress ought not to indicate to the Secretary of War that he shall assemble the troops from certain States together at any particular camp.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman allow another question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. DONOVAN. As a legislator does the gentleman think we ought to acquire more land than we have already at the present time, more than we need?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, I am not saying the bill should pass, but I am discussing this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "troops," strike out the following language "from the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina or," and insert the word "from" before the word "such," so that the amendment will read: "The mobilization and assembling of troops from such States as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have followed the amendment as read by the Clerk, but I will ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Division, Mr. Speaker—I withdraw the request.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will call for it.

Mr. MANN. I shall make the point of no quorum if this amendment is agreed to.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I now renew the amendment I offered to amend the title of the bill so as to conform to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is not until after the bill passes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask whether section 3 is now modified in any particular except by the striking out of the words "and directed"?

The SPEAKER. That is a correct statement.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "herein," in line 9, page 2, and insert after the word "mentioned," in line 9, page 2, the words "in section 1 or section 2 hereof."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, as the language now stands the Secretary would not be authorized to proceed unless he had acquired both sites, which I do not think is contemplated. The amendment I have proposed will authorize him to do the things contemplated, mentioned either in sections 1 or 3, upon accepting the title.

Mr. DENT. We have no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to section 1, page 1, line 7, by striking out the words "the authority of said State" and insert in lieu thereof "and sufficient deeds," so it would read "shall be granted by proper and sufficient deeds."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "the," after the word "by" in line 6 and in line 7, and the words "authority of said State" and insert the words "and sufficient deeds," so that the line will read "when the same shall be granted by proper and sufficient deeds."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes appeared to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 47, noes 16.

So the joint resolution was passed.

The SPEAKER. The title will be amended to conform to the text without objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The title was amended so as to read: "Authorizing and directing to accept the title to 4,000 acres of land at or near Anniston, Ala., and 5,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Tullahoma, in the State of Tennessee, for the purpose of establishing maneuver camps, rifle and artillery ranges, etc."

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that House joint resolution 85 be laid on the table, too.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House joint resolution 85 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from committees.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 25, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House.

DEAR SIR: I respectfully resign from membership in the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. I shall be glad if these resignations may become effective on, let us say, the 3d of March, because I have work in one committee that I should like to complete next Monday.

Very truly, yours,

A. C. HART.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THANKS OF CONGRESS TO CAPTAIN AND CREW OF STEAMER "KROONLAND."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution No. 217, to convey the thanks of Congress to the captain of the American steamer Kroonland, of the Red Star Line, and through him to the officers and crew of said steamer for the prompt and heroic service rendered by them in rescuing 89 lives from the burning steamer Volturno in the north Atlantic Ocean.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question in reference to this matter. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] perhaps can answer the question, as he is so well informed on everything touching the history, past as well as current, of Congress. I would like to know if the thanks of Congress have not been very rarely voted, and if it has not been more the custom to acknowledge such services as these by medal or something of that sort?

Mr. MANN. We passed a bill giving the thanks of Congress to the captain of the Carpathia, the vessel that went to the rescue of the Titanic, by name. This resolution avoids naming him, because under the rules of the House, where the thanks of Congress are tendered, the person who is named is entitled to the floor. That is not carried by this resolution.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That was precisely what was in my mind when I asked the question. The captain did a very great service and it was proper for him to be recognized.

Mr. MANN. That might be, but the rules expressly provide that the privileges of the floor are granted where the thanks of Congress are given to a person by name. But that is not done here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress be, and the same are hereby, extended to the captain of the American steamer Kroonland, of the Red Star Line, and through him to the officers and crew of said steamer, for promptly going to the relief of the burning steamer Volturno in the north Atlantic Ocean on the 9th and 10th days of October, 1913, and heroically rescuing 89 people then on board said burning steamer.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to cause to be purchased and presented to Capt. Paul H. Kreibohm, of the said steamer Kroonland, a suitable American-made solid gold dial watch and chain; and said Secretary is further authorized, empowered, and directed to cause to be made at the United States mint 5 suitable gold, 5 silver, and 29 bronze medals, which watch and medals shall be appropriately inscribed to express the high admiration in which Congress holds the services of the captain, officers, and crew of the steamer Kroonland, and be presented to the officers and crew, to whose promptness, vigilance, bravery, and skill was due the rescue of 89 lives.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purchase of said watch and chain and the manufacture of said medals, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out section 3 and insert the following:
"SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purchase of such watch and chain and for the purpose of purchasing the necessary materials for said medals, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House joint resolution No. 217 be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. Reserving the right to object, what is the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is to thank the captain and crew of the steamer Kroonland, of the Red Star Line.

Mr. DIES. Is that the one just read?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] if he can tell us how much this amendment will increase the cost over the original proposition?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the amendment will not increase the cost over the original cost provided in section 3. I desire to say to the gentleman this, namely, that the amendment is merely for the purpose of correcting the language in the original section 3. You will notice in that section the language "and manufacture of said medals" is used. Now, we do not have to pay anything for the manufacture of these medals, for the same is to be done at the United States Mint for us free of cost, but we must pay for the material.

Mr. MANN. That is just the question. Of course it is absurd to say—not what the gentleman has said, but it is absurd to say that we get this work done at the mint free of cost. It costs just as much to have it done at the mint, although it is paid for out of some other appropriation. How much will it cost? The original appropriation was $1,000 to cover the cost of the materials and the manufacture. The committee strikes that out and puts in the same amount, namely, $1,000, to pay for the cost of the material, and they propose that the work, which may cost $1,000 more, for all I know, shall be done over at the mint. The labor at the mint is not inexpensive, by any means. They are to have a dozen of these medals made. How much will that cost?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] yield to me?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We asked for an estimate of the cost of these medals, and Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, furnished the subcommittee an estimate of the cost, and my recollection is that it was, including the watch and everything else, about $900.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is the material. That is stated in the report. You figure it up to about $1,000. But that does not cover the cost of making medals and making the design.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not suppose the cost of the material is very considerable.

Mr. MANN. The cost of the material in a gold medal is quite considerable. At least, it is stated in here, I believe, at $483, or something of that sort.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. About $533 for the medals and $250 for the gold watch and chain. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the words in the original section 3, "and the manufacture of said medals," were inserted through inadvertence. It was understood by the committee that we would not be charged at the mint for the manufacture of these medals, but that we would have to pay for the material. In the first draft of the bill I used the words "in the manufacture of said medals" when I should have used the words "for the purpose of purchasing the necessary material."

Mr. MANN. I did not know that the gentleman made the first draft. The gentleman will pardon me. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] introduced the bill, or, at least, it was in his name. I accept the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

TITLE TO LANDS IN YOSEMITE PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12533) to amend section 1 of an act of Congress approved April 9, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 80), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes."

The title was read.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have a memorandum on my copy of this bill that the report is not ready. That memorandum, I think, was made at about 11 o'clock or half past 11 o'clock this morning. Since that time the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has done me the honor to send me over a copy of the report, which has just come in, and it is so elaborate that I think everybody in the House ought to have it.

It is the first illustrated report, I think, that I have seen for some time. It has some handsome pictures in it, and it ought to be further embellished by a photograph of the distinguished gentleman from California. I know of nothing that is lacking in the pictures in the report except the picture of the gentleman himself. [Laughter.]

Since when, I will ask the gentleman from California, have we started to print pictorial editions of simple committee reports?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's question, the assistant to the Secretary, Mr. Miller, and the Chief Forester, Mr. Graves, appeared before the committee with this report as published, containing the pictures and the map.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows they are not both in the same department. They could not have appeared, both bringing this.

Mr. RAKER. They both came, and they had but one report.

It will be noticed from the report that in the very language of the report and in the statements in it references are made to the accompanying map, showing the yellow on the map, the blue on the map, and the pink on the map, and the territory, together with the location of the exterior boundary lines of the national forest, the lines of the park, the railroads already there, and the proposed railroads, so that the committee could intelligibly grasp the situation and could view just exactly the land desired to be taken and the land desired to be exchanged.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that I was before a committee this morning at a hearing, where I expect there were 50 maps, and they had no chance to produce them. Would the gentleman suggest that a committee, when it makes a report upon such a bill, should spend thousands upon thousands of dollars in printing a lot of maps that nobody would ever look at, probably?

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer that, Mr. Speaker. On page 9 is the land to be exchanged by the Yosemite Lumber Co. to the United States. "1A shows on the attached map in yellow." I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that runs all through the report. The minute the Committee on the Public Lands brought in the report and it was found not to contain that map, somebody would rise and say we were trying to suppress the map.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. That would not be said.

Mr. RAKER. Let me say to the gentleman this: The map has been executed. It has been printed, and has been attached to the report. I hope I shall not be held responsible for its not getting in here earlier.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think we could not intelligently consider the statements of these officials without a map? Is that what I understood the gentleman to say?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I think we could; but I think it adds to the clearness of it.

Mr. MANN. If you think we could, why did you insert the map? If you think we could not, why do you ask us to pass upon it without a chance to look at the map?

Mr. RAKER. It is such a clear presentation that——

Mr. MANN. I will not say the gentleman is responsible, because probably he is not responsible for it; but I think it is gross abuse of the privileges of the House to print a lot of maps and illustrations and photographs in a report of a committee of the House. I do not think the gentleman from California is to blame for this, but if the departments are to blame they are subject to severe criticism. We can not do that sort of thing.

Of course in this case it will delay action on the gentleman's bill, because while the bill was reported February 10, yet, owing to the fact that they had to print a map—a very expensive proposition, because it has to be sent over to Baltimore, I believe, and be engraved, at considerable expense, and it is very slow work—it gets back only this morning, too late for anybody to examine it.

Mr. RAKER. I will state to the gentleman that the map is a part of the report. All the maps that come into the other departments, coming to the various committees, are printed in numbers; and as to many of them, when a committee makes a report you can go and get that map. In this case but one map was furnished by the department to the committee, and when that department in every sentence, to make it clear, so that the Members can see what is being done, refers to a map, and that map is printed as a part of the report, it seems to me that ought not to be an objection.

Let me say, in justification of this matter, that, while I did not show the map, I went to the Speaker, and I went to the majority leader, and I went to the chairman of the Committee on Printing and asked them whether or not I should get unanimous consent to have this done. Then I went to the man in charge of the Clerk's office, and I was told that the committee had the power under the resolution, and if it was an illustration and proper it would be printed with the report. So there can be no question on the matter.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman show these pretty pictures in here—of no value to anybody in connection with the bill—to the Speaker and to Mr. UNDERWOOD and to Mr. BARNHART?

Mr. RAKER. I did not show the pictures; no. I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further: This is an exchange of land in a national park and in a national forest, owned by private individuals, for other land of the Government outside and inside of the park and within the reserve.

Mr. MANN. We do not know whether that is so without looking at the map.

Mr. RAKER. Of course you could not know that without looking at the map. That is true.

Mr. MANN. But we could know if you had got in the report in time. Under the gentleman's contention the Committee on Rivers and Harbors might bring in here on the floor maps that would reach from the floor to the ceiling. That is not an exaggeration.

Mr. RAKER. I know that each Member can get a set of the engineer's reports and find in them all the maps; but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that you would have to consult the original plat to find out where the northeast quarter of the northeast section 3 is.

Mr. MANN. No; I would not have to do that. I could sit down with a pencil and find out in three minutes. Every Member can do that who is familiar with public lands.

Mr. RAKER. I trust the gentleman will permit another statement. The entire delegation appeared before the Secretary of the Interior and before the Secretary of Agriculture, and the departments are in favor of this. I will state to the gentleman that these lumber companies are right up to the line with their mill in operation at the present time, and their railroad.

Mr. MANN. The delay in the passage of this bill has been caused by the gentleman himself.

Mr. RAKER. Why, no, it has not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman presents a report at the last hour, after the House is in session to-day, and the report contains a lot of pictures and maps. The gentleman says you can not intelligently understand this subject without a chance to examine those pictures and maps. I do not know. I think you could understand it, but I have not had a chance to examine the report, and for the moment I am going to take the gentleman's statement; and I am not going to let the bill pass by unanimous consent until I have had a chance to look at these pictures.

Mr. RAKER. I do not think the gentleman ought to put into the RECORD the statement that this is done by my cooperation.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I say it is the gentleman's own fault. The gentleman had no business to print such a report, with a lot of pictures in it.

Mr. RAKER. They are a part of the report, and it would be mutilating it if they were not all printed. The officers appearing before the committee sent these maps and pictures as a part of their presentation. In drawing the report I believed it was my duty to bring everything before the House that would throw light upon the subject, and give the House a chance to see that the exchange is equal.

Mr. NORTON. Could the gentleman have secured any more pictures? Are these all?

Mr. RAKER. I could, and I will state that I would stand on my head if it would assist in the passage of this bill; but I do not think the gentleman wants me to do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. If it is so important to have these pictures, it is certainly important enough that we should have a chance to look at them. I have not had a chance to examine them.

Mr. RAKER. These pictures are pretty——

Mr. MANN. Then I want to take the time to look at them.

Mr. RAKER. Let me say this further word——

Mr. MANN. I will say now that I am not going to let the bill be acted on to-day by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. You are not?

Mr. MANN. I must have a chance to look at the pretty pictures that the gentleman says he inserted, and that he says are so necessary to enable the House to understand the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Let me say this much about the pictures: A good deal is said about the exchange of Government land in the park and in the reserve for other land and the necessity for it. The land desired to be exchanged is now in private ownership. These pictures were presented here for the purpose of showing that the title to the land was not obtained in fee, but the logging was permitted, and to show that there would still be a beautiful growth of trees upon the land, that the scenic aspects of the Yosemite National Park would not be destroyed; and, with that idea in view, to show that there could be reasonable and proper logging and still leave a beautiful tract of ground, the pictures were printed for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there has ever been an exchange of Government land for land that was owned by somebody else where the Government did not get the worst of the bargain?

Mr. RAKER. In this case the exchange is acre for acre, foot for foot. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture have sent parties into the field and have made a cruise and an estimate of the lumber.

Mr. MANN. We will get some worthless land, and we will give some good land in exchange. That is always the case.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this matter is going over, I feel that it ought not to rest with any idea on the part of the House that this is an intricate subject, and I am very sorry, indeed, that these photographs and this map were included in the report. I do not believe it was necessary at all to do it, and I do hope the Members of the House will not get the idea from the character of that report that this is such an intricate subject that it could not be considered upon unanimous-consent day. It is all very easily explained upon the facts themselves.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has almost made the speech I intended to make, and I only desire to say this: I hope the House will not feel in any way prejudiced against this bill by what has been said, partially in good humor and perhaps partially not, because the bill is a meritorious one. It was drawn by the department. The department is anxious to have the exchange of these lands made, and the necessity for it is to preserve the beauty of the Yosemite National Park itself, in which we all take a true pride.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. MANN. If the Secretary of the Interior or the Forester recommended the publication of this map and these pictures, the committee to whom the recommendation was made ought to read them a good lesson. There is absolutely no excuse for wasting and squandering the public money and time by this sort of a report.

Mr. FERRIS. I stepped out for a moment, and I have not heard all the colloquy between the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Illinois. I do not recall that any special authorization was given or request made regarding the pictures. It is true that the department did bring in a lot of pictures, data, and maps, and I have no doubt the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] thought he would bring in substance before the House the same information that the committee had. I myself doubt the propriety of printing so many photographs and maps at large expense when I do not think it is necessary; but that was a question which addressed itself to the discretion of the gentleman from California. He was making the report as he thought best. We have at times heard severe criticism here in the House for not fully reporting the facts. Perhaps the gentleman was seeking to avoid that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel certain that this report is divisible; but if it is, I suggest that we might make peace, and it might satisfy the gentleman from Illinois, if we should withdraw the picture gallery and let the report go through without illustration or illumination.

Mr. MANN. I would not object to the pictures at all, but I want a chance to examine the report; and it is because of the pictures that the report did not get into the House until 10 days after the bill was reported.

Mr. NORTON. I understand that this report does not contain all the pictures that were submitted.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not recall about that. There were a lot of pictures.

Mr. RAKER. It contains all the pictures that were submitted and handed up as a part of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNER. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from California a question about the terms of the bill. As I understand it, there is no determination in the bill as to what lands are to be granted by the United States or are to be received by the United States. Am I correct in that?

Mr. RAKER. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. TOWNER. There is no specification regarding either the lands that are to be granted by the United States in exchange or those lands that are to be received by the United States.

Mr. RAKER. Not unless you turn to the map and find the lands therein designated that the Government will exchange.

Mr. TOWNER. If it is known that lands are to be exchanged, ought not the lands to be specified in the bill? The language of the bill is so general it would allow the Secretaries to grant any land in the Yosemite Park.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not definitely known within a thousand acres what these lands are.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman would not believe it safe for this Congress to say both "We do not know what lands are to be granted" and "We do not know what lands are to be received" and leave that matter entirely to be determined by somebody else.

Mr. RAKER. I have said that the bill allows certain exchanges.

Mr. TOWNER. The bill does not say "certain exchanges."

Mr. RAKER. Well, to make exchanges; and the department makes an examination in the field of the land to be exchanged, of the land owned by the Government and the individuals.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me suggest that it would be better to have this determined by the committee rather than that Congress should pass a bill granting such general unlimited power as is contained in this bill. Let me further suggest, because this bill will have to be considered again by the gentleman, that as I read it there is no authority granted anybody to make a deed of any land or to convey any land. It merely says here that the Secretaries of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture are authorized to receive certain lands in exchange for lands to be granted to them, but there is no authority in this bill to convey any lands to anybody.

Mr. RAKER. This bill has been gone over by the department and its attorneys, and they feel that under the bill there is ample authority and power to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to make these exchanges, and I believe there is.

Mr. TOWNER. Who is to make the deeds? These gentlemen are not given power to do it. There is no authority to anybody in the bill to make deeds for the United States. It appears to me that the bill ought to be entirely reconsidered. The lands ought to be specified that we may know what they are; the amount of them; the lands that are received ought to be specified that we may know what they are and how many acres, and the authority ought to be granted to particular persons to deed the lands as well as to receive them.

Mr. RAKER. This entire matter is contained in the report. It shows all the lands that are desired to be exchanged. If we should come in here with a full report showing in detail the 40-acre tracts, and set out the timber on each tract, and embody all that in the bill, somebody would raise an objection that the bill was too long, and why did not you give the general power just as we have given it in this bill.

Mr. TOWNER. I never heard of an objection of that kind being made on the floor of the House. We object when we do not know what power is granted, when we do not know what part of the property of the United States is to be given away to some one else.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, that statement is wholly unjustifiable. There is no giving away of one single cent. Every stick of timber and every acre of land is to be exchanged for a like quantity of timber or like quantity of land, and of equal value.

Mr. TOWNER. There is no such proposition in the bill. It makes no difference what is stated in the report. The merits of the matter to be considered must be determined by the terms of the bill and not by the report. Certainly the gentleman knows that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced January 28 nominally, but really reported to the House February 20. The report was not available until after the House met to-day. I can not consent to the passage of the bill by unanimous consent where nobody has had a chance to examine it, and therefore I object.

DRAINAGE OF INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13091) to provide for the drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a drainage district is organized in any county in the Five Civilized Tribes of the State of Oklahoma, under the laws of that State, for the purpose of draining the lands within such district, the Secretary of the Interior is directed to pay from the funds or moneys arising from any source under his control or under the control of the United States, and which would be pro rated to such allottee, the assessment for drainage purposes against any Indian allottee or upon the lands of any allottee who is not subject to taxation or whose lands are exempt from taxation or from assessment for taxation under the treaties or agreements with the tribe to which such allottee may belong, or under any act of Congress; and such amount so paid out shall be charged against such allottee's pro rata share of any funds to his credit under the control of the Secretary of the Interior or the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, before paying out such funds, shall designate some person from the drainage bureau of the Government, or some other person with a knowledge of the subject of drainage, to review the schedules of assessment against each tract of land and to review the land assessed to ascertain whether such Indian allottee, or his lands not subject to taxation, have been assessed more than their pro rata share as compared with other lands located in said district similarly situated and deriving like benefits. And if such Indian lands have been assessed justly when compared with other assessments, then, in that event, said funds shall be paid to the proper county in which such drainage district may be organized, or, in the option of the Secretary of the Interior, to the construction company or bondholder shown to be entitled to the funds arising from such assessment: Provided further, That in any event such assessment on any Indian allotment shall not exceed $15 per acre.

A committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "acre," strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the following: "and no such assessment shall be made unless the Indian allottee affected, or his legal guardian, shall consent thereto: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive any allottee of any right which he might otherwise have individually to apply to the courts for the purpose of having his rights adjudicated."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I was going to make a statement. We have in Oklahoma certain lands in the Five Civilized Tribes that were not taxed, and some portions of these lands have a good deal of swamp on them. We have a drainage law that provides for assessment for benefits derived. This act was designed to take the place of several special acts that would arise in the future, acts that were passed before I came to Congress. This is to take the place of all special acts. It does not make an appropriation; it does not authorize the Secretary to take any of the money without appropriation. It merely gives each district organized notice as to the methods by which they can organize and what they can expect.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that that does not authorize the payment of this out of the funds. It looks to me as though it required it—not authorizes it, but directs it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman understands that we have in the Indian appropriation bill, the one recently passed and the one before, a provision that no money shall hereafter be paid out except for certain purposes. It requires an appropriation to pay out for any purpose except those specified purposes.

Mr. MANN. I do not recall that provision, and it would not make any difference whether there was or not. This is a trust fund, and where we direct the Secretary to pay money belonging to private persons in the hands of the Treasury he will pay it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. We have an amendment there proposed by the committee, at the close of the bill, that before assessment can be made the Indian himself must give his consent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I saw that. The department recommended that. I think that is a mere use of idle words.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Oh, I think the department did not recommend it.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the department recommended it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If the gentleman from Illinois will notice the letter from the Interior Department, it recommends a bill bearing another number. There were only about three clauses added, and the subcommittee though it wisest to reintroduce the bill just as it was amended by the subcommittee, and as agreed to by the department. The full committee put on this particular amendment.

Mr. MANN. I understand the department recommended it be made subject to the choice of the Indians, but I do not think that amounts to anything one way or the other. If we are to allow the Indian to determine, then we ought to have nothing to do with it at all. If we are not to allow the Indian to determine, then the responsibility should be upon the Interior Department.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That would be true, if the Government did not have the Indians' money.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman a question. In the first place, what is a "county in the Five Civilized Tribes"?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. A county in the Five Civilized Tribes is a county in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. That is not a county in the Five Civilized Tribes? Where did the designation "county in the Five Civilized Tribes" come from?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will ask the gentleman to point out to what he refers?

Mr. MANN. Why, right in the beginning of the bill—

That whenever a drainage district is organized in any county in the Five Civilized Tribes——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. But it does not say any county in the State of Oklahoma. It says any county of the Five Civilized Tribes. That undoubtedly needs fixing.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I think if the gentleman will understand, whenever there is a county in the Five Civilized Tribes it comprehends wholly the territory of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER. There are 40 counties in Oklahoma that are covered by the Five Civilized Tribes and about 37 or 38 that are not.

Mr. MANN. Are they recognized by the State of Oklahoma now as the Five Civilized Tribe counties by legal designation?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. MANN. Then the first man who objected to this assessment would knock it out, if he was a good lawyer. This bill apparently leaves no discretion on the part of the Secretary of the Interior as to these assessments. It requires him to pay them. It requires that they be confirmed, if they are not assessed any more, proportionately, than the white man's land, although the whole assessment may be, in the main, levied against the Indians and entirely inequitable. There is no discretion whatever left in the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will yield, this says in the event it is found they are assessed like other lands similarly situated and deriving like benefits.

Mr. MANN. It may be practically all Indian lands; and it may be in some cases, and probably will be, all Indian lands with the exception of a few white men's lands. If the Indian lands are assessed the same as the white man's, then the assessment has to go through, although the whole thing might be a rank outrage and a steal. Why not leave discretion in the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the language in the two last lines of the bill:

And no such assessment shall be made unless the Indian allottee affected, or his legal guardian, shall consent thereto.

Mr. MANN. That does not amount to a snap of the fingers.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman understand that if the Indian wants to object, this can not be done, even if the Secretary wants to do it?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. CARTER. The lands are nontaxable.

Mr. MANN. I will be frank with the gentleman. I think that amendment is a bad amendment; it certainly does not protect the Indian. Under that amendment, if some white man is fighting this thing, he can go and get hold of an Indian or a few of them who will object, and you are not able to put it through.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is true; we have had that experience.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of this is to drain the Indian lands fairly.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will remember, whether that amendment be adopted or not, the Indian can refuse to pay if he wants to. Then, the gentleman says that the Secretary has no discretion.

Mr. MANN. He can not refuse to pay after it is confirmed under this.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I have no objection to striking out the word "directed."

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to strike out the word "directed," in line 6, on page 1, and insert the words "authorized in his discretion"?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. I think that would protect.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is satisfactory.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I would like to know if the gentleman has any other objections.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the proper method of payment is to the county and not to the drainage district?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. This is written in obedience to the law of the State. That is paid at the initiative of the organization of the district. Then it is paid to the county. If the bonds have been issued and sold, presuming that the Government may delay, then it will be given to the man who buys the bonds or the construction company. This particular law—and I am well acquainted with it, because I drew it myself, and I have organized a drainage district——

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in that. I have seen laws, I have drawn some myself, where you did not know what they meant after they were enacted. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Doubtless that is true of the gentleman from Illinois, but in this particular case it does not apply.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman may know what he means when he draws a law, but nobody else does.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But the courts have already construed it. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question which he started to propound.

Mr. MANN. What is the drainage bureau of the Government?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The drainage bureau—there is a bureau in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MANN. This is intended to have somebody from the Agricultural Department go there?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. This was purposely written that the Secretary shall designate some man from the drainage bureau or some other person that he has with this in view. I did it as a protection to the Indian.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has reference now to the Agricultural Department, he had better say so, because nobody knows what the drainage bureau of the Government is.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. We felt it was wise to let the Department of the Interior control this thing, because it would be more likely to protect the Indian.

Mr. MANN. Of course the Secretary of the Interior is not authorized to designate some one from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes, I know that; then we have a provision whereby he can designate some one else.

Mr. MANN. I know, but the gentleman is endeavoring to put the Department of Agriculture where it will pass upon these things; if so, let us guard the language in some way——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, I do not want to do that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants it to be guarded and yet not do it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I do not want to put it there, because I think it will be unwise for the Indian.

Mr. MANN. Yet you put in here—

The Secretary of the Interior before paying out such funds shall designate some person from the drainage bureau of the Government, or some other person with a knowledge of the subject of drainage—

And so forth. And when I ask you what you mean by drainage bureau of the Government, you say the Agricultural Department. If that be the case——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I am willing to strike out all reference to the bureau of drainage.

Mr. MANN. How can you say the Secretary of the Interior can designate some one from the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I am willing to strike out that language and let him designate somebody with knowledge of drainage.

Mr. MANN. I think that would be more sensible.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. In the organization of a drainage district it proposed to levy a special assessment of cost——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Under the law each piece of land is assessed according to the benefits derived from that assessment. The result in the district we organized in my district—and I will say this to the gentleman, we have organized a district and we threw out the Indian land and did not assess it. Now, when this assessment is made according to benefits derived, each man having a right to go into court to contest the assessment, when that is done it is levied against the land and runs for a period of 14 years, annual assessments——

Mr. MADDEN. With interest?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. With interest at 6 per cent, or you can pay it all at the time.

Mr. MANN. And issue serial bonds?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. We issue bonds; yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is a considerable quantity of Indian land within the drainage district that is improved as a result of the work, is there no way by means of which the Indian could be compelled to pay his proportion of the cost for this work?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No way in the world.

Mr. MADDEN. This bill proposes to remedy that?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman that this bill is written more in the interest of the Indian than the white man.

Mr. MADDEN. Every piece of land that is benefited by improvement ought to be compelled to pay its proportion of the cost, regardless of whether it is an Indian or not.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will give the gentleman a little illustration of that. There was a piece of land owned by a Mississippi Choctaw. It had the restrictions removed from it and it was sought to be sold, and a United States land agent was sent out by the department at Muskogee and valued that land at $10 an acre two years prior to the organization of this drainage district.

It went without a bid. The gentleman himself wrote to a friend in another State and advised him to buy the land, and he bought it at $10. That land can be sold now at $50 an acre, and the highest assessment that there has been on it was $9.62 an acre, because of the drainage system.

Mr. MADDEN. This proposes to compel the Indian to pay his proportion of the cost?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It does if the Indian will agree to it.

Mr. MADDEN. He ought not to be permitted to agree. If his land is going to be improved, he ought to be put in the same category as anybody else.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. We can not do it under this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. You have got his money.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No. When they organize a district under this bill, they will go to the Indian and ask him if he will agree to the assessment of his land; and if he agrees, they can take it up to the department and let them determine what that assessment may be. If that is done, in most of the cas they can organize a drainage district. But if the Indian objects in the first place, it can not be done; and on the Blue River and on the Arkansas and on the Canadian, and in other places, there is much land belonging to these Indians, and it will have to lie there until the restrictions are removed and somebody buys it, and it will not sell for anything now.

Mr. MADDEN. I supposed the majority of the land in the district so organized was owned by the Indians.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If it was owned by the Indians, even a third of it, you could not organize it now. We passed here special bills for special districts. One of them was over in the district of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] and one over in the Pottawatomie district. This bill is designed so that it can not be taken up by a special act, and there is no attempt to permit the department to pay it without an appropriation. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks it does, I will be willing to change it in any way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I wanted to ask the gentleman why the Indian can not be compelled to pay the taxes? Is it because he is a ward of the Government?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; this is the reason: When the Indians agreed to the allotment of their lands, the Government agreed that from the time of that allotment for 21 years it should be nontaxable. It is written in the deed. Congress passed an act removing certain restrictions upon certain lands and the State proceeded to tax the Indians in the Chickasaw country, and the governor brought suit for them in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Indians won it. And an act of Congress can not tax that land without their consent.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman speaks about an appropriation. Of course, the gentleman expects if this bill becomes a law and the drainage district is organized, and an assessment is levied and the Secretary of the Interior O. K's it, the money must be paid.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. In that case we do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says they can not be paid without appropriations. I think the bill authorizes him to pay it. But whether or not that is so, it is immaterial, because we have to make an appropriation when we reach that stage. We would have no discretion left. The language I propose to change makes it discretionary practically with the commissioner to O. K. the matter.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I am willing to do that.

Mr. MANN. When he has O. K'd it, of course the money has to be paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on page 1, line 6, at the end of the line, I move to strike out the word "directed" and insert in lieu thereof the words "authorized in his discretion."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, by adding at the end of line 6, after the word "directed," the words "authorized in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, on page 2, line 9, I move to strike out the entire line and the first word on line 10.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 9, strike out the entire line and the first word on line 10.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to move to strike out the word "directed," but I did not understand the Clerk to read it that way.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, by adding at the end of line 6, after the word "directed," the words "authorized in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] asks unanimous consent to take the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 11338) from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this morning when the gentleman made the same proposition I objected because I had not had at that time an opportunity to examine the amendments. Since that time the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has been kind enough to present the bill to me, and I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether he would have any objection to having a separate vote in the House on the amendment, in case the conferees agreed to it, which provides for an extension of time to the existing postal commissions? Of course, the Members on this side do not desire to have a separate vote if the conferees agree to strike it out.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to a separate vote on that or any other proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman object to a separate vote on the amendment increasing the salaries of rural carriers?

Mr. MOON. No; I do not object to that.

Mr. ANDERSON. There are some of us on this side who would very much like to vote on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has said that he would not object to a separate vote on any amendment.

Mr. MOON. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, the House can have a vote separately on any proposition, or on all of them together.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if we can have a separate vote on the amendment continuing the postal commissions?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has stated twice that he would not object to having a separate vote on any amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let us see whether anybody wants a separate vote now on any of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and announces the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. MOON, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill with the Senate amendments be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] asks unanimous consent that the Post Office appropriation bill be printed with the Senate amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

USE OF FORT M'HENRY.

Mr. LINTHICUM rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the vote by which the bill H. R. 12806 was passed be rescinded, so that I may introduce an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill H. R. 12806 was passed be rescinded.

Mr. MANN. That is, that all proceedings shall be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that all proceedings by which House bill 12806 was passed be rescinded. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman indicate to the House for what purpose he wishes to have the vote rescinded?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Since the passage of the bill I have received a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, in which he states that there ought to be an exception of the third paragraph as well as the fourth paragraph, inasmuch as we give him a small piece of territory for lighthouse purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12806) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Fort McHenry Military Reservation, in the State of Maryland, to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, making certain provisions in connection therewith, providing access to and from the site of the new immigration station heretofore set aside.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] has an amendment which he wants to offer.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that on page 1, line 7, the following be substituted in lieu of the amendment adopted: Add to that amendment sections 3 and 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 7, page 1, by striking out the word "section" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "sections" and adding the words "and four" after the word "three."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINTHICUM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORBETT TUNNEL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The resolution will be stricken from the docket. The Clerk will report the next one.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13545) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13545) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Sartell Bros. Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon and foot bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the town site of Sartell, Stearns County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the time for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, to be built across the Mississippi River, at the town site of Sartell, Stearns County, Minn., is hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from date of approval hereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "To extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER, MONROE COUNTY, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13365) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Tombigbee River near Old Cotton Gin Port, in Monroe County, Miss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask what is the object of building this bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. To enable people to get across the river. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Is it to be a railroad bridge or a foot bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], if he can give any better answer than I did.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. This bridge is to be constructed by the board of supervisors of Monroe County, Miss., for public use.

Mr. MADDEN. How large is the Tombigbee River at this point?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is one of the most extensive rivers in this country, and the very center of the commerce of the world. It can not be improved unless this bridge is constructed. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Without the improvement of the river the commerce of the country can not be extended?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No, sir.

Mr. COX. What sort of a bridge is this to be?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. We are going to build a bridge which will be an ornament to the river and a credit to the community. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Where is the Tombigbee River, anyway?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The leader of the minority does not want to expose his ignorance by asking that question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; I am always willing to expose it for the purpose of securing information.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Everybody knows where the Tombigbee is.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not. Where is it? It seems to me that at some time in the past I have heard the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] refer to the Tombigbee, but I do not just recall where it is.

Mr. ADAMSON. The way the gentleman from Mississippi described it the gentleman from Illinois thought it was in heaven, did he not? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is probably the reason why I did not locate it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest that the gentleman print a map of it in the RECORD.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The Tombigbee is a very beautiful river.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of Monroe County, Miss., is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near Old Cotton Gin Port, in Monroe County, Miss., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is the end of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] if he is in the Hall; and if he is not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

HORSESHOE BATTLE GROUND, ALABAMA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 9671, as amended by the Committee on the Library, and with a further amendment to strike out all of section 2 down to the words "and provided."

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman talking about the amended bill or the original bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. The amended bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9671) to appropriate $25,000 to erect a suitable monument on the battle grounds at the Horseshoe, on the Tallapoosa River, in the State of Alabama.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman proposes to pass the substitute with an amendment which he now offers?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; so that section 2 will read:

And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of any land in connection with the construction of the proposed monument.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman's amendment to strike out the provision with reference to the 5 acres?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is to strike out the provision that 5 acres shall be deeded to the State of Alabama. The land has already been deeded.

Mr. MANN. I only ask for information, so that the Clerk can see what it is.

Mr. HEFLIN. The land has already been deeded to the Horseshoe Bend Battle Park Commission.

Mr. MANN. Let the motion be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill as it will read if the amendment is agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be erected on the Horse Shoe Battle Ground on the Tallapoosa River, in the State of Alabama, a memorial to the men who fought in that battle under the command of Gen. Andrew Jackson, at a cost not to exceed $5,000, which sum is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of any land in connection with the construction of the proposed monument.

SEC. 3. That the sole charge for the care and maintenance of the said memorial shall be borne by the State of Alabama, or by some other authority designated by the governor of the State of Alabama.

SEC. 4. That the design for said memorial shall be subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the motion ought to be made in such a form that the words in section 2, "and provided further," shall read simply "provided," and that the proviso be added to section 1 instead of standing as a separate section; that section 3 be renumbered section 2, and section 4 renumbered section 3.

Mr. HEFLIN. Section 3 should be renumbered section 2, and section 4 should be renumbered section 3.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk read the bill in the proper form, except that the words "and provided further" should be simply "provided," and the sections should be renumbered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1, add the words, "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of any land in connection with the construction of the proposed monument.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, unless somebody desires to oppose the bill strenuously.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will use the whole of his 20 minutes in telling us about the glories of this battle field, because I probably will not use mine.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the triumph of Washington's army and his election to the office of President constituted the climax and crowning glory of the efforts and sacrifices of the Colonial fathers.

Our fathers had achieved their independence and established constitutional government, but now there were internal problems of a serious nature to engage their attention.

The white man was compelled to subdue the hostile Indian and establish his undisputed authority in every nook and corner of the country before our fathers could enjoy the constitutional guaranty of protection to life, liberty, and property, and the pursuit of happiness. The hostile Indian stood in the way of peace and order and Christian civilization. His terror-spreading war whoop and his barbarous warfare made life a burden to many white communities of the country. Our fathers were patient and long-suffering in their dealing with this type of the red man, and they did all in their power to establish and maintain peaceful relations with him, but all to no avail. Finally, when the patience of the white man would endure no longer, his brave and invincible spirit asserted itself. In order to secure the peace, safety, and happiness of the great white race he resolved to destroy the power of the hostile Indians in America. [Applause.]

In various sections of the country these Indians were organized into a tremendous fighting force, and they constituted a serious menace to the life, liberty, and property of the white man. In the sparsely settled white communities of the country men, women, and children were sacrificed upon the altar of the red man's rage and cruelty. Their property was taken, their homes destroyed, and in some places these barbarian warriors destroyed the last vestige of Christian civilization. Death and destruction lined the warpath of the red man. Women and children, far removed from the sound of the war whoop and the sight of the tomahawk, lived in dread of the red man's approach.

But, Mr. Speaker, like Sir Galahad, who registered a vow that he would go out in search of the Holy Grail and would not return until he found it, a band of United States Regulars and Tennessee troops registered a vow that they would go with Gen. Jackson to the rescue of the frontier settlements and would not return until they had made safe and secure the lives of white men, women, and children there. [Applause.] These brave men knew that hardships and privations awaited them, and they knew of the cunning, the courage, the cruelty, and the treachery of those with whom they were going to battle. But, Mr. Speaker, they had heard the call of the blood—the cries of distressed women and children sounded in their ears. They had heard the story of Fort Mimms, how women and children were slaughtered without pity, and they determined to put an end to that cruel and barbarous warfare and to throw the strong arms of American protection around every white community in the country. [Applause.] They kept the faith; they fulfilled their vow; they fought the decisive battle, broke the fighting power of the Creek Nation, and utterly annihilated the Creek Indian army at the Battle of the Horseshoe. [Applause.] For their heroic service on that occasion Gen. Jackson said "They are entitled to the lasting gratitude of their country." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, for nearly four years prior to that battle, Tecumseh, the chief of the Shawnees, accompanied by his trusted warriors and prophets, went from tribe to tribe preparing the Indians for a general war. He was called the Moses of the red man. In 1812 he stirred the Creek Indians of Alabama with his eloquence and enlisted the Red Eagle, the brilliant half-breed, Weatherford, in his cause. He spoke with the authority of a British agent and officer. He urged the Creeks to drive the Americans out of the Indian country; to use the war club, the scalping knife, and the bow and arrow. He assured them that the King of England was with them and would reward them. One of his prophets told the Creeks that they would be shielded from danger and that none of them would be killed in the battle. How vain and foolish were these assurances. Weatherford, the mighty chief of the Creeks, said to Gen. Jackson shortly after the Battle of the Horseshoe: "Once I could animate my warriors to battle, but I can not animate the dead. My warriors can no longer hear me; their bones are at Tohopeka—the Horseshoe Bend." [Applause.]

The historian Parton, speaking of that battle, said:

The war is over. The power of the Creeks was broken. Half their warriors were dead; the rest were scattered and subdued in spirit. Fort Mimms was indeed avenged. It was not only the power of the Creeks that was broken at the Horseshoe Bend on the 27th of March, 1814, but the power of the red man in North America. At Tohopeka the scepter was finally snatched from the red man's hands; at Tohopeka the long struggle for possession of the western world was ended, and a continent changed owners.

Five hundred and fifty-seven Indians were found dead on the field, and 200 fell in the river or were found dead near the Horseshoe. The Creek Indians fought with weapons furnished them by the British. In all the Creek Nation the mightiest stronghold of the Indian was the Horseshoe Bend.

Across the heel of the Horseshoe the Creek Indians built breastworks of huge logs. They filled in the space between these logs with rocks and dirt. It was the most ingenious and well-constructed breastwork ever built by barbarian warriors. In fact, it was constructed under the supervision of an Englishman, assisted by the half-breed Weatherford. These breastworks were so constructed, Gen. Jackson tells us, that the American soldiers were subjected to double cross fire. There were long rows of portholes reaching from one end of the works to the other. One row of holes was just high enough for Indians to shoot through while resting on their knees. The other row of holes was high enough for Indians to stand and fire through them. Behind these works they remained in perfect safety until Gen. Jackson ordered his men to storm the works. The great general admits that he could not destroy these works with his cannon.

The Indians had used every precaution. They had made every preparation that their ingenuity and cunning could suggest. They had not only constructed almost indestructible breastworks reaching both ways clear across the heel of the Horseshoe to the river; they had done more. Just over the slope of the hill above the Indian town at the toe of the Horseshoe, where their women and children were all congregated, they dug a long trench about 4½ or 5 feet deep. Here they had planned that if they were driven from the breastworks they would retreat toward the toe of the Horseshoe until they reached this long trench reaching around the brow of the hill. This trench was not up on top of the hill, where it could be seen by the American soldiers pursuing the Indians, but it was so constructed and at such a place that the Indians retreating could leap into it and be almost entirely out of danger while they slaughtered the pursuing Americans, who would be within a few feet of the trench before they knew that such a death trap awaited them. This was not all that they did. They secured every boat or bateau for miles up and down the Tallapoosa River and had them fastened to the trees at the water's edge down by the Indian town at the toe of the Horseshoe. They did not believe that they would be defeated in the battle at the Horseshoe; but it was their plan that if driven from the breastworks to flee to the trenches, and if routed there to flee to the river, unloose the boats, and take their women and children and escape down the Tallapoosa River.

Here the brave Creek warriors made their final stand, and with perfect satisfaction and confidence they staked their all upon that battle. Their plans were all thwarted, their hopes shattered, and their army destroyed. [Applause.] When the smoke of battle cleared away Horseshoe Bend was covered with dead and dying Indians. Nearly 1,000 of them perished in that terrible conflict. Here their prophets appealed in vain against the intrepid and invincible warriors of the paleface. [Applause.]

Sam Houston, the hero of Texas, was wounded in that battle; Lieut. Somerville and Lieut. Moulton and 52 privates gave their lives to the American cause at the Horseshoe.

Maj. Lemuel P. Montgomery, of Tennessee, was killed in that terrible battle. His ancestors before him had rendered heroic service to their country. One of them, Gen. Hugh Montgomery, fell at the storming of Quebec, and Maj. Montgomery's grandfather, Hugh Montgomery, of North Carolina, organized, equipped, and supported at his own expense a company which he commanded in the War of the Revolution. [Applause.] Maj. Montgomery's father moved from Virginia to east Tennessee. Here the son, Lemuel P., was educated at Washington College, read law with Judge Trimble, of Knoxville, and admitted to practice. He was a brilliant lawyer; and Pickett, in his history, tells us that he was a formidable rival of the able attorney, Felix Grundy. Here while a very young man he was appointed first major of the Thirty-ninth Regiment by President Madison; and, Mr. Speaker, he led that regiment into the very heart of the Indian country. He was first to mount the breastworks at the Horseshoe Bend, and while waving his sword was killed by an Indian warrior. Pickett tells us that when the battle was over Gen. Jackson stood over the body of Maj. Montgomery and exclaimed, "I have lost the flower of my army." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, 100 years have come and gone since the prophets and warriors of the Creek Indians fell at the Battle of the Horseshoe. How appropriate and fitting for the Government of the United States to erect on the one hundredth anniversary of that bloody conflict a monument to the memory of the men who fought that decisive battle. This act will contribute toward keeping alive the story of the valor and heroism of the men who in the very flower and strength of their young manhood gave their lives for their country. [Applause.] Surely the heroic men who endured so much and died so bravely that we might enjoy the blessings and benefits of civil liberty are entitled to this recognition at the hands of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the D. A. R.'s have placed markers along the old Jackson Trail, leading up to the Horseshoe Bend. The citizens of Tallapoosa County, aided by Mrs. Nora E. Miller, a noble, public-spirited woman of the same county, have constructed a splendid highway leading out from Dadeville, the county seat, to the Horseshoe Bend; and this same Mrs. Miller, who owns the land there, has deeded five acres to be used for a park in which the monument here provided for is to be erected.

The Legislature of Alabama has appropriated $2,500 to be used in appropriately celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the great battle at the Horseshoe and for putting the park in order, and the keeping and caring for the monument to be erected by the Government of the United States.

Nearly every battle field of national significance and historic importance has been appropriately marked by the Government of the United States, but no monument of marble or granite shaft graces the battle ground of the Horseshoe. These men who endured the hardships and privations of wilderness warfare were the pioneers and torchbearers of civil and religious liberty, and here on the foundations that they builded now stands and flourishes the greatest Government on the globe. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, they have bequeathed to us the priceless heritage of civil and religious liberty, and we owe it to the memory of these brave men to perpetuate their deeds of valor and to keep alive in the minds and hearts of the living their heroic service to their country. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the desire to live on after death is universal. This feeling is limited to no clime and confined to no country. The man who does not desire to live on in the memory of some one has either made an utter failure of life or has lived in such disregard for the laws of God and man that he is ashamed to be remembered. [Applause.]

For a hundred years the wimpling waves of the Tallapoosa River have echoed and reechoed the message from our brave dead at the Horseshoe—"Remember me, remember me," and the kindly winds of heaven whispering in every bower about that beautiful bend have answered, "Your glory shall not be forgot." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, 100 years have passed since their valor and heroism hallowed the battle ground of the Horseshoe. One hundred years have gone since they wrote with their blood the white man's charter of peace and safety in the wilderness of the red man. [Applause.]

But some tell us that we have monuments here in the Capital City and monuments in other large cities of the Union, and ask: Why go to the trouble and expense of building monuments in the remote and obscure places of the country, out in the rural districts away from the railroad? Let me say to them that, far from the bustle and stir of the city, away in the wilds of the wilderness, the hardy pioneers first carried the torch of liberty. [Applause.] Here amongst wild beasts and savages they pitched their tents and consecrated their all to their country. In these remote places the heroes of the early days wrought mightily for the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, no kodak or moving-picture contrivance accompanied these men to bring into panoramic review their heroic deeds and daring exploits. Through dreary days and sleepless nights, far back in the pathless wood, they suffered and fought and died for their country. [Applause.] These men who penetrated the wilderness strongholds of the red man and destroyed the fighting power of the hostile Creeks, and gave peace and safety to every white community in the country, deserve this tardy recognition at the hands of the Government in whose cause they bravely fought and died. [Applause.]

That Government is revered most and loved best that shows by outward sign and physical evidence its appreciation of those who have suffered and died in its cause.

England has realized this great truth, and to-day she has a royal commission, whose duty it is to go over the country and find if there are any places of historic importance not appropriately marked by the Government. This royal commission is going into the remote places of the country, showing to the people everywhere that heroic service rendered to England shall be publicly and permanently acknowledged and the deeds of the heroes perpetuated. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Woodmen of the World is a noble and popular order. When one of its members passes from this life he knows that he will be appropriately buried and his grave suitably marked by that order. Go to the country churchyard, far from the din of the populous city, and you will find above the resting place of every deceased Woodman an appropriate monument to his memory. [Applause.]

After the battle at Horseshoe Bend, Gen. Jackson, addressing his soldiers, said:

You have entitled yourselves to the gratitude of your country. The expedition from which you have just returned has by your good conduct been rendered prosperous beyond any example in the history of our warfare. The fiends of the Tallapoosa will no longer murder our women and children or disturb the quiet of our borders. Their midnight flambeaux will no more illumine their council houses or shine upon the victim of their infernal orgies. In their places a new generation will rise. The weapons of warfare will be exchanged for the utensils of husbandry, and the wilderness, which now withers in sterility and mourns the desolation which overspreads her, will blossom as the rose and become the nursery of arts.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, on the 27th of this month the people of east Alabama and west Georgia will assemble at the Horseshoe Bend to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of the Horseshoe. What changes have been wrought since the sound of the last gun died away on that battle field 100 years ago! Here once stood a vast and unbroken forest made hideous by the war whoop, the scalping knife, and the tomahawk of the red man. It is now the scene of the white man's industry and enterprise. [Applause.] Where the terror-spreading war whoop was heard we hear the music of the woodman's ax, of falling trees, and the song of the sawmill. Where he brandished his death-dealing tomahawk the white man wields his scythe in the fields of waving grain. [Applause.] Where he chased the swift-footed wild deer cotton fields respond in luxuriant growth to the pulse beats of the happy plowman. [Applause.] Where his warpath led railroad trains are moving in the hum of perpetual transportation, and where his wigwam stood are now seen the homes of a happy and prosperous people. [Applause.] Where his horrid war councils were held we now have schoolhouses and churches that adorn and bless the country. [Applause.] Where he pounded his corn in the hollow of the rocks of the Tallapoosa River there are gristmills that grind the people's grain; and that historic old river that once floated his rude dugout and bateau now turns the wheels of an industry that is weaving cotton into cloth and sending electricity to light up the streets, business houses, and homes of the capital city of the State. [Applause.]

Here in the county where that battle was fought J. A. Wade won the Carnegie prize for having produced the finest grade of short-staple cotton in the United States, and here Walter Dunson, a 15-year-old boy, has just won the American prize for having produced the greatest yield of corn on 1 acre of ground. [Applause.]

Surely the prophecy of Gen. Jackson has come true, "the country there blossoms as a rose," and there lives on that soil an industrious, proud, and patriotic people contributing to the strength and glory of the Republic. [Loud applause.]

I desire to print in this connection some historical references and Gen. Jackson's report on the Battle of the Horseshoe.

George Bancroft's eulogy, June 27, 1845, in Monument to Gen. Andrew Jackson, says:

In six short months of vehement action the most terrible Indian war in our annals was brought to a close; the prophets were silenced; the consecrated region of the Creek Nation reduced. Through scenes of blood the avenging hero sought only the path to peace. Thus Alabama, a part of Mississippi, a part of his own Tennessee, and the highway to the Floridas were his gifts to the Union. These were his trophies.

Halbert and Ball, the Creek War of 1813 and 1814, the fullest general work on the subject, says:

This battle may well be placed alongside of that destruction that came upon the Pequods in New England. Of that Martyn says: "It was not a battle; it was a massacre." The well-informed reader will note more than one point of similarity between the old Pequod War and the Creek War. Perhaps one was as needful as the other. The one blotted out a small tribe; the other subdued a great people.

McKenney and Hall, in Indian Tribes of North America, say:

The whole fight was of the most desperate character. The waters of the Tallapoosa were red with blood. * * * Of 900 warriors led into that sanguinary fight by Menawa, only 70 survived, and 1 only, who fled at the first discharge of cannon, escaped unwounded.

Fiske, History of the United States for Schools, says:

Andrew Jackson, with his Tennessee troops and a few United States Regulars, made a bloody campaign, ending with the great battle of Tallapoosa (Horseshoe Bend), in March, 1814, which finally broke the Indians' power in the Southwest.

John Frost, Indian Battles, Activities, and Adventures, says:

This decisive victory put an end to the Creek War. After this battle the miserable remnant of the hostile tribe submitted.

H. M. Brackenridge, History of the Late War, says:

This most decisive victory put an end to the war with the Creeks and broke the spirit and power of these misguided men completely. The fatal battle of the Horseshoe Bend may be said to have "cut up the war by the roots."

[Report March 31, 1814, Maj. Gen. Andrew Jackson to Gov. Willis Blount, of Tennessee.]

SIR: This bend resembles in its curvature that of a horseshoe and is hence called by that name by the whites. Nature furnishes few situations so eligible for defense, and barbarians have never rendered one more secure by art. Across the neck of the bend which leads into it from the north they had erected a breastworks of the greatest compactness and strength from 5 to 8 feet high and prepared with double portholes very artfully arranged. The figure of this wall manifested no less skill in the projection of it than its construction; an army could not approach it without being exposed to a double and cross fire from the enemy, who lay in perfect safety behind it. The area of this peninsula, thus bounded by the breastwork, includes, I conjecture, 80 or 100 acres.

In this bend the warriors from Oakfuska, Oakehagu, New Youka, Hillabees, the Fish Pond, and Eufaula towns, apprised of their approach, had collected their strength. Finding that this force, notwithstanding the determination they displayed, was wholly insufficient to dislodge the enemy, and that Gen. Coffee had secured the opposite banks of the river, I now determined upon taking possession of their works by storm. Never were men more disposed for such an undertaking than those by whom it was to be effected. They had entreated to be led to the charge with the most pressing importunity, and received the order which was now given with the strongest demonstrations of joy.

Having maintained for a few minutes a very obstinate contest, musket to musket through the portholes, in which many of the enemy's balls were welded to the bayonets of our muskets, our troops succeeded in gaining possession of the opposite side of the works. The event could no longer be doubtful. The enemy, although many of them fought to the last with that kind of bravery which desperation inspires, were at length entirely routed and cut to pieces. The whole margin of the river which surrounds the peninsula was strewed with the slain. Five hundred and fifty-seven were found. Both officers and men who had the best opportunities of judging believe the loss of the enemy in killed not to fall short of 800; and if their number is as great as it is represented to have been by the prisoners, and as it is believed to have been by Col. Carrol and others, who had a fair view of them as they advanced to the breastworks, their loss must even have been more considerable, as it is quite certain that not more than 20 could have escaped.

ANDREW JACKSON, Major General.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the report upon this bill did not contain any information, but after listening to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] I am inclined to think there will be no great opposition to its passage. Every State has contributed great men, great deeds, great events to the history of our country. Alabama may well be proud of her history, of her men and her women. But peace hath its victory as well as war, and among all the distinguished native sons of Alabama, among all the sons who have moved into Alabama and become her own sons, there is no one in the history of the State who has achieved the distinction or the influence in our National Government or who has reflected as much honor and glory upon that State as our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], to whom I now yield. [Loud Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] most sincerely for the kindly words he has said in reference to myself. After the eloquent remarks of my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] I do not think that anything further need be said to secure the passage of this bill. But, thanking my friend from Illinois for the opportunity, I desire to say to the House that although the soil of Alabama at various times since the white man placed foot on the continent of North America has been occupied by five nations, and although it has been the scene of many battles, many conflicts in times of war and in times of peace, until this good hour the Government of the United States has never recognized the State of Alabama or an Alabamian by the erection of a monument on its soil. To-day my colleague has asked the House to make a small appropriation to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of an event that opened up the entire southeastern portion of this country to white civilization, that established white supremacy to remain forever; but it not only commemorates a battle, but it seeks to commemorate the memory of one of America's greatest generals, greatest statesmen, and greatest men. [Applause.] When we think of Jackson the soldier we think of the Battle of New Orleans, but the Battle of New Orleans was only a half hour's engagement. It was a great conflict, but Jackson was made in the Creek wars. It was the long marches, the great deprivations that he suffered, the courage and patriotism in holding the small band of patriotic soldiers together in the wilderness, without supplies, without provisions, and without relief, to blaze the way for the great civilization of this Southland of ours.

The Battle of Horseshoe Bend was the culmination of that campaign, and when the guns ceased and the smoke of the powder cleared away on that battle field, Jackson, the great soldier, was born. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to use any more of his time?

Mr. MANN. Not unless some other gentlemen desire time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on the Library from further consideration of the bill H. R. 9671, and pass the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had voted in favor thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. That is on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is on the passage of the bill. Those in favor will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 7, answered "present" 8, not voting 160, as follows:

On and after January 1, 1915, no gill net of less than 4 inches mesh, extension measure, as actually used in fishing, shall be set for fish of species other than whitefish and lake trout in these treaty waters.

No gill net shall be set within one-fourth of a mile of any pound net.

61. CLOSE SEASON IN LAKE OF THE WOODS AND RAINY LAKE.

From October 16 to November 30 in each year, both days inclusive, no net shall be drawn, set, placed, or maintained for commercial fishing in Lake of the Woods or in Rainy Lake.

STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA AND ADJACENT WATERS.

The following regulations (62 to 66, inclusive) shall apply to the Strait of Juan de Fuca, those parts of Washington Sound, the Strait of Georgia, and Puget Sound lying between the parallels of 48° 10′ and 49° 20′ north latitude:

62. CLOSE SEASON FOR SALMON.

From August 25 to September 15 in each year, both days inclusive, no salmon or steelhead shall be fished for, killed, or captured for commercial purposes in these treaty waters: Provided, however, That in the waters to the westward of a line drawn southward from Gonzales Point to the shore of the State of Washington silver salmon, or coho salmon, may be fished for, killed, or captured from September 1 to September 15 in each year, both days inclusive.

63. WEEKLY CLOSE SEASON FOR SALMON AND STEELHEAD.

From 6 o'clock Saturday morning to 6 o'clock on the Monday morning next succeeding no salmon or steelhead shall be fished for, killed, or captured in these treaty waters.

It is, however, provided that in the waters to the westward of a line drawn southward from Gonzales Point to the shore of the State of Washington the weekly close season shall begin 12 hours earlier and shall end 12 hours earlier.

64. CONSTRUCTION OF POUND NETS.

All pound nets or other stationary appliances for the capture of salmon or steelhead shall be so constructed that no fish whatever shall be taken during the weekly close season. The erection or addition to the pound net of a jigger is prohibited.

65. LOCATION OF POUND NETS.

All pound nets shall be limited to a length of 2,500 feet, with an end passageway of at least 600 feet between one pound net and the next in a linear series, such distance being measured in continuation of the line of direction of the leader of such net, and a lateral passageway of at least 2,400 feet between one pound net and the next.

On and after January 1, 1915, the mesh in pound nets shall be 4 inches in extension in the leader and not less than 3 inches in other parts of the net.

66. NETS OTHER THAN POUND NETS.

No purse net shall be used within 3 miles of the mouth of any river and no seine within 1 mile of the mouth of any river in these treaty waters.

No gill net of more than 900 feet in length or of a greater depth than 60 meshes shall be used in these treaty waters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to carry into effect the provisions of a treaty between this country and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, which was concluded in Washington on the 11th day of April, 1908, and ratified by the Senate on the 17th day of the same month.

The treaty provided that there should be an International Fisheries Commission, which should consider, prepare, and report, within six months from the time it was appointed, a uniform system of regulations for the protection and preservation of fishes in the international waters between the two countries. On May 29, 1909, the International Fisheries Commission submitted its report, embodying a system of regulations, and on February 2, 1910, that report was transmitted to the Congress of the United States and to the Parliament of Canada. The Parliament of Canada immediately adopted the regulations agreed upon by the commission without any change.

We have done nothing in reference to carrying these regulations into law up to this time. The third article of the treaty provided that each Government should carry these regulations into law as soon as possible. It has been over five years since the regulations were adopted. It is nearly four years since the Canadian Parliament enacted a law adopting those regulations for the Canadian side, and during all this time our Government, our Congress, has taken no action in the matter. The Canadian Government has gotten tired of waiting upon us and has served notice upon our State Department that unless we take action, binding ourselves by these regulations, they will take action relieving themselves from being bound further by them; and unless we do take action we shall lose all the benefits arising from that treaty, which was entered into for the protection of these fisheries, and we shall lose all control of the fisheries of these international waters. I want to read to the House a letter——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I see in this bill—

And provided further, That immediately after the passage of this act the United States International Fisheries Commissioner shall begin inquiries with a view to determining what modifications in the regulations herein provided for are required by existing conditions—

And so forth. Now this is an immature bill. Why not call upon the International Fisheries Commission for their opinion and then prepare a perfect bill? This bill will wipe out, if it is carried into effect, all the small fisheries on the south shore of Lake Erie. I am opposed to it on that ground.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. It is not an immature bill. The scedule is not immature. It is somewhat obsolete now. This schedule was adopted over five years ago, and there have been changes in conditions since that time. The schedule when it was adopted was considered a very satisfactory schedule, but now some of its provisions are obsolete.

It does not go into effect, according to the terms of this bill, until the 1st day of January, 1915. Immediately upon the passage of this bill the commissioner on the part of this country and the commissioner on the part of Canada are to get together and hear the complaints of those who are not satisfied with this schedule and report any changes that they think ought to be made in the schedule to the first day of the next session of Congress, the idea being that between the first Monday in December, when Congress convenes, and the 1st day of January, if there are any radical changes that affect the fishermen of this country we can put them into effect before the provisions of this schedule become effective.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Why not get the opinion of this international commission before you prepare a perfect bill to carry out the treaty?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They prepared a perfect bill. The Canadian Parliament, in pursuance of that treaty and carrying out the treaty and the contract they had made with this country, enacted a law adopting these regulations, while we have neglected to carry out the contract and treaty that we made.

Now, it is a question whether we will do it or whether we will let this treaty lapse and be forced to go through all the negotiations of making another treaty before the fish in these waters can be protected.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes; but you say here—

Such modifications as the International Fisheries Commission shall decide to be proper and necessary.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If they find out that there ought to be modifications in the schedule, then they will recommend them, and we will pass a law making those modifications; but if they ascertain that there should be no changes, then this schedule and this bill will stand unamended.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Certain important fishing industries, particularly the sardine industry on the St. Croix River and Passamaquoddy Bay, in Maine, question whether or not this measure makes certain the location of the recognized spawning grounds of the herring. The Bureau of Fisheries have been asked whether it does or not, and they have replied to my colleague [Mr. PETERS] that they want more time before they can reply whether it does make sufficiently certain the recognized spawning grounds. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if it is important that this bill be acted upon to-day, or whether time may not be granted to allow the Bureau of Fisheries to furnish this information?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman will see that the bill does not undertake to specify what is the spawning ground, but simply protects what are generally recognized as spawning grounds.

As to the importance of the bill being enacted to-day, I want to read a letter which I have received from the President:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 24, 1914.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: I trust that no effort may be spared to secure the immediate passage of the bill now pending in the House to give effect to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of April 11, 1908, for the preservation of the food fishes in the waters contiguous to the United States and Canada. In reality, I believe there are two bills pending in the House, namely, H. R. 13005, introduced by yourself on the 5th instant, and H. R. 13300, introduced by Mr. WOODRUFF on the 12th instant; but I am advised that these bills are the same, except that H. R. 13300 exempts Saginaw Bay from the operations of the present international regulations under the treaty—an exemption to which the commissioners on both sides have agreed.

The commissioner on the part of the United States is Dr. Hugh M. Smith, our Commissioner of Fisheries. He stands ready to furnish to you or to your committee any information which may be desired. I may say, however, that the pending bills embody only what has been agreed on between the two Governments, and that there does not appear now to exist any objection on either side to their enactment. Similar legislation was adopted and was put into effect on the part of Canada three years ago, and we are informed that unless this Government shall be in a position on the 1st of March reciprocally to perform its obligations the object of the treaty, which is of manifest importance to the permanent interests of both countries, will be defeated.

Sincerely, yours.

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. GUERNSEY. If it is found on trial that the provisions of the bill do not sufficiently protect the fishing interests of the United States, particularly as to specifying the spawning grounds definitely, are there provisions in the bill that will make it possible for changes to be made in the future?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The bill makes provision for that very thing. It directs the commission, composed of Dr. Prince, on the part of Canada, and of Dr. Hugh Smith, on the part of the United States, to proceed, immediately upon the passage of the bill, to hear complaints and to make such modifications as those complaints suggest to them.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Over how long a period does that extend?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That extends up to the first day of the next session of Congress, the first Monday in December, when they are to report to Congress any changes that they desire made in this schedule.

Mr. GUERNSEY. And the bill does not go into effect until then?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The bill does not go into effect until the first day of next January.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Suppose they do not make their report by that time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This bill requires them to make their report on the first day of the next session of Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. After they have made that report, the changes they recommend will not be made until Congress passes another bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They will not be effective until Congress takes further action.

Mr. CRAMTON. And, further, if that act is not passed before the 1st of January, then the present proposed provision will go into effect?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the changes are material, it will be an emergency measure and Congress will put it through.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are in this proposal certain features which seem to us material, which are admitted by the authorities to be defective. It is admitted that they do not reach the situation. Some of these are so material that men in my district say they will be put out of business if they go into effect. Are we not taking a long chance that these men will make certain findings, and then, after they have made them, that the administration will look upon it with such favor that they will correct it in the busy month of December next year?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We are not taking as long a chance as we would if we run the risk of having the treaty abrogated and leaving no protection to the food fishes in international waters. And, besides, the regulations are to be enforced by our officers, and if they are to be changed, even if the law has not passed, they will hardly be enforced.

Mr. CRAMTON. Have we not enough time to consider the thing and have it put right, rather than to undertake to pass defective legislation?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think it is defective.

Mr. CRAMTON. Your authority, Dr. Smith, has stated that in regard to the point I have in mind in the hearings the treaty does not reach that point. It is in the hearings before your committee.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Those are the points that they are going to consider.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to have the legislation come after the report of the commission.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The danger is in having Canada repeal her law putting the regulations into effect, and Great Britain might abrogate the treaty and turn these fishes absolutely over to the destruction of parties who choose to catch and market them without any regulation for their preservation. I do not think you run any risk of danger in trusting the commission on these international fisheries.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Is it not a fact that the reason that the Canadian Parliament was so prompt in its action was because the treaty was in the interest of the Canadian fishermen?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I can not answer that question. I only know that the Canadian people kept the contract with this Government.

Mr. MADDEN. And did not they get the best of the contract?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; they did not get the best of the contract; but whether they did or not, they were honest and kept it, and whether we got the worst of it or not, we should have been honest enough to keep it.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Is it not a fact that it will be necessary for the United States commissioner and the Canadian commissioner to agree upon the changes before Congress can act?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This commission is composed of two commissioners.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. If the commission fails to agree, what will be the result?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the people of this country are injured by the regulations, we can abrogate the treaty upon one year's notice. That is in the treaty. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] that he is mistaken about the necessity for immediate action. He is mistaken also in saying that the United States has by delay in any way violated its obligations under the treaty. There has been no violation on either side. It is true, as set forth on page 2 of the report, that the Governments of the United States and Great Britain agreed to put in operation and in force by legislative and executive action, with as little delay as possible, the treaty, and so forth. Well, we have done that; we have considered this matter several times, both in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. When has ever this matter been considered in the House?

Mr. STEENERSON. I believe it has.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; it never has been considered in the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. It has been considered in Congress. I know I intended to make a fight on it in the House, because it was not satisfactory to my constituents. Now, as to there being great urgency, I want to say that the regulations are not to be put into effect until nine months from now. I appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs in opposition to the bill being reported out at that time, for the reason that I had submitted it to my constituents with a view to finding out what their objections were, if any there be. I have not had time to get that information. I will state that the Lake of the Woods in my district is international waters, also Rainy Lake and Rainy Lake River. There are about 100 families engaged in the fishing industry on those waters.

One of the main food fishes in the past caught in the Lake of the Woods has been sturgeon. It is a very valuable fish and of slow growth. The authorities say that a large full-grown sturgeon is about 100 years old. It is true that the scientists who investigated the conditions state that the supply of sturgeon has decreased materially in late years. I have no doubt that is true, but fishermen say that by reason of that fact the other food fishes of the lake have increased.

If you have too many sturgeon, they eat up all of the spawn of the whitefish and the pike, and to have too many would be to decimate the other fishes in those lakes, and that is not desirable. They are like the trusts. They eat up the small and thrive themselves. We have to limit them, and this provides for a close season for sturgeon for 5 years, and presumably it will be closed for 100 years, until they get a new generation of sturgeon. I do not know whether the people in my district engaged in fishing in these international waters are willing to agree to that or not, but I request the committee to postpone consideration until I can be advised. It is claimed we have to suspend the rules and pass this bill immediately.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs and made the statement which he has made here, as to the destructiveness of the sturgeon, and I want to ask him a question. Did not Dr. Smith, the Commissioner of Fisheries for the United States, say to the gentleman:

> The most valuable fish in any of these international waters is the sturgeon, and they were always very abundant until the fishermen went after them without regard to the preservation of the supply.
> It may be that they will indorse the view that the sturgeon is a very destructive fish, but it has been regarded as very harmless.
>
> Mr. STEENERSON. Harmless, except for consuming the spawn of other fishes.
> Dr. SMITH. But all fishes consume the spawn of other fish, and the pike, which you mention as being injured by the sturgeon, is one of the most destructive of all fishes.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is true, but the sturgeon is equipped with a pump under its head, and it goes around and sucks up all of the spawn on the spawning beds of the white fish and the pike, and they consume millions of the eggs of those fish in a very short time, and it is destructive to the other fish to have too many sturgeon. They are the monopolists of these internatioual waters.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. My time is so limited that I can not.

The other fish, principally the whitefish and the pike, are the principal food fishes in those waters. The sturgeon has never constituted but a minor part of the catch, although it is true that is a very valuable fish. The sturgeon caviar is worth up to $2 per pound. It seems to me it would be just as well to simply limit the size of sturgeon that could be caught to, say, 4 or 5 feet in length. They are caught in pound nets, together with thousands of other varieties, and the large ones might as well be utilized. However, I want to wait until I can hear from the fishermen whose interests are vitally affected. We have a perfect right to refuse to carry out this treaty if we see fit. That is not a violation of any obligation on our part any more than it is a violation of duty for Canada to refuse to carry out the reciprocity treaty by appropriate legislation. It is now nearly three years since we passed the act to carry out that treaty, and Canada has done nothing. If we choose to let this matter rest for a month or a year or longer, we have a perfect right to do so, and the gentleman from Virginia has no right to charge Congress with bad faith on that account.

The treaty-making power can not absolutely bind the legislative power of Congress in that manner. It is proper for the Executive to recommend and urge legislation of this kind upon us, and such recommendation is entitled to weight and consideration, but he can not order us to take action, as the gentleman from Virginia seems to think. Congress has not yet fallen so low as to take orders from the Executive. We, as a coordinate branch of the Government, must exercise our own judgment, for we are responsible to the people for the laws we enact. We can not go before our constituents and excuse our action by saying, "Yes; we voted for this law, but we were ordered to do so by the Executive."

If we think the proposed law is wrong, we must vote against it. The responsibility is ours and not the President's. He discharges his full duty under the Constitution and under the treaty when he recommends action. It may be that this bill ought to be enacted into law. The preservation of the food fishes of our boundary waters is of very great importance. It is quite probable that I shall vote for the passage of this bill when it comes up in regular order, when it can be properly and fairly considered. I am opposed to the suspension of the rules, because I am not fully advised as to how this measure, if enacted, may affect the people of my district. I am as desirous as anyone can be that the United States shall carry out its treaty obligations and that the food supply shall be conserved, but I believe there is no necessity whatever to rush this bill through this way without due consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, in looking over this bill I find that section 3 creates a division of international fisheries. To be perfectly frank in respect to the bill, I have not had an opportunity to give it any very accurate study, but it is an important bill. I do not think it ought to be passed under suspension of the rules. This bill carries, to start with, $30,000. That is a mere beginning. That is a mere start. The bill can not be amended under suspension of the rules. Section 3 provides:

> SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, is hereby charged with the administration of the aforesaid regulations and the other provisions of this act; and there shall be established in the Bureau of Fisheries a division of international fisheries, and there shall be employed therein one deputy international fisheries commissioner, and the necessary wardens, deputy wardens, and inspectors, all of whom shall have the power to seize without warrant fishing gear, boats, or other apparatus that is being illegally used, and to arrest without warrant any person who may be violating the provisions of this act.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would say that our Fish Commissioner said that the small tax imposed would pay all of the expense.

Mr. SISSON. But I do not want all of the tax that may be obtained from any source to be used by those people who are administering the law. This provision is extremely sweeping, and under the provisions of this section 3, without any sort of limitations upon it, without any limitation as to the number of employees that might be employed, it is utterly impossible for Congress to control the expenditure when it is passed in these general terms. They start out with $30,000. When you take into consideration the vast number of waters embraced within the terms of this bill, the Great Lakes, and all the other fisheries, and a desire to police these waters for the purpose of enforcing the regulations, it will be seen that the cost will amount to a vast sum of money. This creates a bureau within the Bureau of Fisheries. This bill, with all of its importance, ought not to be taken up and passed under suspension of the rules. It affects every man engaged in the business of fishing on the Great Lakes and on the neutral waters between this country and England. We ought not to pass a bill of this magnitude with only 20 minutes of debate on a side. The membership of the House has not had opportunity to give this proper consideration. After you get this bureau established, it then becomes a spokesman for itself, and you will find that no bureau has ever been created in this Government which does not have people there with briefs for the purpose of showing the good it is doing.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. How many people does the gentleman suppose it would take for this bureau to enforce regulation 5 of the bill, on page 7:

No person shall place or pass, or allow to pass, into treaty waters any substance offensive to fishes, injurious to fish life, or destructive to fish fry or to the food of fishes or of fish fry, unless permitted so to do under any law passed by the legislative authority having jurisdiction.

No person shall deposit dead fish, fish offal, or gurry in treaty waters, or on ice formed thereon, except in gurry grounds established by the duly constituted authorities.

Mr. SISSON. I decline to yield further.

Mr. STEENERSON. That would put out of business the sawmills.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's question I only ask the membership of the House to consider this very carefully. It is a silly proposition to presume that $30,000 will be all the amount necessary to enforce the provisions under the general terms of this bill. Their power is unlimited. They employ all the people necessary to enforce the law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add anything to what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has already said. Let no man be deceived when he votes for this bill as to what he is voting for. Let him vote for it with the distinct understanding that he is establishing within the Bureau of Fisheries an international bureau of fisheries, the cost of which in the future no man can undertake to fathom. I recollect in the closing days of the last session of Congress we passed the Agricultural bill. There was in the bill what was known as the bird law, and the men in favor of the bill at that time said that $10,000 would be plenty to administer it; yet the estimate of the Agriculture Department this year is that they want $90,000 to enforce that law. I am glad to see that the Committee on Agriculture has given them only $50,000 to administer the law. This bill carries only $30,000.

The Bureau of Fisheries does not care anything about the amount carried at this time. It is not caring for this appropriation of $30,000. What they want is the law, and the moment they get the law on the statute books then in some way, through some plan that will be worked out, they will come to Congress and get all the money that they want. Talk about $30,000 being sufficient to administer this law, it is absurd and preposterous. Every man who knows anything knows it is preposterous.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COX. I have not the time. With the hatcheries putting out every year upward of 4,000,000,000 fish and with State fish hatcheries all over the United States engaged in putting out fish, yet the reports show that there is a shortage of fish in the country. Why, this is preposterous. As sure as you pass this bill in less than 10 years you will be called upon for a million dollars to enforce it.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY].

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is said the purpose of this bill is to carry into effect the provisions of a treaty entered into nearly six years ago. The bill passed the Senate on Friday of last week. Whether the Committee on Foreign Relations of this House has had a meeting since receiving the bill for the purpose of giving it consideration I am not prepared to say. I do know that neither time nor opportunity has been afforded to those who are vitally interested to be heard, either in approval or disapproval of it. My district, which may be said to be the largest fresh-water fish market in the world, is deeply interested. The fishermen and the fish dealers of my district, without exception, have appealed to me by telegraph, by telephone, and in person to oppose the bill because some of the provisions of the treaty are unjust and unfair to the American fisherman. I understand that my colleagues representing districts affected by the bill have had similar appeals. I am opposed, therefore, to the hasty and inconsiderate disposition of this great matter which the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia would mean, and I beseech the Members of this House to stand with me for the capital and the labor of one of the great industries of this country.

It is urged that there has been sufficient time since the adoption of the treaty to consider its effect upon the industry from every point of view. I answer that the very fact that it has been so long since the approval of the treaty by the Senate, and that no action has been taken to put its provisions into effect in this country in all this time, supplies the best of reasons why we should not act hastily now.

The annals of Congress may not record any opposition to the provisions of the treaty; but I do know that the apparent inactivity of this country in this matter has been due to the charge made by those engaged in the industry directly to Members of Congress that the treaty, if put into effect as now proposed, would give the Canadian fisherman a decided advantage over the American fisherman. This inactivity led those engaged in the industry in this country to believe that nothing would be done to carry the provisions of the treaty into effect. Resting secure in the belief that they would not be further disturbed in their rights, they have made large investments of money and planned their operations for the future. Now, without warning and without opportunity to be heard, it is proposed by the passage of this bill to-day to destroy their investment and take from them their means of livelihood. Gentlemen, it must not be done; I beg of you not to permit it to be done.

The chairman of the committee, who made the motion under consideration, admits that the schedule is somewhat obsolete now; that there have been changes in conditions since the schedule was adopted five years ago; and that, while the schedule was satisfactory at the time of its adoption, some of its provisions are obsolete now.

He thus gives you the best of reasons why his motion should not be adopted. The regulations, so admitted to be obsolete, contained in the treaty will become fixed and fastened upon us if the bill passes.

Congress and the Parliament of Canada will be powerless to change them. They can only be changed by further treaty and further legislation following such treaty.

I should like to speak of the changed conditions to which the gentleman refers. I should like to point out to you the advantage which Canada gets over the United States by the terms of the treaty. I should like to, as I believe I can, give you much information about the propagation, preservation, and catching of our food fishes and about the different conditions in different localities, but I am reminded that under the rule I have not the time to do so.

The gentleman says that unless we act at once in this matter we will lose all control of the fisheries of these international waters. I wish to call his attention to the fact that the States bordering on the waters affected by the treaty have not been asleep. They have, without exception, legislated for the protection of food fishes and the regulation and control of fisheries within their jurisdictions, by virtue of which safeguards applicable to different conditions in different localites are provided, in which respect the regulations of the treaty utterly fail.

I stand shoulder to shoulder with the President in the keeping of our national faith in our dealings and relations with other countries. I do not believe, however, that he desires us to take any action which would result in giving to a foreigner an advantage over a citizen of the United States engaged in the same industry in international waters.

Let us be deliberate and considerate in the disposition of this matter. I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, two minutes is a pretty short time to discuss something that affects the real welfare of some of the people in my district. I have talked with fishermen in my district—not men in a combine, but simply men who are making their living out of fishing—and they tell me that if this law goes into effect and its proposed regulations go into effect that they are put out of business. They are men engaged in the catching of herring that have been referred to in the hearings, and Dr. Smith said he was satisfied that these fish were so small a species that they never attained any considerable size and could not be caught in the size of mesh prescribed here; but still we are asked to put into the law a provision that will prevent their doing any business. Now, the gentleman from Virginia says we can let this go into the law and have this commission created and they will investigate and change the regulation. I believe the commission would be very favorably inclined to grant our plea as to the size of the mesh; that they see the justice of our plea. But suppose Dr. Smith and his colleague can not agree; then they are deadlocked and my people are permanently out of business; or, on the other hand, suppose they do agree and it comes into Congress and they do not rush it through in the month of December; then, again, my people are out of business. I would like to have consideration before the passage of the law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MACDONALD].

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects a very large number of people in my district. It is absolutely inconceivable that such a bill should be passed, it seems to me, under suspension of the rules without some time for consideration. I have not any idea, I could not have any idea, of what the effect of the provisions of this bill would be without time to examine it and time to consider it, and I should like the attention of the chairman of the committee to a question——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACDONALD. Since I was delayed in asking the question of the chairman, I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia answer the question in his own time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Virginia does not need to answer if he does not desire to do so.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY].

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this bill ought not to be considered under suspension of the rules, but ought to be taken up in the regular order. It is a question that is of tremendous importance, particularly to the district represented by my colleague, Mr. PETERS of Maine, who happens not to be present just at this moment. Canning companies and others engaged in the sardine industry have telegraphed here that they want an opportunity to examine the bill and have some consultation here in regard to its provisions.

Now, there has not been any opportunity to submit the bill to them. It was reported to this House on the 27th day of February, only two or three days ago. It seems under all these circumstances, and the fact that there may be defects in the measure, that the men engaged in this great industry in Maine and in other places should be given an opportunity to look the bill over and point out defects, if any; we ought to have an opportunity to submit the measure to them for criticism before it is finally acted upon in this House. Party action is not necessary, and I hope passage of the bill will be refused at this time and taken up later when we have full information.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, we are told that if there are any defects in this treaty they will be rectified by the commission to be appointed under the bill. The treaty goes into effect on the 15th of January next year. If there are no remedies to the inequalities before that time, there will be no chance for them except by the abrogation of the treaty. Every fisherman on the American side of the Great Lakes is under the provisions of these regulations discriminated against. There ought not to be any such important legislation as this enacted under such a rule as this, with no opportunity to amend, no opportunity to consider, no opportunity whatever to give proper consideration to the vital questions involved in the bill. We do not have to act on this bill to-day. It has been before the Congress of the United States for six years, and why should it be necessary to close it up this minute under the suspension of the rules? It ought to be called up at a time when it will be subject to amendment. We ought not to give power to some one to change regulations.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not any time in which to yield. They are not satisfactory to us. We ought not to give anybody power to modify a bill that we all admit in advance is not justified.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken. There is no such admission as that.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any enactment of any law that somebody else is authorized to modify. There ought not to be any enactment of the law which is just to please a sentiment that Canada may have with respect to how the fisheries should be regulated. This bill organizes a new bureau and creates an extravagant expenditure of money that nobody can calculate. We ought to consider it upon its merits, and not upon the question of how many votes we can get under the suspension of the rules, without the right on the part of any Member on the floor of this House to offer even an amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, a good deal has been said in regard to Lake Erie and the other lakes along the border. The principal fish in those lakes is the whitefish, and during the last 15 years the whitefish in those lakes have decreased more than 80 per cent. A fish swimming around in Lake Erie, for instance, goes into five different jurisdictions, and it is absolutely impossible to protect him unless you have an international agreement of this kind.

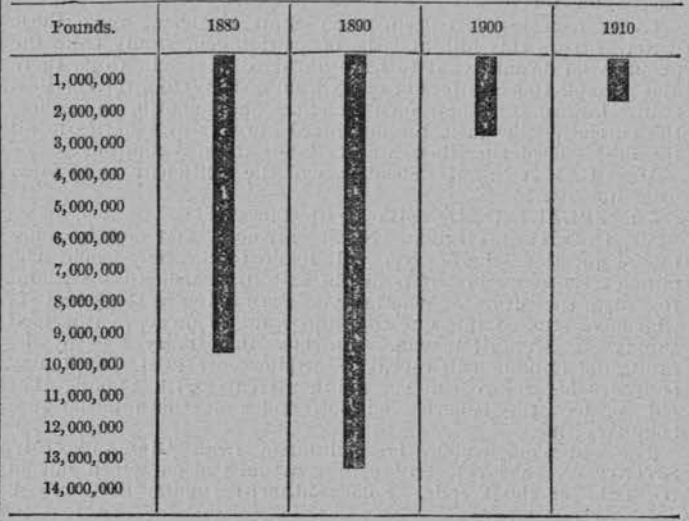
Now, these regulations are framed after the laws of the various States. The United States Commissioner of Fisheries approves and recommends them, and these regulations are drawn up according to the laws of the various States abutting upon these waters.

Now, talking about putting out these millions of little fish from the hatcheries to propagate, it is absolutely impossible to increase our supply of fish unless you have a regulation of this kind. They do not fish any more like they used to. They trap fish. They do not depend upon the fish they catch in the haul of their seines for a living, but all imaginable kinds of traps are set in the water, and it is almost impossible for the fish to ever reach the spawning ground.

It will be only a few years when the great salmon fisheries of this country will be greatly depleted. We only have a great catch of salmon every four years, and unless you allow the salmon to get to the breeding grounds you can not expect to have many during the succeeding four years.

The regulations of this agreement provide that during 48 hours of each week no fishing shall be allowed. This is a wise provision and is made in order that the fish may have time to reach spawning waters.

In answer to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], I beg to call his attention to the almost total extermination of the sturgeon in American waters. The story of the sturgeon was told me by Dr. Hugh M. Smith, the United States Commissioner of Fisheries, and it is one of the most distressing in the whole history of the American fisheries. These large, inoffensive fisheries of our seaboards, coast rivers, and interior waters were for years considered to be not only valueless, but nuisances, and whenever they became entangled in the fishermen's nets they were knocked in the head or otherwise mortally wounded and thrown back into the water.



The next chapter in the story was the awakening of the fishermen to the fact that the eggs of the sturgeons had value as caviar and that the flesh had value as food. Then followed the most reckless, senseless fishing imaginable, with the result that in a comparatively few years the best and most productive waters were depleted, and what should have been made a permanent fishery of great profit was destroyed. Even after the great value of the sturgeon began to be appreciated by everyone no adequate steps were taken by the responsible authorities or insisted on by the fishermen, and the fish-eating public remained callous.

For a long time after the failure in the fishery had begun and was apparent to everyone the immature and unmarketable fish incidentally caught in seines, gill nets, and pound nets received no protection whatever in most waters, and were ruthlessly destroyed as nuisances, the decline thus being doubly accelerated.

On the Atlantic coast the catch of the sturgeon fell from 7,000,000 pounds to less than 1,000,000 in 15 years; on the Pacific coast the same meteoric history was enacted, a catch of over 3,000,000 pounds annually in the early nineties being followed by a few hundred thousand pounds in later years of the same decade, with no improvement since that time, while on the Great Lakes the yield declined more than 90 per cent in 18 years. In the American waters of the Lake of the Woods, one of the most recent grounds for the exploitation of the sturgeon, the catch decreased over 96 per cent in 10 years, notwithstanding a more active prosecution of the fishing.

The approximate sturgeon catch of the entire country at 10-year intervals, beginning in 1880, is shown in the following diagram:

Approximate sturgeon catch of the United States.

Everywhere there is a steady downward trend in the catch. Some rivers that formerly supported a flourishing fishery are now absolutely depleted. The scarcity of the sturgeon and the demand for their flesh and eggs have run up the price to an extraordinary figure, never attained by any other fish, either in America or anywhere else. A mature female sturgeon often brings the fisherman more than a hundred and fifty dollars, and it is a poor fish that can not be sold for $20 to $30 on the rivers of the east coast.

The most serious aspect of the sturgeon fishery is that, owing to the decimation of the schools of breeding fish and to peculiarities in spawning habit it has been impossible as yet to inaugurate sturgeon culture anywhere in America. Attempts at artificial propagation have proved utter failures on the Great Lakes, Lake of the Woods, Lake Champlain, Delaware River, and other waters, and the expenditure of considerable sums of money by the Federal Government has sometimes failed to yield a single batch of eggs suitable for incubation.

Everywhere in America under existing conditions the sturgeons are doomed to commercial extinction, and it requires no prophet to foresee that in a comparatively few years sturgeons will be as scarce as the dodo.

I am glad to note that one of the regulations of this agreement provides that none of the fish in these waters shall be caught for purposes of manufacturing them into fertilizer or oil, except where such oil is for medicinal use. I particularly approve of that provision, because during this very session I introduced in this Congress a bill preventing the shipment in interstate commerce in this country of any fertilizer or oil which is composed in whole or in part of those fish which are commonly known and regarded as food fish. The food supply of this country is too limited, the meat of these fish is too good, fish are becoming daily a too important part of our diet for us to permit their use other than for purposes of human consumption. They are one of the great natural resources of this country that belong to all the people, that should be preserved as the food of all the people, and I am glad that this agreement makes this attempt to confine their use to food purposes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we are under a treaty obligation with Great Britain to enact this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; I will not. You know I have not the time, and you ought not to take my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The President has asked Congress to enact this bill in order to carry out our treaty obligations. Of course, if we undertake to protect the fisheries in these international waters from the depredations of every man who will take every minnow he can take out, it will cost the Government something, but it will be money well invested, and it is idle to talk about the appropriation exceeding the benefit that the protection of these fishes will give to this generation and to coming generations. You can not preserve this great food supply without paying for it.

Every fisheries bureau in every State bordering upon these waters favors this bill, and the opposition comes only from the people who do not want to have abridged the right to go there and plunder those waters of every kind of fish, from the smallest to the largest, for their own benefit. The scientific fishermen, the patriotic fishermen, the organized bureaus of fisheries in all the States bordering these waters favor these regulations.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; I will not. And now it comes to the question whether you will listen to the few people who plunder those waters of both big and little fish alike without regard to the future or whether you shall listen to the scientists who have studied this question and want to preserve this food supply. If we fail to enact this law, this treaty goes by default, and Canada will repeal its acquiescence in it, and it may be years before we can get another treaty with Canada that will protect the fisheries on both sides of the international boundary line.

The sturgeon, which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] has referred to, has actually been wiped out in the Lake of the Woods. Some authorities claim that only 2 per cent is left, and no one contends that over 10 per cent of what used to be there is left; and so with the whitefish in the other waters along the international boundary line. And for this reason the Republican administration that controlled this country in 1908 secured the negotiation of this treaty, and regulations were agreed upon by a commission of the two countries. They were sent to Congress and to the Canadian Parliament. Canada carried out her part of that treaty, but our Congress has failed up to this good hour to act upon it, and now we are served with notice by our northern neighbor that unless we act promptly she will withdraw her acquiescence.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. The same here, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing Senate bill 4437.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks for a division.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing this bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 105, answered "present" 8, not voting 206, as follows:

Mr. WEBB with Mr. TEMPLE.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. WOODRUFF.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] voted, but his name was called a second time by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Virginia hear him vote?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I did not hear him vote, but a number of gentlemen did, and Mr. KINKEAD himself telephoned me that he had voted "aye."

Mr. ASHBROOK. I heard him vote "aye."

SEVERAL MEMBERS. He voted.

The SPEAKER. The name of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] will be recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to object to that procedure. I do not believe a man can vote unless he is present.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He was present.

The SPEAKER. The testimony is that he did vote. Gentlemen say they heard him vote, and that then he left the hall. Of course, it has been ruled time out of mind that under those circumstances, where a Member votes on the first call and his name is called a second time and Members state that they heard him vote, his name has been recorded.

Mr. MANN. There can be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The objection of the gentleman from Minnesota is untenable. The Chair will state the practice about that. Where Members state that they heard a man vote, the Chair has seen the vote recorded time and again. Of course, it takes the same proof to establish the fact in the mind of the Speaker and the House that it takes to establish any other fact.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. What rule is that?

The SPEAKER. There is no rule about it. It is the practice of the House. It has not been a month since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rose on his side and stated that some gentleman had voted whose name was not recorded.

Mr. STEENERSON. I recollect, Mr. Speaker, that six or eight years ago—I think in the Fifty-ninth Congress—some one voted for a man who was absent, and I tried to vacate it afterwards, but was unable to do so.

The SPEAKER. In that case a bad ruling was made, whoever made it. The intention is to preserve the integrity and accuracy of the roll call, and it works both ways.

Mr. STEENERSON. It seems to me that the party who is interested ought to take the action himself.

The SPEAKER. The party who is interested, so far as this roll call is concerned, has vanished from the scene, so that he can not be heard at this time. The Chair does not know how he voted.

Mr. BROWNING. I want to state that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] voted. He stood here and voted, and I heard him.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about it. The fact is fully established.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He was informed by telephone, Mr. Speaker, that his name had been called a second time, and he wanted me to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he voted on the first call.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not dispute the fact. I simply call attention to the fact that this is not within the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not a rule; it is the practice of the House. The intention is that if a man votes, his vote shall be recorded. If some one answers for another, and the fact is ascertained, that vote ought to be vacated.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 3, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.
